One hears strangely confused comments on the political situation. Said the leading paper of Santiago: "The Cubans have reason to thank General Wood at one time and now General Crowder for the good they have done for Cuba; but yet the intervention of America is more harmful when under good men than when under those not so esteemed like Governor Magoon, for when American control is exercised under good men the Cubans are resigned to it, and lose their spirit of self-assertion and independence." One Cuban told me that the United States was responsible for the present plight of Cuba in that it had not intervened more promptly and decisively against misgovernment. He was openly in favor of Cuban annexation to the United States. Another believed that our country made a mistake in giving Cuba her independence so soon; General Wood's administration of the island should have been continued at least ten years before entrusting the Cubans with self-government.

Affairs in a Sorry State

All this indicates that affairs are in a sorry state. No one denies that the public treasury has been looted, the only difference of opinion being as to the amount that successive administrations have taken. General Gomez ruled for four years; he was liberal in dealing with his followers, but also did something for his country in the way of public improvements. General Menocal followed and for eight years, covering the period of Cuba's greatest prosperity, did practically nothing toward building roads, schools, or improving sanitation. Now comes Dr. Zayas, who in one year's time has brought the government to the verge of bankruptcy. Graft had gone on increasing, until finally it over-reached itself. May and June salaries at this writing (July 18) are unpaid, and it is estimated that nothing less than a loan of $50,000,000 will set the republic on its feet.

A foreign loan! Ay, there's the rub. It means a greater measure of American supervision, and Cuban patriotism clings to independence. They forget that they cannot have their cake and eat it too; their political leaders cannot build up their personal fortunes and help their relatives out of the public treasury, and then cry out against the loss of Cuban independence. A Havana paper quotes one of the leaders of Cuba as saying: "The financiers of North America are those who direct the policy that so deeply disturbs, disconcerts and exasperates the neighboring peoples from the Rio Grande to Panama, including the Antilles. North American financiers are the creators of that imperialism in the United States which has such fateful consequences for us."

In a few circles the feeling is growing that behind the present distress is a moral bankruptcy that is more disquieting and dangerous than any financial crisis. Here, for example, is the case of a Cuban mill owner who borrowed $4,000,000 from the National Bank of Cuba, giving a mortgage

Roped Into the Light

MISS Ella D. MacLaurin tells a story of Dr. Gillson's medical work at Hankow. A man came to him totally blind with cataracts on both eyes. The doctor operated and restored his sight. Joyfully he returned to his home 200 miles away, telling everybody he met of the healing received from the Jesus Christ man.

When he reached his own village he called together all the blind people of the place, and started with the whole sixteen of them, roped together, on the long journey back to Hankow. Having found the light he was determined to share it with his neighbors.

on his two sugar mills. After a few days, learning that the National Bank had not yet had the mortgage recorded, he went to the Royal Bank of Canada and secured $2,000,000 on the same properties. The Canadian bank promptly had the mortgage recorded, and when the National Bank came to attend to this little bit of business, it was too late. The sugar-man was arrested, but through some influence was released and allowed to flee from the country. Such transactions help to explain the failure of the National Bank. No patriotic mouthings about "Cuba libre" will cure such a situation. Nor lectures on morals. The best sellers in Cuban bookstores are the works of Orison Swett Malden and Samuel Smiles. Ambitious young men will profit from these sage counselors on thrift and self-control, but they will find here no remedy for the infection of sin. The Cuban government employs an army Y. M. C. A. secretary, and certain large sugar mills have a former Methodist missionary direct their welfare work. These are efforts in the right direction, but nothing will save Cuba except a return to God. Cuba needs God, and in no country is there greater indifference to all religion.

The people of Cuba are only nominally Roman Catholic; they show little respect for the priesthood. The apostasy from Romanism to spiritism has been general. In the midst of this darkness the evangelical churches of Cuba stand out like lighthouses to point the true course. Perhaps they are not yet as influential nor as largely attended as in Porto Rico, but they are composed of Christians as devoted as will be found anywhere in Latin America, and often rating higher in intelligence and social standing than our churches in other mission fields. In the matter of self-support and self-government our Baptist Churches in Cuba are in the vanguard of all in Latin North America. They have shown wonderful initiative in building and improving their meeting-houses, and in extending missionary work into new fields. For example, there is the field of Santa Cruz del Sur, which they have opened, and where they have built a church, providing for all of the pastor's salary, and calling on the American Baptist Home Mission Society for only half the cost of the building. This is in addition to the Baracoa district where they support six pastors; and all this carried on during the year of Cuba's greatest financial distress. In the recent bank failures the Baracoa churches lost $700, the Manzanilla church $665, and the Santa Cruz church $240, of funds collected for improvement and enlargement of their buildings.

A Strong Baptist College

In church edifices Cuba is not as well-equipped as Porto Rico. Some important towns have small frame chapels of poor construction, unworthy of our denomination. But Cuba has what no other of our Latin fields has, a strong Baptist college of recognized standing, from which have gone forth into our churches many intelligent well-trained members. The quickest way to attain a self-supporting, self-propagating native church is to provide for the Christian education of the leaders. It is costly at the beginning, but it is the most economical method in the long run. The greatest problem before Cuban Baptists is that of ministerial supply to meet a growing field. Los Colegios Internacionales at Cristo must be enlarged to provide for more young people.

The immediate object of my visit was to give a course of lectures at the annual summer institute for pastors and teachers of all the evangelical denominations. In Cuba these comprise the Northern and Southern Baptists, Northern Presbyterians, Southern Methodists, Friends, and Episcopalians. Of these the Southern Baptists, Southern Methodists and Episcopalians decline official participation in interdenominational enterprises. The summer institute consequently was composed only of the workers from Presbyterian, Northern Baptist and Friends churches, with one Methodist missionary as a welcome visitor. In former years the institute had met at Sancti Spiritus with the Presbyterians as hosts. For two successive summers Prof. R. M. Vaughan, of Newton Seminary, had been the special lecturer there. This year the institute was held in Cristo with the Baptists as hosts. The attendance was 101 pastors and teachers, —a number larger than on previous occasions. The members of this year's institute were so well pleased with the climate, scenery and arrangements for their comfort at Cristo on the grounds of our college, that they voted unanimously to return next summer.

Young Folks

(See also under Missions)

The Macmillan Company have originated a "Juvenile Ladder Library" as a means of aiding parents in the choice of books suited to the period of the child. Their Ladder Catalog and "Hints to Parents" will be sent on request (New York, Boston, Chicago or San Francisco.)

Booth Tarkington, in his latest portrayal of the glories of youth, "Gentle Julia", phonetically transcribes the song which the ardent young Mr. Clairdyce sang at Julia's party, the title being "The Sunshine of Your Smile":

"The-urra-face that holds soswee tasmille for me.

Fiction

"The Bridge", a beautiful and powerful story of the Great Lakes, by Miss Marjorie MacKinnon, is reviewed in the leading editorial of this week. The book is published by the Century Co., $1.75.

"The House of Adventure" by Warwick Deering is a new novel of reconstruction days in France just issued by Macmillan's, ($2.00). An English soldier repairs a ruined inn in Beaucourt and becomes the leader of the community in the rebuilding of their town. The publishers state that the book "emphasizes all that is fine and permanently beautiful in human nature."

Bible Study

"A Harmony of the Gospels" by Prof. A. T. Robertson, is a new revision and enlargement of the work of the late Dr. Broadus, whose successor, Dr. Robertson, is at the Louisville Seminary, Doran, $2.50.

Dr. R. A. Torrey, of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, has a book from the Doran press ($1.50), "Is the Bible the Inerrant Word of God?" It deals with three questions: the inerrancy of the Bible, the virgin birth of Jesus, and his resurrection from the grave.

"A Literary Guide to the Bible" by Laura H. Wild, professor of biblical literature at Mount Holyoke College, is "a much-needed text book on the literary values of the sacred scriptures," suited to the needs of college students and Christian culture classes. Doran, $2.00.

Religious Education

Three Biblical dramas are ready in the Drama League series. They are:

"Judas Iscariot", by Charlotte Gleason (50c).

"The Sin of Ahab", by Anna Jane Harnwell (50c).

"Children of Israel" (the Exodus story) by Tracy D. Mygatt (75c).

"Motives and Expression in Religious Education", by Charles S. Ikenberry, "covers the whole field of expressional activities in religious education." The author has been for twenty years on the faculty of Daleville College (Church of the Brethren). He wrote his Master's Thesis for Boston University on the daily vacation Bible schools. The book here reviewed is illustrated with one hundred pictures and designs, and its contents include worship, singing, hand work, dramatization, and social service. Doran, $2.00.

Missionary Stories

"India Inklings", a book of missionary stories for little people, is by Miss Margaret Applegarth, the editor of the Chimney Corner in THE BAPTIST. Doran, $1.50.

"Dramatized Missionary Stories", by Mary M. Russell, is a sequel to her "Dramatized Bible Stories". This book provides material for the presentation of the missionary story and appeal in dramatic form suited to the capacity and equipment of the young people of the average church or society. Doran, $1.00.

"Back to the Long Grass", Dan Crawford, the man who revealed the missionary's true philosophy of life when he coined the phrase, "Thinking Black", gives us his picture of his great predecessor in Central African missionary service, David Livingstone. "To enrich the library which has gathered round Livingstone there comes this book, which is Livingstone." The story not only records the life of its subject, but also reveals the life of its author. Fully illustrated. Doran, $3.00.

"Wonders of Missions" by Mrs. Caroline Atwater Mason, is among the indispensable books for young folks. Amos R. Wells, editor of the Christian Endeavor World, writes to Mrs. Mason as follows concerning it. "It is the best book of the kind I have ever read, and I have read many of them. It is fascinating in its style and scholarly in its treatment. I think you are particularly happy in the way you introduce the drama now and then. The missionary stories are all essentially dramatic, and I wonder that the dramatists have made so little use of them." This is a book which ought to go the rounds of every girls' class and reading circle in the church; of every Boy Scout or boys' club; and of every young people's society. Doran, $2.00.

Devotional Literature

"The Prayer that Teaches to Pray", by Dr. Marcus Dods (new edition). "The book has made a permanent place for itself in the literature of prayer." Doran, $1.25.

"The Way of the Cross", by J. Gregory Mantle, of the Christian Alliance Training School (Nyack, N. J.), is highly commended by Dr. F. B. Meyer, who says, "I have read this book twice over with the deepest interest and profit." Doran: sixth edition, enlarged, $1.50.

"Concerning the Soul", by Prof. J. A. Robertson of Aberdeen, is a book to delight the heart of the preacher. It is a connected series of scholarly and devout studies of the human soul and its Christian experiences. This book ministers to faith and stimulates thought. Pilgrim Press, $2.25.

"Classics of the Soul's Quest", by R. E. Welsh, is a new and careful study of the great masterpieces of devotion in Christian literature. Several of the classics referred to in Mr. Dahlby's article in THE BAPTIST of last week, are included in this notable work. Lovers of Bunyan, Rutherford, and Law, will want the book. Doran, $1.75.

Kingdom-Building Books

"Psychology and the Christian Life", by Rev. T. W. Pym, head of Cambridge House. "A pioneer book in the art of applying the new psychological methods in Christian life." This book has been favorably received in England. Doran, $1.50.

"Progress in Religion to the Christian Era", by Prof. T. R. Glover, (The Wilde Lectures, Lowell Institute, 1922) deals with a period and with material wherein Prof. Glover is undisputed master, namely the history and religion of the Graeco-Roman world. Doran, $2.00.

"How to Make the Church Go", is "a complete handbook of tested and up-to-date methods of operating a church and administering a parish", based on the application to church work of "the psychological principles which have proved so helpful in the business field". The author, Rev. Wm. H. Leach, is a Presbyterian minister of Buffalo, N. Y. Doran, $1.50.

Revell announces several new books by famous English preachers for fall publication. J. D. Jones of Bournemouth has a study of the Twenty-third Psalm, "The King of Love". Frederic C. Spurr, one of the foremost Baptist preachers of Great Britain, offers a series of addresses under the title, "The Master Key." Sidney M. Berry, of Carr's Lane, Birmingham, who has recently declined a call to succeed Dr. Jowett at Westminster Chapel, is the author of "The Crucible of Experience", a series of sermons.

Politics, Social Science, Economics

"The New Constitutions of Europe", by two Columbia professors, H. L. McBain and Lindsay Rogers, contains an analysis of the governmental changes in Europe resulting from the war. Doubleday, Page and Co.

"From Isolation to Leadership", by Prof. John Latane of Johns Hopkins University, revised and enlarged edition, gives a history of American foreign policy from Washington to the Versailles Treaty. Doubleday, Page and Co.

"Opiate Addiction: Its Handling and Treatment", by Edward H. Williams. A defense of the Harrison anti-narcotic law, a discussion of its inadequacies, and suggestions as to the more complete control of traffic in narcotics and care of addicts. A worth-while book for the social service shelf in the library, private or public. Macmillan Co. $1.50.

William L. Huggins, author of the Kansas Industrial Act and presiding judge of the Court of Industrial Relations set up by that act, has written a book, "Labor and Democracy", analyzing the Kansas Industrial Law, and surveying the two years' administration of the law since its enactment. Macmillan, $1.25.

"Property: Its Rights and Duties", by a group of English writers, deals with "the historical evolution of property, the philosophical and theological background, the effect on personality and the legal aspect." Prof. Richard T. Ely says of it: "This is an exceptionally able and scholarly work."

The New World Movement

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 30, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

The Response to Indianapolis

THE board of the East Washington and North Idaho Convention adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That the program which was adopted at Indianapolis be adopted by our convention board and that we recommend it to all our churches, and that this program be printed in the convention bulletin.

"2. That this convention fix as its financial goal 100 per cent of all New World Movement pledges falling due this year."

The Arizona Convention Board accepted the revised budget adopted at Indianapolis, on behalf of the common interest, but faces very serious handicap with the necessary reduction.

The executive committee of the Massachusetts Convention voted to accept in principle the action taken, reducing all budgets 25 per cent from last year.

The Norwegian Baptist Conference of America met at Chicago, June 22-26. The following resolutions were adopted unanimously:

"It is with gratitude to God that we call the attention of the churches to the complete equality and fairness accorded to the Norwegian churches by our national missionary organizations and the Board of Promotion in regard to missionary money as it pertains to allotments, credits and appropriations affecting us.

"We therefore most earnestly advise our churches and individual members to support the program for world evangelization and uplift adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention. We appreciate the noble and sacrificial efforts manifested toward us by our national missionary organizations and we trust that present relationships may be maintained and grow stronger."

The Montana Convention voted confidence in the Northern Baptist Convention leaders and in the general policies pursued and also went on record as follows:

"Furthermore, we give our approval of the action of the Northern Baptist Convention in retaining for us our organ of publicity and instruction, THE BAPTIST, and also Missions, and we recommend these periodicals to our state.

"We further approve the action of the Northern Baptist Convention taken at Indianapolis making the New Testament alone our basis of faith."

On Record

At no previous convention in our knowledge has the denomination expressed so deliberately and decisively its determination to support our missionary boards and program, and to move forward along the lines already marked out in the New World Movement. * * * *

It resolutely set itself against radical changes in leaders or program. The general director, Dr. Aitchison, and his associates in service, can go forward with assurance that the denomination is back of and with them. * * * *

The one point in which the convention failed, in our judgment, was in an adequate realization of the very critical situation in which the missionary societies find themselves by reason of the heavy accumulated deficits, for which the budgets for the current year cannot make provision. The facts were brought clearly before the General Board of Promotion, but not sufficiently impressed upon the whole body of delegates. * * * *—HOWARD B. GROSE in Missions.

Warming Up

WE are informed, by those who affect such mundane interests as ball games, that before the pitcher begins to pitch the ball to be batted, he is allowed by the rules to throw five balls at the catcher. This, we believe, is called "warming up".

Many churches do not begin the great game of the season's work until early September, perhaps later still. We cannot but believe, however, that in addition to the churches which keep going full blast through the summer, there are many whose leaders will spend August in quiet pondering and planning and praying for the work ahead.

The promotional program adopted at Indianapolis and recommended to the churches for the year ending April 30, 1923, gives large place to daily prayer for specific interests and their personal exponents. We are setting out in this page the calendar for the week ending August 13, and suggest that in our personal devotions and in our church worship we begin to warm up to the cycle of prayer which is proposed for use month by month. O that we may become expert in the art of intercession concerning those for whom our Lord laid down his life!

A Missionary's Farewell Letter

(FROM A MISSIONARY OF OUR FOREIGN SOCIETY)

AS I set my eyes again toward the Far East for another term of service in the name of Christ, I bid you farewell. Although I am happy to return to China, for the bonds that bind me to that far-off, needy land are as the will of God, nevertheless, I go with mingled eagerness and hesitation.

You are aware that certain of the Chinese brethren in Ningpo, men blessed of God in material wealth, have been led by his unacknowledged will to offer to share with us the burden of providing those material means, brick and mortar, stone and wood, that are one of the confessed means of building up his children in knowledge and service. They have assumed the responsibility of providing one-half the amount needed for the erection of our new mission high school for boys in Ningpo.

Unfortunately this unselfish challenge coming out of the Orient to our churches in America has not met with acceptance in so far as it has been made known. It therefore devolves upon me when I return to China to meet these men face to face and confess to them the inability of our hosts of Baptists in America to measure up to their spirit of ready generosity.

You may appreciate then in some measure the hesitation with which I shall approach them. I would that out of your funded wisdom you could assign adequate and honorable causes for our failure to meet their offer. I shall explain to them that a severe depression in business depleted the financial strength of our people. But how, may I ask, shall I have the courage also to state that to the inability of some has been added the disaffection of others, that when it is the duty of all to make known to all the good news of the gospel of Christ our people are being divided and weakened by theological differences?

Brethren, after having soon hereafter separated myself from my fellow-Christians at home by the wide expanse of the seas, I pray that if the humility in Christ, which so keeps a missionary to his course, should in the heat of the great battle over there give place to intervals of weakness and resentment against the dissension in the homeland, and this in turn to a decision not to press the battle so hotly against the ancient enemy, for fear of an uncertain and divided support; you will forgive this failure of the flesh, remembering only the complete willingness of the spirit. May the God of peace be with you.

"Cast Down, Yet Not Destroyed"

A Chicago church that will not sound the retreat.

OPTIMISM, courage, energy, are words essential for any analysis of the character of Johnston Myers, twenty-seven years pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church of Chicago, and now facing a new and staggering task which, he profoundly believes, God has laid on him.

Three days after Easter a terrific storm sent the lofty spire of the old edifice—a landmark in Chicago—crashing through the roof. It carried down the entire front elevation and transformed the beautiful auditorium into a ruin as pathetic as the ruins of devastated France.

Pastor Myers, who has served the church in this field for twenty-seven years, has witnessed and shared in revolutionary changes in the community and in the life and program of the church. When he came the movement had already set in which transformed the neighborhood from a residence district to a boarding-house region. The program of the church was adjusted to meet that development, which was followed by another change, from a boarding-house district to a business district, largely of automobile and automobile accessories concerns. Another adjustment was made in turn, and close relations established with these people, many of whom are good friends and supporting contributors of Immanuel. Within ten hours after the storm, gifts amounting to $3,000 had come in from these business neighbors, with the encouraging word, "Don't leave; we need you."

Six important churches formerly located in the district have retreated one by one because of their incapacity to adjust themselves to the sweeping changes in the community. Immanuel remains, now almost alone, resolved to stay and care for the souls and for the bodies of the 25,000 white people who live in the area directly served by the church. One Presbyterian church and one Roman Catholic church are still holding services in this district.

One hundred thousand people pass the doors of Immanuel every day. To all who are in need, regardless of creed or condition, Immanuel offers help and fellowship and encouragement. Last winter the church fed 1,000 hungry people daily. Before the storm tore away the front of the building, inviting glass windows bore the kindly assurances, "We worship, we heal, we clothe, we feed, we find employment for those in need"; "Your friends are inside, come in." Eighteen salaried workers, including missionaries, cooks, nurses, employment secretaries, and pastors, fulfilled these ambitious promises last year, supported by a total budget of $60,000. During that period they averaged thirty-five public services every week for worship, instruction, and entertainment. They gave away 75,000 meals. They provided medical aid, clothing and baskets of food for 25,000 people. They found employment or gave friendly advice for the relief of 10,000 men and women. "We did need a practical building," said Dr. Myers; "the disaster made it a necessity. By remodeling the old structure, and building on the lot on the south, we will have wonderful facilities for our own work and also thirty-five offices for rent. We will retain all the lower part of the church, including the front offices, for our religious and benevolent work. The net rental on the offices will be about $25,000 per year, and part of this we expect to apply to the annual reduction of our debt on the new building, using the balance to help out on our operating budget."

Plans have been adopted and the work of actual building begun. The total cost of the enterprise will be $225,000. The church had given $10,000 at the Easter service, for the current expenses of the year, and three days later saw their building wrecked. Within a week $15,000 had been subscribed, practically without special solicitation, toward reconstruction. The total amount pledged has now reached $60,000, and Dr. Myers believes that God will provide what is needed to make possible the completion of the new building. The spirit of sacrifice has possessed the people of the church. "If you are not making any sacrifices for Immanuel now," said the pastor one Sunday morning, "you are not exactly in our company." The builders, though not members of Immanuel, have said, "If we make a penny, it will all go back to the church."

Sunday, August 6, has been appointed as the day when the people will again try to bring up their resources to where the building enterprise may be justified by visible assets. One hundred thousand dollars is needed in cash and pledges, and Dr. Myers has abandoned his vacation plans and is devoting himself with dauntless courage and faith to the securing of this amount if possible.

Although the work proposed has for its aim "to help people irrespective of creed or condition," Dr. Myers is deeply concerned for the continuance and loyalty of the Immanuel Church as a church in fellowship with the denomination with which it has been so prominently identified. "I am quite sure," he said, "that the church would be willing to place the property in the hands of trustees appointed by the denomination. The cost of the new building will be $225,000. We can only finish this task if Baptists are interested enough to help us. If they will not interest themselves quickly in this enterprise, the building and the location will be lost to the denomination. Are Baptists willing to say that we have not the vitality or strength to hold a single downtown location in Chicago?"

The new building will contain, in addition to the thirty-five offices, a splendid audience room, four halls, and a dining room. There will be first-class equipment for religious, patriotic and benevolent work. If ever or whenever Chicago is chosen as the headquarters for the Northern Baptist Convention, says Dr. Myers, an ideal provision for offices will be ready at hand, centrally located and adequate for all demands.

The Open Forum

THINKS TITHERS MORE SPIRITUALLY MINDED

In the Open Forum for July 1, a contributor, dealing with "The Spiritual Benefits of Tithing," after alluding to Jews, Mormons, etc., concludes thus: "If we are seeking the deeper things of the spirit, if our object is a genuine spirituality, it at least behooves us to consider carefully these historical examples of the results of tithing and go slowly. Getting $20,000,000 per year for our promotion work would indeed be a poor exchange for losing our denominational soul."

Were tithers to hold that there is only one thing that will produce spirituality and that this one thing is tithing, then the writer's illustrations would be very much to the point. Since, however, no one maintains that, our brother appears to have been belaboring a man of straw.

Spirituality is the resultant of five factors: (1) The influences of the Spirit in regeneration and afterward. (2) Reverent attention to the Word of God. This involves ordering conduct in the light of its precepts, which in turn means personal and social evangelism. (3) Prayer and praise. (4) Fellowship with believers—what our fathers termed attendance on the means of grace. (5) Economic accountability to God. The tithe is the Lord's. That less is required cannot be maintained; if more, why object to calling attention to the deficiency, not to say delinquency?

Without regeneration there can be no spirituality; reverent attention to the word of God means submission of the mind; prayer and praise mean the subjection of the heart, the seat of the affections; fellowship with believers means consecration of the time; and the payment to the Lord of his tenth means the submission of the physical to the will of God, for every honest dollar drips with the blood and sweat of the toiler who earned it.

Touch a man's pocketbook and you touch his vitals. When a man makes this surrender and gets right with God at this point, his life tends to swing speedily into line with God in other relationships. It is precisely because of its markedly spiritual reflex influence on the soul that no church should cease its propaganda till every member on its roster is a tither. Tithing is often revolutionary in the life. It is a sacrament to the soul and as much more meaningful than a prayer meeting as the deed is more meaningful than the words that describe it.

The whole church has lost out and got into the bog through undertaking to do what the Almighty never undertook to do, namely, to finance his business on offerings. God is the most methodical being in the world. When he undertook to establish organized religion in the earth he knew that two things would be required—men and money; and so he set apart a whole tribe, the tribe of Levi, and a tenth of the national revenue for the support of their office. The blight fell in soul and circumstances when the nation laid its itching palm on that separated portion concerning which it is written that it is "holy unto Jehovah."

Were every believer to bring God's tenth into his storehouse the greatest revival the world has ever known would probably follow, and in thirty years the Task, for the accomplishment of which the Master has been waiting in vain for eighteen centuries, would be completed. Were every Baptist but to do that simple thing the denomination would find that instead of having "lost its denominational soul" it had in some strange way really found it. The writer, as a tithing evangelist, has enrolled thousands of tithers and talked with scores of pastors who have had opportunity to observe the influence of this practice on the life. Their testimony invariably is that tithers are the most spiritually minded people in their congregations.

But of course, tithing alone will not produce a deep spirituality any more than prayer alone, or church attendance alone, or Bible reading alone, or ceaseless activity alone, or even regeneration alone will produce it. That is the resultant of the whole five factors, human and divine.

"THE SMALL AND LARGE CHURCH"

Brother H. Bainbridge of Pittsburgh, Pa., in THE BAPTIST of July 1, says a good word for the small church in per capita giving; but I wonder if he doesn't overlook the word "efficiency" in the issue for March 11 (page 177)?

True, the five smaller churches combined gave practically the same amount as the one larger church; but the smaller churches used a major portion for maintenance, and only $2.36 per capita for extension, while the larger church, using a smaller amount for maintenance, contributed a larger amount, $8.15 per capita, for extension, which is one test of efficiency.

In commercial terms, the profits of the five smaller churches were $1,913.11, and of the larger church, $7,067.78. The larger church had a greater rate of increase in membership also.

However, the smaller church may be doing just as important or more important work than the larger church. A smaller church may raise up for the kingdom a Spurgeon or a Moody, a Judson or a St. John, a Francis or an Aitchison.

The item of March 11, however, showed that with respect to increase in membership and gifts to the New World Movement, the larger church proved more efficient than the five smaller churches.

It is my conviction that the five smaller churches could have done just as well for the New World Movement as the one larger church, and the larger church could have done better. I happen to know something of the personnel and of the ability of those six churches.

THE FINANCIAL ELEMENT IN THE GREAT COMMISSION

It may not appear on the surface that Jesus made provision in the Great Commission for the practical maintenance of its operations, but may it not be that through the centuries we have failed to read the Commission in its entirety? I put this in the form of a question, as the suggestion may seem at first to be presumptuous and even irreverent; but, on the other hand, is it not reasonable to suppose that the "finished work" of Jesus made ample provision for every practical need? I have in mind a statement of Jesus made on a separate occasion and which does not follow the commission in chronological order, but which seems to possess a logical order and is so closely allied to the language and import of the Great Commission that we may safely read it as an important and imperative part thereof. Here is Matthews' record of the Commission (28:18-20): "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world"; followed by the statement alluded to (Mark 14:9), "Verily I say unto you, Whosoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she (Mary) hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." Now, while it is true that this statement makes no mention of money, yet it is true that a money value was placed on Mary's offering, and that the incident through all the ages has furnished a key that has unlocked vast treasures that have been poured into the treasuries of our missionary societies, and, inasmuch as the occasional use of this incident has been so fruitful in sacrifice, how much more fruitful would it have been, and still would be, if it were given all the potentiality of the Great Commission. The recital of this story is not left optional with Jesus' disciples. The word "shall" implies a positive command, and the words "whosoever" and "throughout the world" leave no doubt as to the universal and continuous use of the story as a potent factor in the dissemination of the gospel.

The Chimney Corner

Smuggled in Bales of Cloth

How We Got Our English Bible

THE merchandise packers chuckled and stood around with their hands in their pockets looking with thorough delight at the bales of cloth they had just sewed up. One packer lifted a bale appraisingly. "Think she weighs about the same as an ordinary bale of cloth, don't you, Hans?" he whispered.

"Sh! Sh! Sh!" sounded a suppressed chorus of whispers from the other packers, but each one of them "hefted" a bale experimentally, and then chuckled.

"The cardinal's got a surprise coming!" one of them laughed in a stage whisper.

"So has that fat old King Henry the Eighth! Thought he could keep these things out of England, did he? Well, he'll see! He'll see! Come on, Wilhelm, heave up your end, old boy—the boat crosses the channel at midnight, and we'd better get these on board at once."

All of which happened way back in the year 1525 in Germany, while William Tyndale was pacing the floor of his room. An exile from England for several years, he could not help reviewing those years as he waited in suspense to hear about certain bales of cloth.

Looking back over his life, he seemed to see himself four years earlier as the young tutor in a certain old English manor house in Gloucestershire. He saw an evening when lordly knights and fair ladies and a clergyman or two sat down to dinner in the hall of that same manor house, himself among the company. He recalled how he and one of the clergymen had fallen into a heated religious dispute, and how the priest kept quoting the pope in Rome to prove his points, while he, a mere tutor, kept quoting God's words as written in the Bible. Down in his heart he supposed the priest knew so little Latin that he was actually ignorant of what the Bible did say, and was entirely contented with his ignorance since the pope did not encourage clergymen to read or quote the Bible.

But William Tyndale recalled how he cried across the festal board these startling words: "I defy the pope and all his laws; and if God spare my life, ere many years I will cause a boy who drives the plough to know more of the Scriptures than thou dost."

The lordly knights muttered in their beards, and the fair ladies looked ready to swoon according to the approved and ladylike fashion 400 years ago, but the clergymen scowled contemptuously. What? would this outrageous upstart of a tutor dare to translate the Bible into English so that any commonest farmer's boy might read it? Ah, well, he simply wouldn't be allowed to do it! Let him try!

But far from giving up his burning desire William Tyndale bade farewell to the master of the manor house where he had been tutor. His very words have come down to us through these 400 intervening years: "Sir," he said, "I perceive that I shall not be allowed to tarry here long, neither shall you be able, though you would to keep me out of the hands of the clergy, and also what displeasure might grow to you by keeping me God knoweth, for the which I should be right sorry!"

So off he went to London, not as monstrous a city in the year 1525 as it is now, but still impressive enough to a poor country tutor full of a big plan with few to agree with him.

One great man did sympathize, Sir Geoffrey Monmouth by name, in whose palace William Tyndale remembered spending six months, but at the end of that time he found himself writing to a friend: "Not only is there no room in my Lord of London's palace to translate the New Testament, but also there is no room to do it in all of England, as experience doth now openly prove."

So he recalled how he became a self-appointed exile, sailing across the choppy English Channel to Germany to settle in the city of Hamburg, which was near enough the town of Wittenberg for him to meet that famous man, Martin Luther, who also burned with the same kind of religious indignation against the pope, and who had already started a new division of Christians known as Protestants.

William Tyndale next recalled his busy years of seclusion as he translated the New Testament into the English language, —how lovingly and fervently he had pondered over every word, seeking to give it the very meaning that the original writer had had in mind. He strove to mingle tenderness and majesty, that every Englishman might see for himself the glowing beauty of holiness. Finally, when his task was done, he remembered thanking God for that wonderful new invention, the printing-press, which Johann Gutenberg had completed providentially in time for the printing of his, Tyndale's, Bible. He saw himself journeying to the city of Cologne, where there were a number of men skilled in this new art of printing. He remembered his thrill of joy as he heard the presses at work printing his Bibles. Then, in the midst of joy, came a new discouragement, for somehow news of this secret printing contract had reached certain important Catholics in the city, who instantly persuaded the senate of Cologne to pass an edict ordering the printers to stop printing such heretical books as Bibles instantly. But William Tyndale heard of this edict; hastily he packed the pile of sheets already printed and fled from the city, boarding a vessel which would take him along the river Rhine to the city of Worms, where there were also good printers, who eventually printed 6,000 copies of his New Testaments in English.

They were ready at last! Ready at last! How many times those words must have sung themselves through his whole being. But being ready was only half his problem—somehow they must be taken into England with utmost secrecy, and sold with equal secrecy, for full well

The Sorry Hostess

By EDGAR A. GUEST

SHE said she was sorry the weather was bad

*The night that she asked us to dine;
And she really appeared inexpressibly sad
Because she had hoped 'twould be fine.*

She was sorry to hear that my wife had a cold.

*And she almost shed tears over that.
And how sorry she was, she most feelingly told.*

That the steam wasn't on in the flat.

She was sorry she hadn't asked others to come.

*She might just as well have had eight;
She said she was downcast and terribly glum*

Because her dear husband was late.

She apologized then for the home she was in,

*For the state of the rugs and the chairs,
For the children who made such a horrible din.*

And then for the squeak in the stairs.

*When dinner began she apologized twice
For the olives because they were small;
She was certain the celery, too, wasn't nice.*

And the soup didn't suit her at all.

She was sorry she couldn't get whitefish instead

*Of the trout that the fishmonger sent,
But she hoped that we'd manage somehow to be fed.*

Though her dinner was not what she meant.

She spoke her regrets for the salad, and then

*Explained she was really much hurt,
And begged both our pardons again and again*

For serving a skimpy dessert.

*She was sorry for this and sorry for that,
Though there really was nothing to blame.
But I thought to myself as I put on my hat,*

Perhaps she is sorry we came.

he knew what was happening in the palace of the king and among the bishops. He could almost see Henry the Eighth with his great fat face and his little piggy eyes, clad in velvets and silks, fretting and fuming, thumping his pudgy fists on his arm-chair as he shouted: "We will not allow this upstart of a Tyndale to get his foolish Bibles into England!"

Tyndale could imagine how the king's inseparable adviser, Cardinal Wolsey, would answer soothingly: "Your majesty may be assured that not a clergyman in all England will permit his congregation to read this heretic's translation. Your majesty will remember how the pope does not encourage Bible reading. Moreover, sire, this man can never hope to get his Bibles into England—we are having every port watched and every boat searched. Also our clergymen have passed the news around so that every man, woman, and child in all England knows that the books are considered contraband, and that a person owning a copy will be promptly imprisoned and fined!"

"Good! Good!" chuckled the portly monarch in high glee, and considered the matter settled.

But little did he know what William Tyndale knew about the contents of certain bales of cloth which English merchants were shipping from Germany into England. Bales of cloth and sacks of flour were very welcome in England, and the men who were watching the ports and searching all boats never made a single inquiry about those bales and sacks. "Heave 'em on shore, my lads; England is hungry and cold—we need those bales and sacks."

And, curiously enough, all up and down the length and breadth of England there were people of all classes and ages and ranks who were actually cold and hungry for righteousness, for a knowledge of God. They could not read Latin to find out from their Latin Bibles what God's message was, so they were waiting with vast impatience for the arrival of William Tyndale's translation, that they might read, in their own language, what God required of men. Secretly those bales of cloth and sacks of flour were ripped open; secretly the books inside them were given out in lots of a dozen at a time to agents willing to risk their lives in selling them. So that even while King Henry the Eighth was congratulating himself over the cleverness of the cardinal and his bishops in keeping Bibles out of England, copies were going silent rounds, and men, women, and children began reading with deep interest—then looked at their worldly bishops and their selfish priests with astonishment. How vastly different these greedy men were from the simplicity and tenderness that shone from Jesus Christ.

But of course you can see for yourself that this sort of thing could not be going on without the news reaching the king and cardinal and the bishops. Somehow or other Tyndale's Bibles had actually entered England, and they heard that men would pay as high as forty pounds ($200) for a copy; indeed, one clergyman wrote that a poor farmer with no ready money had actually given a whole load of hay for a few chapters of St. Paul's epistles! Also, an astonishing number of parishioners were sitting up all night to read their new Bibles.

"Alas! Alas!" groaned those high in authority, and tried to stamp out the dreaded book by making horrible threats of fines and imprisonment, which were cruelly carried out. Several merchants, guilty of selling Bibles, were not only heavily fined but were made a public laughing-stock by being forced to ride on horseback through the streets, with their faces to their horses' tails, their cloaks hung round with copies of New Testaments. Great bonfires were held in every city, the clergymen forcing their parishioners to bring their forbidden Bibles and burn them. And the Bishop of London, thinking himself the acme of wisdom, sent over to Germany and bought up all of Tyndale's available Bibles. Bringing them to Paul's Cross in London the Bishop had these Bibles burned in one of the most mammoth bonfires imaginable.

But Tyndale, that exile in Germany, was rejoicing. "Ah, he is giving the Bible the best kind of advertising," he would say to his friends, "for the whole world will cry out against such a burning; and, moreover, in buying Bibles for such a big sum he has furnished me money to print new and better Testaments to satisfy the hunger and the curiosity of men in England."

Which was absolutely true. At every public burning, more curious did the witnesses become to read the Bible for themselves. The spice of danger and the tang of fear only added to their interest. And the more they read, the more clearly could they see that Catholic clergymen were surely condemning it because it contrasted poorly with their lives of worldly greed.

There is little time left to tell how William Tyndale also translated the Old Testament, how copies of it were smuggled into England, how the hearts of men were touched and awakened to a genuine religion, and how Henry the Eighth had such a falling out with the pope that for purely selfish reasons he became a Protestant, and made all England change its point of view about the pope. There was no religious change of heart in all this, but at

WILL there really be a morning?
Is there such a thing as day?
Could I see it from the mountains
If I were as tall as they?
Has it feet like water-lilies?
Has it feathers like a bird?
Is it brought from famous countries
Of which I've never heard?
Oh, some scholar, oh, some sailor,
Oh, some wise man from the skies,
Please to tell a little pilgrim
Where the place called morning lies.

The Perfect Nurse

By NELS McNAUGHTON

TAKE an oceanful of energy,
A tablespoonful of guile;
About a quart of innocence,
A little less of vile;
A pinch or two of naivete,
And a touch or so of verve;
A hamperful of courage,
And just twice as much of nerve;
A large amount of sweetness,
And a sprinkling of deceit;
And as much of human frailty
As will make both ends just meet;
A brookletful of passion,
And a riverful of love;
The wisdom of a serpent,
And the weakness of a dove;
Take a good big chunk of thoughtfulness.
The same amount of care;
And as large a sense of humor
As the doctor says you dare;
A tiny bit of cussedness,
A great deal more of spice,
And just enough of goodness
So as not to be too nice;
Now mix these all together,
For better or for worse;
Take a bucketful at bedtime
And you'll be a perfect nurse.

FOLLOWING AND SETTING GOOD EXAMPLES

II Chron. 24:15-19; 26:3-5

"Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign. . . . and he did that which was right in the eyes of Jehovah. . . . and he set himself to seek God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the vision of God; and as long as he sought Jehovah, God made him to prosper."

"Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah and made obeisance to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them. And they forsook the house of Jehovah, the God of their fathers, and served the Asherim and the idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their guiltiness."

The first passage is the story of a man who sought God and lived a useful life. The second briefly relates the tragedy of one who sought other counsel and associates than Jehovah, and by reason of his actions brought the wrath of God upon the people.

It is not necessary to tarry long among the characters of the Old Testament, or even among those of the New Testament, except as a basis for the lesson.

1. Following good examples a difficult business. We learn this every day anew in our experience. The tendency of human nature is to imitate that which is not good. This seems to be the line of least resistance, and the fellow with little will power goes the way of the crowd.

The old self constantly asserts itself—old habits, old desires, old customs, old traditions, old sins. How they return to make life miserable for us at times! If we are to follow good examples, the process must begin with youth and early youth. Great avenues in the right direction must be wrought in the brain; a constant reserve of will power must be built up; a great deal of Bible study and prayer must form part of the everyday life of the individual, and he must be constantly on guard. Even the best of folks are side-tracked at times. Our greatest example of good is the Master himself.

"Where he leads me I will follow."

2. Setting good examples the duty of every Christian. A practical demonstration of the power of God over human lives, is just what the outside world is looking for, and just what our closest associates are demanding of us each day. No man lives to himself. One life touches another life, and that life another, and so on.

Are you a stumbling block to some one? Does your life always truly represent your Lord? Are those nearest to you ready to follow your example? "By their fruits ye shall know them" is the test of discipleship. Is the fruit faulty or worm-eaten?

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" is a modern injunction to young people of today. If we have the mind of Christ, we need not fear for our examples.

*Just to do his will,
Just abide with him still,
Just to do what he wants me to,
Just to be what he wants me to be."*

Convention Impressions

The convention has opened my eyes to the needs of the world.—C. J. Godbaw.

I consider that this convention is the greatest ever held. It has been very helpful and inspiring.—Harold Whitman.

Everything could be enjoyed.—Rev. Emil Mueller.

This wonderful gathering of Christian young people has inspired me to greater service to God and mankind.—Anna Holland.

The young people of America are moving forward with Christ. They are giving their time to the study of God's word; they are giving their money and their lives for the advancement of the kingdom of God. This has been proved by the enthusiastic Christian spirit manifested in this the greatest of all B. Y. P. U. conventions.—Carolyn E. Sullivan.

Have been filled with a determination to do more for Christ at home.—Esther Keppler.

We have received the greatest inspiration of our lives from this convention.—Mrs. J. E. Gibson.

The church at home will testify as to whether or not the convention has been a success by the impression we bring back.—A. E. Noll.

A new and encouraged outlook on life as pointed out with Christ as a daily friend.—Hope Stewart.

A strengthening of spirit and religious enthusiasm.—Jeannette Fredin.

Certainly God will bless this convention as the seed of righteousness has been sown in the best soil the world has ever produced, the hearts of the young people of our denomination. Let all watch and pray for the harvest.—C. J. Morrow.

I have really experienced a great deal of that spirit which, I am sure, only can come from God to those who love and fear him.—O. J. Hunnington.

Has brought me closer to Christ.—Maynard Carlson.

I wish to say that I have never been so blessed or felt so near to God as here.—Stuart Gunzel.

EVERY Baptist church is a miracle of grace. Other churches may live a hundred years without a revival of grace. All they have to do is to christen infants and to teach children to commit the answers in the catechism to memory. But a Baptist church is driven to its knees. Nothing but a revival will save the largest Baptist church from extinction within a generation. The Northern and Southern Conventions refused to adopt a creed. We want more than a creed—an experience of grace.—Religious Herald.

Smuggled

least William Tyndale's Bibles were not such forbidden objects.

Meanwhile Tyndale himself was still an exile in Europe, in constant danger from Catholics infuriated at the change of church in England. English merchants guarded Tyndale in their houses in Antwerp, where this great and quiet gentleman disregarded the perils, and spent every Monday and Saturday seeking out the poor and destitute of Antwerp, helping those who had fled from England to escape persecution. Four days a week he spent on his translations, until a certain day when an Englishman betrayed him—turned him over to some officers lying in wait as he walked unsuspectingly from his house.

You may be sure the English merchants did all in their power to save him, but for sixteen months he was hidden securely in the state prison six miles from Brussels, a massive castle surrounded by a moat and fortified with strong towers. The queen regent of that city was a Catholic and paid no attention to their petitions, so there came a certain morning in the year 1536 when an immense heap of brushwood faggots were piled around the base of a large wooden cross outside that prison wall. A man about fifty-two years old was led forth from this dungeon, allowed to kneel in prayer for several silent moments; then an iron chain and a hempen noose fastened to the cross were tied around his neck and tightened—tightened—tightened—until William Tyndale died. Whereupon a torch was touched to the faggots; instantly the pile of brushwood blazed forth with fury, and in a very short space of time the body was completely burned.

Surely it is characteristic of such a man that even at the stake his last words were: "God open the king of England's eyes!"

God—open—the—king—of—England's—eyes! Well, that prayer was answered. Bibles in every church pulpit even in the days of Henry the Eighth, Bibles in the hands of ploughboys, Bibles girdling the very globe, for Englishmen said to themselves: "What William Tyndale did for England, in giving us the Bible in our own tongue, we must do for the rest of the world, by giving every nation the Bible in its own language."

You who are young, thrill at the fact that already it has been translated into over 700 of the earth's languages; that, like Tyndale, the translators have undergone exile, hunger, privation, torture, and often martyrdom—heroes, every one of them!

As for you and me, let us look at our own dusty, unappreciated Bibles with new eyes; let us open their pages with new reverence, and realize that the majesty of every word, the quaint tenderness of every phrase, the unequalled grandeur of every chapter is a legacy to you and me from that man of long ago, that William Tyndale, who was willing to die if so be that Englishmen might read in the English tongue the wonderful words of life.

Setting

After the dedication of the temple at Jerusalem in 516 B. C. nothing is heard of Judea until sixty years later, when Ezra, scribe and priest, sought permission of King Artaxerxes to lead a company of exiles back to Jerusalem. The request is not only granted, but Artaxerxes gives him gold and silver for the temple and a letter to Judean officials, placing them at the service of Ezra. The River Ahava is probably a tributary to the Euphrates not far from Babylon.

Lesson

"For Ezra had set his heart to seek the law of Jehovah, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and ordinances." Ezra's primary purpose in going to Jerusalem was that he might move his countrymen, who had returned to Judea with the first expedition, to a closer observance of the laws of Jehovah. A secondary object was the beautifying of the temple and the establishment of civil order. The walls of the temple were still unfinished and the services poorly kept up. Some of the returned exiles had intermarried with the surrounding heathen nations and there was a general tone of demoralization. Among those who joined Ezra in this return to Jerusalem were children of those who had refused to join in the first return of the exiles. "At the River Ahava I proclaimed a fast that we might humble ourselves before God, to seek of him a straight way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance." The encampment here lasted for three days. Ezra was going forth on this mission in the strength of the Lord and not of man. There was a special reason for his beseeching the guidance and protection of Jehovah. He says, "For I was ashamed to ask of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the war, because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them that seek him, for good." He had told the king that the party would be in God's hands, therefore it seemed an inconsistency to ask for the protection of soldiers. It was not customary for caravans to travel unguarded when they bore with them such wealth as Ezra had in the gifts for the temple. But their prayers were heard and faith rewarded. They left the Ahava on the twelfth of our month of April and arrived safely in Jerusalem on the fifth of our month of August.

Leading Thoughts

1. Any mission which is to be successful must be rooted and grounded in prayer. 2. The man who practices what he professes to believe is the one who will have influence with his fellowmen. 3. The utmost preparation for work should accompany the highest faith in God.

A Sunday School Cooperative Advance

During the week of the great convention in Indianapolis the Sunday school leaders there met in a conference which formally voted that the time was ripe for a general program of Sunday-school advance; that a challenge be issued to every Baptist Sunday school to enter at once a big co-operative plan of study and work for the year 1922-1923; that the Sunday-school forces of the denomination operating through the department of religious education of the Publication Society recommend to the department of religious education of every state convention and of every Baptist city mission organization that help be given to every church to (1) study its own situation, (2) select its own objectives of study and work, (3) and join in a big co-operative effort.

What Is Suggested

1. A Baptist Sunday-school week for the purpose of launching the year's program, through a meeting of the officers and teachers; a Sunday-school prayer meeting; a booster meeting or banquet; all to head up in a big rally day.

2. Decide on objectives for the advance such as these:

Enlisting new pupils and securing regular attendance;

Finding and training workers and leaders;

Improving the building and equipment; Church school evangelism;

Church vacation schools;

Plans for children's work;

Vacation opportunity for training.

3. It is thought best to insure an equitable participation in the big advance, that all plans be made and all literature be prepared with three types of school in mind, namely, (1) the small school meeting in a single room; (2) the partly graded school, and (3) the fully departmentalized school.

4. Some of the helps provided:

- 1—A booklet giving full suggestions for Sunday-school week.

- 2—A guide book for Sunday-school objectives.

- 3—Helpful and timely articles in the Sunday School Worker.

- 4—News of interesting experiences and successful ventures in the denominational press.

- 5—A lot of helpful leaflets on various pertinent phases of work.

6—Blanks for reporting the progress of schools participating in the big Baptist advance.

What To Do

As soon as you read this get pastor, superintendent, and other leaders together and plan to "get into the game."

Write to your state or city director of religious education, or (if you have no director in your state or city) write to the department of religious education, American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., definitely enrolling your school in the big co-operative effort.

Reports from Vacation Schools

By THOMAS S. YOUNG

Encouraging reports are coming in from the vacation schools. We are hearing regarding these from one end of the country to the other, and the indications promise by far the greatest number of schools ever held.

Miss Edith L. Place, of Cambridge, Ohio, writes: "At the end of the first week we had 100 enrolled."

Indiana is confidently counting on from seventy to eighty schools conducted by Baptist churches or in which they co-operate in an official way.

The prospects in Iowa are of the most encouraging kind.

From North Dakota comes the assurance of ten Baptist churches conducting schools, or co-operating with other churches in the conduct of such schools. As a result of intensive training schools for the vacation school workers, held in connection with the state normals, at least forty vacation schools will be conducted in the state this year. These are distributed among the various denominations. Rev. E. Wiese, director of religious education under the Publication Society for North Dakota, has the credit for the conduct of these training schools.

Rev. M. L. Thomas, of Northern California, has undertaken the publishing of a news sheet to be known as C. V. S. News, during the period of the vacation schools. This is a breezy little sheet and will unquestionably prove of large value. Twenty-nine schools are in prospect. At Brooklyn, Tenth Ave., the enrolment was 200 at the close of the first week. St. Helena reports an enrolment of fifty at the close of the first week, with seven teachers. This church made a part of its Children's Day program the arousing of interest in the vacation school which was to follow immediately. Orland reports eighty-four enrolled at the close of the first week. San Francisco Central, 130 enrolled with accommodations for but 100. Richmond, "church auditorium full." Tenth Ave., Oakland, 237 enrolled.

Our Own Folks

The Montana Convention

At the Montana Baptist Convention, Helena, June 23-July 3, the following officers were elected: President, Rev. E. R. Jury, Bozeman; vice-president, Rev. W. D. Whan, Billings; recording secretary, Rev. R. D. Brittain, Miles City; corresponding secretary, G. Clifford Cress, Lewistown; treasurer, Judge Jack Briscoe, Lewistown; auditors, C. A. McDonald and J. D. Jones, both of Lewistown. Rev. J. A. Hoffman was re-elected as director for eligible work for the eighth consecutive year.

The convention was held jointly with the Baptist summer assembly. The registration was 130 and the attendance over 50. It was unanimously voted to hold the annual meeting in 1923 jointly with the assembly. The convention closed the largest program for a single year in its history, on April 30. The treasurer reported all obligations met and a small balance in the treasury.

Among the new workers in the convention this year were Rev. Ernest Clutteruck, formerly of Colorado, now at Farby; Rev. G. J. E. Keetch, formerly of New York, Eureka; Rev. Eugene F. Judon, Kalispell; Rev. R. O. Shannon, Rochester Theological Seminary, 1921, at Laurel; Rev. R. D. Brittain of Galt, Mo., now at Miles City; Rev. D. McMasters of Iowa, Great Falls; Rev. L. I. Fowle, Rother of Secretary Fowle of Nebraska, now Agency; Rev. C. A. Irwin, of Nebraska, Hardin; Rev. W. L. Wilson from Oregon, Polson; and Rev. A. E. Davis, formerly of Indiana, First Church, Butte.

Prominent speakers on the program were: Rev. M. D. Eubank, M. D., Kansas City; Miss Fletcher of Marshalltown, Iowa and Rev. Ambrose M. Bailey, First Church, Seattle, Wash.—these three representing the General Board of Promotion—; Rev. Thomas Frizelle, of the Publication Society; Rev. T. H. Hagen, director of religious education, of Washington; Registrar Schlauch of Linfield College; Rev. Henry Van Engelen and Mr. L. Pope of Missoula, Mont.; Mr. Lee Hayes of Butte and other local speakers. The meetings were held in the Broadwater Resort near Helena. This is a summer camp with every modern equipment such as electric lights, running hot and cold water in every cottage, dining pavilion, excellent auditorium and lecture rooms. The mountains rise on every side, rushing stream, Ten Mile Creek, comes down through the camp from the perpetual snows on Priest's Pass, the Continental Divide, and on the grounds is the largest enclosed hot water plunge in the United States. By unanimous vote the convention will be held here in 1923. The convention unanimously passed action looking toward standardization of conditions for ordination and also for ministerial good standing, and also endorsed the study courses offered by the denomination for ministers and workers generally.

Resolutions were passed as follows: Inasmuch as the Northern Baptist convention in session in Indianapolis achieved a marked degree of unity of spirit, and in its continuation campaign has undertaken to secure new gifts and pledges for missions, to collect the old New World Movement pledges, to increase tithing by increasing Tithers' Leagues and by teaching Stewardship, and has outlined plans in the General Board of Promotion to accomplish these ends, and the general missionary objectives of the denomination;

Be it resolved, that this Convention redeclare its cooperation with the Northern Baptist Convention in these and all other of its vital programs, and that we hereby cast a vote of confidence in the Northern Baptist Convention leaders and in the general policies pursued.

Furthermore, we give our approval of the action of the Northern Baptist Convention in retaining for us our organ of publicity and instruction, THE BAPTIST, and also Missions, and we recommend these periodicals to our state.

We further approve the action of the Northern Baptist Convention taken at Indianapolis making the New Testament alone our basis of faith.

The Norwegian Conference

The Norwegian Baptist Conference of America met at Logan Square Church, Chicago, June 22-26. Sermons and addresses were delivered by Revs. O. Breiding, J. O. Gotaas, T. Knudsen, A. A. Ohn, C. J. Hill, C. W. Finwall, O. E. C. Hanson, H. Olson, A. H. Gage, Prof. H. Gunderson, Drs. G. W. Taft and H. F. Stilwell, Mrs. J. O. Gotaas, Mrs. C. W. Finwall and Miss Ida Knudsen. Representatives from New York, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Canada were in attendance. The Norwegian Baptists Woman's League and the B. Y. P. U. of the Norwegian Baptist churches held well-attended and valuable sessions.

The treasurer, Rev. T. Knudsen, reported more than $25,000 received and invested in the interest of the theological seminary, and $12,500 to maintain the missionary endeavors in the northern states and Canada.

The officers for the next two years were elected as follows: President, Rev. O. Breiding, of Minneapolis; first vice-president, Rev. A. A. Ohn, of Minneapolis; corresponding secretary, Rev. N. K. Larson, Whitehall, Wis.; recording secretary, Rev. Otto Hanson, Brooklyn; assistant recording secretary, Miss Ida Knudsen, New York; treasurer, Rev. T. Knudsen, La Crosse, Wis.

To represent the conference in the several state convention boards the following were nominated: Rev. J. B. Dahl, Mass.; Mr. Paul Danielson, N. Y.; Mr. John Stimson, N. J.; Rev. J. O. Gotaas, Ill.; Rev. T. Knudsen, Wis.; Rev. O. Breiding, Minn.; Mr. N. J. Lee, S. D.; Rev. C. W. Finwall, N. D.; Rev. J. R. Larson, Mont.; Rev. A. M. Mehus, Western Washington; Mr. H. M. Meyer, Eastern Canadian Union.

Perhaps the most outstanding action taken by the conference was establishing a permanent relationship between the Norwegian Baptist Theological Seminary and the Northern Baptist Seminary at Chicago.

The following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"It is with gratitude to God that we call the attention of the churches to the complete equality and fairness accorded the Norwegian churches by our national missionary organizations and the Board of Promotion in regard to the missionary money as it pertains to allotments, credits and appropriations affecting us. We, therefore, most earnestly advise our churches and individual members to support the program for world evangelization and uplift, adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention. We appreciate the noble and sacrificial efforts manifested toward us by our national missionary organizations and we trust that present relationships may be maintained and grow stronger.

Toward the close of the conference it was decided to take steps, as far as may be found advisable to be represented by Prof. H. Gunderson and Rev. C. W. Finwall at the Baptist World Congress, proposed to be held during the month of July, 1923, at Stockholm, Sweden.

The ladies of the Logan Square Norwegian Baptist Church, Chicago, banquetted the delegates and visitors on Monday afternoon, June 26, at which time Mr. J. A. Olson, the genial editor of Missionaeren acted as toastmaster.

Reinforcements Needed

Every letter from El Salvador brings news of open doors and great interest in listening to the gospel. The evangelistic campaign conducted by Mr. Strachan, an independent evangelist who has been touring Central America accompanied by Rev. Juan Vareto, a strong Baptist pastor from the Argentine Republic, reached people of the highest social standing in the republic and stirred up tremendous interest everywhere. There is much fruit to be gathered.

All of the churches in El Salvador practice the primitive apostolic method of sending out lay workers, two by two, to visit the villages, hold family meetings and to preach in any public place available. There are many unorganized groups of believers scattered throughout this little republic that meet in private homes to read and study God's Word. If there were an educated and trained ministry of native men, great progress would be made toward the conquest of this nation for Christ.

This republic has the best roads of any in Central America, and the most complete railway system. This advantage together with its dense population, makes it the most accessible to the missionary of any of our fields with the exception of Porto Rico.

The Home Mission Society desires to send reinforcements to El Salvador, and appeals for candidates having college and seminary training. Successful experience in Spanish-speaking work elsewhere may be accepted when desirable, in lieu of completely meeting the requirements as to both college and seminary training. Correspondence should be addressed to Rev. C. S. Detweiler, 23 E. 26th Street, New York City.

A Southern Travelogue

By EDWARD P. BRAND

New Orleans

New Orleans is a beautiful city of about 400,000 people. It is one of the greatest ocean ports of America. From its first settlement it has been strongly Roman Catholic. While the Baptist denomination is very strong in almost all the south, it has always been very weak in New Orleans. It is showing real signs of life and making progress now. There are four English-speaking white Baptist churches and some missions in the city. Only one of these has a first-class meeting house, but the strongest Baptist church in the city will build a fine house in a year or so. The Southern Baptists purchased an old school property well down in the city, with good large buildings occupying one whole block and a portion of several other blocks. Here they established a training school about two or three years ago, for the purpose of training preachers and missionaries and other workers. When I visited the school last February, there were 200 students present. They are aiming to make the school about half-way between the Moody Institute and a regular Baptist Theological Seminary. The school seems to be doing good work. They appeared glad to have an Illinois man visit them and I was invited to speak at the chapel service and to preach at the largest church.

The day is soon coming when the Baptist denomination, which has been so backward in New Orleans, will be a strong and influential body in that prominent city.

Mr. O. L. Benway, a rural schoolteacher near Rock Island, Ill., about thirty years ago, and his wife, formerly Miss Emma Purce, a schoolteacher near Moline, Ill., have lived in New Orleans many years. He is deacon and Sunday-school superintendent in one of the churches. We were splendidly entertained in their beautiful home for eight days.

We were interested in seeing the spot where General Jackson and his troops, behind a fortification of cotton bales slew so many British soldiers and gained a signal victory in the War of 1812, several weeks after a treaty of peace had been signed in Europe but the people in America had not yet heard of it.

Since the Louisiana Lottery has been driven out of the state, and national prohibition has been adopted, New Orleans seems to be a well ordered and clean and prosperous city.

Pensacola

Pensacola, Fla., is one of the most important naval stations on the Gulf of Mexico. It has been for perhaps two centuries or more an important United States naval station. The city is not large and is old in appearance. The government has a great cemetery, walled in by an immense brick wall, used for scores of years for the burial of deceased members of the navy. The town has four white Baptist churches. The First Church is a strong body and last February was rebuilding its house of worship. Rev. J. L. Ryan, of Greenup, Ill., has been pastor of one of the churches for several years, but has now closed his work and returned to his home in Illinois. In former years, Brother Ryan was pastor of one of the other churches in that city, and both he and his wife are greatly appreciated by the people there. The writer had the privilege of preaching in one of the churches of Pensacola. The Southern people treated us very courteously and their pastors and people seemed very much like Northern Baptists.

Rev. E. F. Merriam was moderator of the council and Rev. Edwin B. Dolan, clerk. At the ordination service in the evening, Rev. A. P. Wedge, pastor of the church, presided. The sermon was by Rev. Charles L. Page, the ordaining prayer by Rev. Hugh A. Heath. Rev. George A. Lawson, Rev. E. B. Dolan, and Rev. G. A. Klugh participated in the service.

NEW YORK

JULY 9-14 WERE RED LETTER DAYS in the history of the Baptist church of Friendship. It was the occasion of the celebration of its organization, July 10, 1822. The centennial thought was "The call of the century to the church of today." The message of the past was the theme of the anniversary sermon preached on Sunday morning by the pastor, H. M. Lowry. On Sunday evening, before a crowded house, Dr. Emory W. Hunt brought the message of the denomination. The message of the church on Monday night was the reading of its history. The message of the association was brought on Tuesday by Rev. A. G. Lawton of Angellia, Rev. T. W. Carter of Cuba and Rev. H. Clay Poland of Wellsville. On Wednesday, the message of the ministers consisted of addresses by former pastors, Rev. T. S. Leonard of Waterford, N. Y., and Rev. F. S. Squyer of Jersey City. On Thursday evening the pastors of the local churches and the Hon. Edward W. Hatch gave the message of the community. On Friday evening the message of the present was brought by the young people in a pageant, "The Striking of the Hour of the Church in America." The closing banquet was held after the pageant. The after-dinner speech was delivered by the Rev. F. S. Squyer and the singing of the centennial hymn composed by the pastor brought to an end an event which is regarded as the greatest thing the town has ever seen.

SECOND CHURCH, WASHINGTON, recently welcomed to the pulpit for two Sundays, a former pastor, Rev. H. V. Howlett, now of First Church, Atlantic City, N. J. Mr. Howlett served the Second Church from 1910 to 1915. He was one of the many supplies to visit the pulpit of this century-old capital city church between the going of Rev. H. I. Stewart to the Leigh Street Church, of Richmond, Va., and the coming of the new pastor, Rev. E. C. Primm, from West End Church, of Petersburg, Va. Mr. Primm's pastorate at Second Church opens with great promise.

NEW JERSEY

MT. PLEASANT CHURCH, Newark, Rev. Sidney W. Powell, pastor, is trying a new experiment for Sunday evenings. A brief service is held, called a "fifty-minute service" with a strong message by the pastor, and familiar hymns. This was inaugurated the latter part of June, and has proved very popular. The church is well-filled at every evening service, which is an achievement in the city where churches are practically deserted for the evening services. On June 25, four were baptized, one being the soprano soloist of the church. July 9 one was baptized and others are waiting. The pastor leaves the last of July for his vacation, and the pulpit will be supplied as follows: Aug. 6, Rev. J. Francis Behrens, Fiftieth Baptist Church, Philadelphia; Aug. 13, Rev. Daniel H. Clare, of North Adams, Mass.; Aug. 20, Rev. Robert T. Craig, First Baptist Church, Des Moines, Iowa; Aug. 27, Rev. Albert DeMott, of the Baptist Church of Bloomingdale, N. J.

WEST VIRGINIA

FIRST CHURCH OF FAIRMONT, celebrated in a unique way the twenty-fifth anniversary of its pastor, Rev. William J. Eddy, in a series of three services during the week ending June 25. Wednesday night was denominated "Baptist night." The membership attended in large numbers, as did Baptists from other churches in this section. Not many pastors from neighboring churches were present, however, due to sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention being held that week. Rev. T. B. Lawler, of a nearby church spoke of the high regard for Mr. Eddy and his church. Thursday night was "Community night." A reception was held after the services, all churches in the city participating and several representatives of the Fairmont Ministerial Association, speaking. Mr. E. J. Thomas and Dr. C. O. Henry responded for the church in behalf of Mr. Eddy. On Sunday the celebration came to an end when Rev. John S. Stump of New York, and Mrs. Fannie Jennings, of Parkersburg, were the principal speakers. Mr. E. J. Thomas, of the local church, read a history at the evening service, entitled, "Early beginnings of Baptists in Northern West Virginia."

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. DR. A. J. BONSALE, pastor of the Sandusky Street Church, Pittsburgh, has been granted a two months' vacation. On Friday, July 21, Dr. Bonsale sailed with relatives and friends, from New York, on the S. S. Bergensfjord for a trip to Europe. In the party were Mrs. Ira J. away came to the church in December, 1920. During the first year of the pastorate fifty-four new members were added to the roster and the church had the best year financially it had had for years. At the close of the first year, Mr. Gasaway succeeded in merging the First and Eastern Avenue churches which separated thirty years ago. The new organization is now completely organized and ready for a great work. During the nineteen months of Rev. Gasaway's pastorate eighty-three new members have been received; a strong B. Y. P. U. built up, which sent three delegates to the St. Paul convention with all expenses paid; and the amount of the church budget has been almost doubled. The church has a building committee appointed and expects within the next few months to begin the erection of a modern church building. It already owns its building site and has $38,000 on hand.

INDIANA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF DECATUR, has just closed its daily vacation Bible school. The school lasted just three weeks, but was intensive. The enrolment reached nearly 100, while the average daily attendance was over eighty. The work consisted of memorizing Scripture and old hymns, Bible stories, missionary stories, habit talks, dramatization, and craft work. The building was crowded on the night of the closing exhibit and the public as well as the children, were highly pleased with the work done. It was the only vacation school held in Decatur this year, and its success was due largely to the faithfulness of the teachers.

MICHIGAN

CALVARY CHURCH, HARBOR BEACH, E. Shepard Bramble pastor, has concluded a series of meetings with Gipsy Simon Smith, evangelist, in charge. The forty-five-piece Salvation Army Band of Flint, and A. E. Greenlaw, of Detroit, furnished the music. More than 25,000 people from all over the state attended these meetings. The large tabernacle was crowded to its fullest capacity. This is the greatest series of meetings ever put across in Huron County. Every expense was met, and paid for through free-will offerings.

REV. T. J. EDWARDS accepts the call to the church at Birmingham, one of the beautiful suburbs of Detroit. Mr. Edwards still resides at Canton, Ohio, where he was the beloved pastor for almost nine years. Three years ago he had a severe attack of the flu which was followed by a nervous breakdown. After a year he began to supply the churches of Alliance and Newman, near Canton. He now goes to Birmingham, greatly improved in health. Though still comparatively a young man, he has had a strenuous ministry during a quarter of a century, having assisted during the sixteen years in the Pittsburgh Association in the erection of three churches, then going to Canton, where he assisted in the erection of a church and a parsonage.

OHIO

MR. HARRY MANING was ordained in Myrtle Tree Church, June 28. Twelve churches from Mad River and Dayton Associations sent delegates to the council which choose Mr. Frank E. Funderberg moderator. A satisfactory examination was conducted by Rev. Samuel Furrow after which the council recommended that the church ordain Brother Maning. This was done in the evening in an impressive service. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Ferris of Union Church. Rev. Clive McGuire, of St. Paris, welcomed the candidate, Rev. O. E. Miller, of Degraff, gave the charge to the church. The ordaining prayer was offered by Rev. Samuel Furrow of Pemberton. Mr. Maning has been the successful pastor of Myrtle Tree Church for over a year.

EMMA BALDWIN, wife of Mr. H. G. Baldwin, a member of First Church of Cleveland, Ohio, was suddenly called away on Thursday, July 20. Her family and the church have lost a most devoted member.

REV. E. OTHEMAN SMITH, of Chillicothe, will be the vacation supply during August at the Covenant Church of Chicago. This will be his third summer with this church. His address will be 428 West 61st St.

OKLAHOMA

REV. EARL RINEY, pastor of the Baptist church of Norman, will deliver the commencement sermon for the University of Oklahoma at the close of the summer session.

arly treatment of the ethical and religious aspects of our economic life". Macmillan Co., $2.00.

"Principles of the New Economics", by Lionel D. Edie, is a comprehensive book. "In some respects twenty-five years in advance of its time", Economics is defined as "the science of human nature in its relations to the ordinary business of life." Labor, capital, production, immigration, markets, credit, public control—these are some of the subjects included in the book. Thomas Y. Crowell Co., $2.75.

"Christianity and Industry" embraces a series of small pamphlets prepared under the editorship of Kirby Page, a young Disciples minister of Brooklyn who travelled for two years with Sherwood Eddy. Of the seven parts of the series already issued, Mr. Kirby is the author of five. Basil Mathews and Harry Bisseker write No. 3, and Sherwood Eddy No. 6.

Titles are as follows: 1. Industrial Facts; 2. Collective Bargaining; 3. Fellowship; 4. The Sword or the Cross; 5. The Steel Corporation; 6. America: Problems and Perils; 7. Incentives in Modern Life. Price 10c each, except No. 3, which is 15c.

An action of great importance taken here was the organization of an association of evangelical pastors of Cuba. It is believed that ministers of the Southern Baptist and Southern Methodist denominations will join this organization upon their individual responsibility and that thus, as individuals without compromising the official program or principles of their denominations they may cooperate with other Christians in matters of common interest and of importance for the whole island. At the present time evangelical Christianity in Cuba has no way of presenting a united front when needing to make some representation to the government, or to promote temperance or any social reform. As the suggestion for this association did not come from New York, and as its promoters are all Cuban pastors, it will be a serious blunder for any mission board to oppose its ministers joining the movement. The future of evangelical Christianity in any country is with those bodies who are foremost in developing and encouraging national initiative and leadership. In the quality of our Cuban leaders we Northern Baptists give place to none. We are proud of them.

A STATE MUSIC MEET

Montana is one of those states characterized by big open spaces, hearty hand claps and the indomitable spirit of the pioneer. The people of Montana are forward-looking, fearless and progressive, traits which characterized the early Americans and which are responsible for most of the progress this country has made. This spirit was exemplified in large measure by a state music meet which was staged recently at Big Timber, Mont. The idea of a state music meet is somewhat of an innovation and similar to the high-school or inter-collegiate track meet in which the different schools compete for supremacy in athletics. In the case of the music meet, however, the different cities and schools compete for highest honors in musical performance, piano, violin, voice, orchestra, glee-club and other forms. The impetus which such a contest gives to the general cause of music can scarcely be overlooked. It stimulates a renewed interest in the public at large, and gives an added incentive to music students. Surely other states will do well to follow the example of Montana in this precedent.

Altogether there were 180 contestants from the following cities: Gallatin, Glendive, Kalispell, Lewistown, Dillon, Rosebud, Columbus, Laurel. When one comprehends the immense size of Montana, one begins to realize the wide area over which these cities are scattered. Glendive and Kalispell are the two cities most remote. Glendive was represented by thirty-five contestants, the best talent in the city, who traveled in a special car. Kalispell is so far removed that it is almost in the state of Washington. This city sent a delegation of eleven. They were two days in coming, travelling part of the way by stage and paying over $600 for transportation. Surely interest in music is not lacking in Montana, by any means.

The following were the contests which were conducted with the respective winners: Piano, Emily Botcher, Lewistown; Violin, Henry Detsteh, Great Falls; Girl's voice, Nellie Cecil, Bozeman; Girl's quartet, Bozeman; Saxophone, Chester Griffin, Glendive; Glee Club, Bozeman; Boy's voice, Valence Jones; Male quartet, Kalispell; Sextet, Lewistown; Trombone, Clyde Hunt, Glendive; Cornet, Marion Baer, Kalispell; Mixed quartet, Gallatin; Vocal trio, Glendive; String quartet, Dillon; Male quartet, Kalispell; Orchestra, Glendive. Standings of the schools which won points, the scoring being based on a rating of five points for first place, three for second, one for third, were: Gallatin, 41; Glendive, 34; Kalispell, 19; Lewistown, 13; Great Falls, 5; Dillon, 5; Big Timber, 4; Harlowton, 3; Polson, 3; Billings, 3.

The prize winners' concert which terminated the activities, was, in the opinion of many of those present, the best part of the entire music festival. During the program the prizes were presented by Principal Templeton. The sweepstakes up, donated by the music division of the Big Timber Women's Club, was presented to the Gallatin high school.

When we read so frequently of financial deficits connected with musical presentation, it is rather refreshing to hear of a substantial surplus which resulted from the receipts of this state contest, which will be applied to next year's contest.

—Musical Observer.

A NEW POSTLUDE PLAN

The value—or lack of value—of the postlude in the church service has been often discussed, but we find no record of a really satisfactory solution. This makes of special interest the plan adopted at the large House of Hope Presbyterian Church in St. Paul, of which R. Buchanan Morton is the organist and choir director. Mr. Morton makes it a point to select as his postlude something that is well worth while as an organ solo, in distinction from the practice of many who, naturally discouraged, play anything for a postlude that they may consider calculated to submerge the clatter of hoofs of the departing worshippers. Then he calls attention to the postlude with an informative "program note," as it might be called—a paragraph describing the composition and telling something about the composer—which is placed on the weekly church folder. The consequence is that people who otherwise would participate in the customary rush for the doors or for the after-service gossip period in the aisles, wait for Mr. Morton to finish his organ selection and go away benefited.

MUSIC REVIEW

From Carl Fischer, New York, N. Y.

Dear Lord and Father of Mankind..... Thompson ($0.12)
A Holy Air Is Breathing..... Barnby-Philips ($0.08)
Five Russian Christmas Carols..... arr. by Kingsley ($0.12)

The anthem by the genial organist of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., John Winter Thompson, is a very ingratiating setting of the well known Whittier poem, dedicated to that grand old man of Chicago's musical life, Albert Cotsworth. It is genuine service music, beautiful in motive and mastery in design; the voice parts as well as the organ-writing are handled with that control of technique which comes only after the years spent in actual practical experience. An anthem to be cherished by the tasteful musician and appreciated by the sincere auditor!

The second title is a two-part arrangement of the familiar tenor solo from Barnby's "Rebekah." The arranger has simplified the original accompaniment, or rather, better adjusted it to the idiom of the organ; the vocal setting is easy, the parts flowing well, with individual interest. It will prove to be a very valuable number where variety from the usual four-part anthem is desired.

I am well aware that this is not the time of year when our thoughts are centered on carols for Christmas-tide; but I am including this set of Russian numbers in this list at this time lest I overlook them. They merit wide use; their intrinsic musical value, their distinctive idiom, their fascinating Slavic color, and the true spiritual quality which is embodied within them—all make them of prime interest to the progressive choir-leader. They are so arranged that they can be done as unison numbers, by two-part, or four-part mixed voices.

WANTED

By a Missionary Society in a Desperate Financial Situation

Loyal Missionary Baptists to pay the salaries of 231 missionaries.

Travel-Loving Baptists to pay steamship passages of 15 missionaries going back to the fields and of 21 missionaries home for a furlough.

Adventurous Baptists to pay all of the first year's expenses for 12 new missionaries sailing this fall.

Businesslike Baptists to pay the interest on the debt of the Society, or the debt itself ($398,415.90) and so save the interest.

Farseeing Baptists to increase pledges and pay promptly, thus avoiding debts and interest.

Trusting Baptists to invest their gifts in the work of the Kingdom to pay expenses of native workers, repairs on mission houses, food for children, and other necessary expenses of a mission station.

These Baptists and their gifts are needed now, as there is no vacation in Foreign Missions! Must we turn away those who need Christ because you are not giving sacrificially and praying unceasingly?

DR. EDMANN SMITH, head of the department of education of William Jewell college and special lecturer in psychology at the University of Oklahoma during the summer session, supplied for the First Baptist Church of Enid, July 23 and for the Baptist church of Liberty, Mo., during the month of August. Professor Smith will have the chair of psychology in the Kansas City school of religious education during the coming winter session.

KANSAS

PASTOR JAMES FISHER of the Tabernacle Church, Albany, N. Y., becomes pastor at Wellington, Kan., beginning Aug. 20.

WISCONSIN

EVANGELIST JOHN M. LINDEN, Madison, supplied the Calvary pulpit Davenport, Iowa, Sunday, July 9. During the summer he will be in tent campaigns in Kansas.

OREGON

MAHLON H. DAY, for eighteen years a Baptist pastor in New York and Illinois, and more recently home secretary of the Canton Christian College, Canton, China, has resigned his position in order to be at home with his family which for the past three years have been in Oregon. Mrs. Day who went west for her health has completely recovered and it has been decided best for her to continue to live in western Oregon. As no satisfactory opening presented itself in the religious and educational field Mr. Day has accepted a promising business position for which his abilities fit him. He will make his headquarters in Eugene for the present and later in Portland. He expects to continue his interest in denominational affairs and in religious work and hopes to have the opportunity of preaching occasionally in the churches of his native state.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

SELMA. Assistant pastor C. A. King has gone to Chicago for a brief visit. On his return he will be accompanied by his family.

CERES. Rev. W. M. McCart, pastor, is spending July and August on a vacation trip among the Indians of Del Norte County. Rev. Mr. Freeman of Turlock is supplying the pulpit during the pastor's absence.

MODESTO CHURCH has not been completely overcome by the heat. On July 6, the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. E. H. Gum was celebrated by a missionary pageant given on the parsonage lawn.

CARUTHERS CHURCH is without a pastor, Rev. S. Kerr having resigned in June. This is a promising field and should appeal to some strong pastor.

REV. DEAN HAMILTON, pastor at large for the San Joaquin Valley, is now located in Selma with his family.

GENERAL GRANT PARK CAMPERS are being furnished with religious services each Sunday by pastors of the San Joaquin Valley Association.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

DR. S. J. SKEVINGTON, pastor of First Baptist Church of Hollywood, Los Angeles, has already won his place in the religious life of the city and state, being president of the Ministerial Union of Los Angeles, member of the executive committee of the Los Angeles Church Federation, and chairman of the Baptist state board of promotion. His own church work is prospering. The membership has increased a net hundred. The three young people's societies are doing efficient service, the Senior B. Y. P. U. having recently won the associational efficiency cup. Last summer the daily vacation Bible school (a new experience for the church) won the first prize banner of the Southern California Convention, and is working hard to keep it with a fine school now in session. During the past winter a school of missions was successfully carried on and plans are now in progress to have an even better one early in the autumn. The church recently celebrated the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Doctor and Mrs. Skevington. The church presented the pastor and wife with an evergreen tree laden with "silver fruit."

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

EVANGELIST HARRY O. ANDERSON, Stiles Hall, Berkeley, Cal., will be in meetings with Baptist churches at Albert Lea, Minn., July 23-Aug. 6; Council Bluffs, Iowa, 637 Franklin Avenue, Aug. 7-20. Mr. Anderson will be back on the Pacific Coast by September 1 and is open for engagements.

The Book of Life

“BOOK from the ancient East, and lit up by the light of the dawn, a book breathing the fragrance of the Galilean spring, and anon swept by the ship-wrecking northeast tempest from the Mediterranean,—a book of peasants, fishermen, artisans, travellers by land and sea, fighters and martyrs,—a book in cosmopolitan Greek, with marks of Semitic origin,—a book of the Imperial age, written at Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, Rome,—a book of pictures, miracles and visions; a book of the village and of the town; book of the people and of the peoples,—the New Testament, if regard be had to the inward side of things, is the great book, chief and singular, of human souls.

“Because of its psychic depth and breadth this book of the East is a book for both East and West, a book for humanity, a book ancient but eternal.

“And because of the Figure that emerges from the book—the Redeemer, accompanied by the multitude of the redeemed, blessing and consoling, exhorting and renewing, revealing Himself anew to every generation of the weary and heavy laden, and growing from century to century more great—the New Testament is the Book of Life.”

—Adolf Deissmann in “Light from the Ancient East.”

Fresh from the Field

The distinguished Cambridge historian, Sir George W. Prothero, died in London, July 10.

H. G. Wells is to stand for parliament as a labor candidate to represent the University of London district.

Dr. G. S. Dow of the faculty of Baylor (Tex.) University, goes to the University of Denver.

John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Church, New York, gave the graduation address at the Moody Institute, August 10, when 107 students received diplomas.

President Arthur C. McGiffert of Union Seminary travelled 3,000 miles to receive from St. Andrews University the D. D. degree. Dr. McGiffert is the first to be so honored by a British University.

Principal Henderson has retired from the position held for twenty-nine years as head of Bristol (Eng.) Baptist College.

P. W. Wilson, the English journalist, has a timely article in the World's Work for July on "Palestine under Western Rule".

Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, died in Nova Scotia, August 2, aged 75.

Glasgow, Scotland, is to be the place of meeting of the World's Sunday School Association in the summer of 1924. W. G. Landes, of Philadelphia, is the new general secretary, with offices at 216 Met. Tower, New York.

Dr. Charles Brown, of Ferme Park Baptist Church, London, has just completed forty years in the ministry, of which thirty-two have been given to the church he now serves. He has recently been elected chairman of the Baptist Missionary Society committee, having been a member of the committee for thirty years.

Preachers at the University of Chicago this month are the following-named: Aug. 6—Prof. Henry Burke Robins, Rochester Seminary; Aug. 13—Rev. James A. Francis, Los Angeles, Cal.; Aug. 20—Prof. Gerald Birney Smith; Aug. 27—Convocation Sunday, Rev. Lathan A. Crandall, Hyde Park Church, Chicago.

Dr. John Clifford, "grand old man" among English non-conformists, and a veteran Baptist minister, was tendered a reception recently by his associates of the National Temperance League, of which he has been an active member for forty-six years. He gave what is described as a "delightful address" on the topic, "The Joys of Old Age".

Prof. Henry Huizinga of Shanghai College sends us a message "To our Friends who read the Baptist: 'Have any of you a copy of Fosdick's 'Manhood of the Master' that you have finished reading, and that you would like to pass on to a Chinese student? I have a class of some twenty-four men each year in this subject, and I should be glad if you would send me your copies. Do it now as my class begins September 15. The postage is 12 cents. Address: Prof. Henry Huizinga, Shanghai Baptist College, Shanghai, China.'"

American Baptists in London

The Baptist Times and Freeman for July 21 devotes more than a page to "Interviews with American Baptist Leaders,"—that is to say, with President F. E. Taylor of the Northern Baptist Convention, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, "pastor of one of the oldest Baptist churches in the United States," Dr. Will S. Abernethy, "minister of the Baptist Church at Calvary, Washington, at which President Harding is a worshiper," and Mr. William T. Sheppard, "counselor-at-law for Lammell, Massachusetts." The Americans were quizzed about prohibition, the League of Nations, President Harding, open membership and other live topics; and "thus ended an interview with these representative American Baptists which convinced us more and more of their splendid loyalty to Jesus Christ and his ideals, and their enthusiasm and determination for the progress of the kingdom of God." Evidently our brethren are most worthily fulfilling their mission as representatives of the Foreign Society and exponents of our American Baptist spirit and faith.

Joel B. Slocum Dead

Pastor Joel B. Slocum, of the First Church, Dayton, Ohio, died at Vancouver, B. C., Thursday, July 27. He had been in failing health for some time, and was on an extended vacation trip to the Pacific Coast, preaching at Vancouver during July. Mrs. Slocum was with her husband, and returned with the body to Dayton.

Dr. Slocum had just completed his second year with the Dayton Church, having come from the Warburton Avenue Church, Yonkers, N. Y. He was born in Nova Scotia, and took his college work at Colby, following with a course at Newton Seminary. He held several pastorates in New England before coming to New York.

Happy People of America Here Is Your Chance!

You have fed the starving children of Europe.
You have contributed to Near East Relief.
You have sent supplies to bleeding Russia.
You have filled a ship in fellowship.

Will you stand by and see your own heart-hungry multitudes neglected? Today the cry is for spiritual, not physical succor. Yesterday you saved a life—but today you may save a soul!

Stringency is crippling our Missionary Work
Our budget has been cut twenty-five per cent
Some 40 missionaries have been withdrawn from our fields

Is THE BAPTIST to be found among the periodicals in your town library? Find out; and also find out what other denominational weeklies are to be found there.

If your library does not have THE BAPTIST, will you not see that THE BAPTIST gets there? Or, to simplify the matter, just send us the $2.50 yourself, and let us start THE BAPTIST to your library now.

Killam's Kollum

Are You in the Rear?

One of our loyal subscribers wrote us recently as follows: "I want to know how much I am in the rear. I want to keep paid up in full." Of course we gave her the information requested. You should be as interested as she to know your real position. Read your date label. It will give you the answer. Then, if found in the rear let conscience be your guide.

Equals Cash On Delivery

"My subscription expired Feb. 1. My remittance is usually sent about this time of the year—half way from the beginning and end of subscription—which about equals cash payment for the goods." Our brother's logic is pretty good but frankly we prefer cash in advance. Wonder why?

Poor Patsy

"My dog Patsy got hold of THE BAPTIST dated July 6 before I did and he actually devoured the paper before I had a chance to see it. I admire his taste but want that particular number to file. Will you do me the favor to send another copy? Yours with thanks." This dog simply followed the example of his Baptist peers.

From Far Off China

Among our best known missionaries in China there is one with unusual artistic and poetic gifts. It takes a long time to go back into China and get back home so the vote of this good brother on the Kollum is a bit delayed. "I am just a good old Baptist and while the fighting and tumult was going on over the prostrate form of Killam's poor old spinal kollum (praise be it has a spine) I wanted to get in a word or two but could not because of an ocean or two betwixt us." His reason for favoring the publisher's page may be seen below:

There was an old Baptist, Hen Hallam
Whose visage was Kronicky sollum
Till a friend from inside
Said, "Subscribe, Hen, subscribe, For THE BAPTIST and kon Killam's Kollum and he did

Now Henry, the Sollum, kalled Hallam, Takes THE BAPTIST and reads Killam's Kollum.

He says, "I'm glad to subscribe,
Bekase my inside
Is changed like my outside, by gollum!!!"

Pastors who propose to observe Labor Sunday (Sept. 3) will find a collection of helpful material carefully assembled with suggestions for use, in the Labor Sunday message of the Federal Council. It may be had for fifteen cents by addressing the Commission on the Church and Social Service, 105 East 22nd St., New York.

A brief article taken from a bulletin of the Home Missions Council and sent out by Ralph Welles Keeler, publicity chairman, appeared in THE BAPTIST for July 22 under the title, "Spiritual Life and the Social Order". We are now informed that the author is our own Dr. Alfred W. Anthony, and we therefore give credit where credit was due.

Calvary Church, Charleston, W. Va., has regretfully accepted the resignation of Pastor J. Jay Cook, to take effect October 1, after a fruitful ministry of three years. The ill health of his son requires the removal of the family to Albuquerque, N. Mex. He has held a place among the strong men of the state in Baptist work.

The Crozer Seminary Bulletin for July contains the baccalaureate sermon by Charles L. Williams of Granville, and other addresses from the commencement season, including Dr. W. W. Keen's notable paper on "Science and the Scriptures", which was reported in full in the Public Ledger of Philadelphia.

The twelfth annual report of the Boy Scouts of America has been printed as a congressional document (H. R. 296). It contains a complete survey of the varied forms of Scout work, with tables of statistics, personnel, publications, and other information of value to all Boy Scout workers. The report can probably be obtained on request made through your senator.

The six leading non-Catholic Christian bodies reported by the Federal Council Year Book for 1922 are: Methodists, 7,918,557; Baptists, 7,835,250; Lutherans, 2,466,645; Presbyterians, 2,384,683; Disciples, 1,210,023; Prot. Episcopal, 1,104,029. These figures are of membership only. The fixed factor of 2.8 is used to determine the "constituency" of each body.

The itinerary of Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. Wm. G. Sheppard, now in Europe as representatives of the Foreign Mission Society, includes not only the more important and well-known larger cities of Europe but also the capitals of some of the newer countries which emerged out of the world war as new nations, and which in previous years were not often visited by American travelers: London, Hamburg, Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, Reval, Riga, Warsaw, Lodz, Danzig, Berlin, Prague, Vienna, Oberammergau, Geneva, Paris, and the battle fields in Northern France. At each of these places, and at smaller towns nearby, large meetings are being arranged, and the presence and message of Dr. Abernethy as president of the Foreign Mission Society, and pastor of the president of the United States, will not only serve to encourage and strengthen the cause of Baptists in Europe, but will also inform the public in each country concerning the principles of Baptists and their progress throughout the world.

The Church Union Issue in England

ENGLISH Free churchmen are stirred up over the report of a joint conference between representatives of the Free churches and a group of Anglicans, including the two archbishops. The report agreed on by the conference seems to imply an acceptance of Episcopal ordination as a basis of unity; and since this is one of the occasions of irrepressible conflict between Free Churchman and Anglican, the reactions are manifesting themselves in no secret or uncertain manner. J. D. Jones and J. H. Shakespeare, who were on the free church delegation, have been a target for the criticism of their dissenting brethren. A summary of an editorial by Sir W. Robertson Nicoll and a letter from Rev. Frederic C. Spurr are here reproduced as a fairly accurate reflection of the predominant attitude of Free church leaders.

Sincerity

(Summarized from an editorial in the British Weekly)

CRITICS can easily misconstrue a document which was drawn up with immense caution, and may read into it what it deliberately declines to affirm. We thoroughly recognize the noble Christian spirit and intention of those who framed the report, seeking thereby to win the gratitude of the peacemakers. The serious question remains, how far they will succeed in their endeavor.....In the case of Christian churches, sundered by historic generations of conflict, no genuine unity can result from a dextrous compromise achieved by 'sacred fact'..... Instead of clearing up ambiguous expressions, the report employs them to camouflage differences which go down to the roots of things.....When ecclesiastical diplomatists in all good faith put forward such proposals, the result is to create a painful sense of unreality and insincerity among plain Christian men.....The Church Times emphatically repudiates the report. In a leader last week we read: 'It is now clear that such serious differences in belief separate us from Free churchmen, that the search for a formula to hide them is intellectually dishonest.'.....When Protestant Free churchmen confer about reunion they had better realize that it means reunion with thousands of clergy who hate the Reformation, and are not ashamed to say so. Now whatever mistakes the reformers may have made, they did appeal to honest men's love of truth: they revolted against falsehoods and formalisms which destroy the very life of the soul.....We cannot wonder that the Bishop of Durham, when he preached in Westminster Abbey last Sunday week took for his text 'Let love be without hypocrisy,' and spoke plain words about the unreality of the whole position. For Anglicans to discuss reunion with Free churchmen, said Dr. Henson, savors of hypocrisy when there exists so deep a rift in their own church.'

A Demand For Light

My own conviction is that there will have to be a very serious clarifying of terms before there can be any true and reasonable approach. We must clearly see our differences before there can be any vital agreement. It is no use to select a number of vague and ambiguous words and try to lose the sense of our differences in their mistiness and then call it unity. We must know clearly what we mean and we must walk in the light. All this is particularly true of episcopal ordination, which is the critical and primary issue in Free Church resistance. What is the precise meaning of "episcopal ordination," and what is its significance in practice? That is the question which Free churchmen are asking. Is episcopal ordination only a particular form of ecclesiastical procedure, or is it a very specialized channel of grace? Does episcopal ordination open out possibilities in spiritual relationships from which the non-episcopally ordained minister is debarred? Does the ordaining bishop convey authority and power which the Free churchman has never known?—Dr. J. H. JOWETT, in London Daily Telegraph.

Re-Union

WHILE the academic discussion upon re-union is proceeding, something else of a practical nature is happening, which has an enormous bearing upon the whole subject. I refer to the mighty spectacular effort which is being made by the self-styled "Anglo-Catholic" party in the national church to press "Catholic" claims in such a way as to destroy once and for all any hope of union with the evangelical churches. Probably this is the aim they have set before themselves. In any case, it is helping to clear the air of all illusions. This week in Leeds and in Birmingham there have been "Anglo-Catholic" demonstrations, the meaning of which it is impossible to misinterpret. On Tuesday in this city a very long procession of "priests" paraded the streets at midday as a preliminary to the celebration of "high mass" (sic) in the cathedral. It was such a procession as I have witnessed in Italy and Sicily and Spain. Crucifix, lanterns and swinging censers were part of it. Some of the "priests" held in their hands what appeared to me to be a rosary. The scene in the cathedral was exceptional. The altar had been prepared for the occasion. For the first time since the Reformation "high mass," with the accompaniments of gorgeous vestments, lights, incense and sacring bell, frequent genuflections, etc., were performed. The verses sung by the sacerdotal congregation contained lines of the grossest materialism—"The blood drops in the chalice." And the Broad Church bishop watched it all! The whole affair was meant as a challenge. It is part of a propaganda. In a free country religious people may use any ceremonial they please. What they do in this respect is their affair. But this kind of thing goes to the quick of the question of re-union. Is it with this neo-paganism that we evangelicals are invited to make common cause? Is there no difference between our witness and that witness! Covering phrases cannot harmonize things that are essentially opposed to each other. As one who has laboured not a little in two hemispheres for the cause of closer church union, I do plead that we get down to reality. To me it seems clear that the only way out—to speak plainly—is disestablishment and then the re-combination of congruous elements in the evangelical churches. What is the use of retaining the fiction of a "national church" in the present hopeless disorder? FREDERICK C. SPURR, Hamstead-road Church, Birmingham.—British Weekly.

The Baptist

The Social Redemption of China

ROBERT MORRISON, who began his heroic and faith-testing work in China in 1807, and who died before the harvest even began to come from his long sowing, would have been comforted, perhaps also amazed, if he could have been present at the recent National Christian Conference at Shanghai, China, to measure the abounding and varied results of little more than a century of Christian missionary endeavor among the four hundred million people of the Middle Kingdom.

Lives innumerable are being transformed through the redeeming power of the Son of God. Churches indwelt by his Spirit, planted in many of the strategic centers of China, bear their fearless testimony to his grace and power. The nation is feeling the persistent impact of the Gospel upon its ancient traditions and institutions, its darkness and its despair, its vermin and its vice. Christ is working the social redemption of the Chinese people through the revelation of himself in the church which is his body.

Among the "findings" reported to the Shanghai Conference and by it received as the reflection of the spirit and ideal of the Chinese Christian community, is a significant formulary of the place and power of the church in the social order. The report of Commission II (The Future Task of the Church) includes a social program, discussed under two heads: "Economic and Industrial Problems," and "Social and Moral Welfare." "In full realization of the swift oncoming of the modern industrial system from the West, the committee urges that the church fearlessly take the lead in the forming of such public opinion as shall prevent a repetition in China of the industrial tragedies of the West and as shall put China in line with the other civilized countries which have endorsed the industrial standards of the League of Nations." The prohibition of child labor for those under fourteen, one day's rest in seven, the safeguarding of the health of workers by a shorter working day and better sanitation: these are the goals of the Chinese Christians for their industrial system.

The Christian home, which China first knew as it was manifested in the life of the missionary communities, is declared to be "the most important single factor in the making of the Christian adult of the next generation"; and it is recommended "that careful study be given to the home, its Christianization and how to make it a place in which better children can grow up."

The task and opportunity of the Christian people in the social redemption of China are thus clearly set forth (we summarize in part):

"The object of Jesus is to organize the whole of society on a basis of love. . . . The reform of society in China is most urgent, and love should be the foundation of the new social structure.

"Any organization that will unselfishly promote social uplift, show men the way to secure larger results for themselves and their fellows in life and happiness, will find a ready response on the part of the Chinese. . . . Whether or not philanthropy in the future, and health work, sanitation, and general reforms, will be considered as springing from Christianity, or merely scientific and materialistic, depends to no small extent upon the social workers of the present hour and the immediate future.

"The church, by all means in its power, shall bear witness to, and secure the recognition of, such fundamental Christian principles as:

"1. The inestimable value of every human life; involving the duty of safeguarding the individual from conditions and hours of labor directly injurious to life, and the recognition of the right of the individual to a certain amount of leisure and to opportunities for development and self-expression.

"2. The dignity of all labor, whether skilled or unskilled, that ministers to the common good; involving the right of every worker to a fair reward for labor performed.

"3. The brotherhood of man; involving the conception of cooperation in service, and such mutual relationships in industry as exclude the selfish exploitation of labor by employers and capitalists.

"That the church further emphasize the responsibility of every Christian to apply these principles to whatever relationship he or she may sustain as a producer, consumer, employe, employer or investor."

When, with the New Testament open before us, we read this Chinese charter of social redemption through Christ, we confess ourselves unable to find anything in the former which is alien in spirit and purpose to the latter. We see a Man facing his former neighbors in the synagogue at Nazareth and announcing in the language of prophecy read from the Book, "He anointed me to preach good news to the poor . . . to send crushed ones away free." We hear, two generations later, an old man who had been eminent for his intimacy with Jesus, saying, "To this end the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Sweat-shops, the twelve-hour day in mill and factory, night work for women and children, child labor, slums that destroy both soul and body in hell, licensed traffic in lust and liquor: are not these hideous and frightful institutions of modern society to be counted among the works of the devil? And is there not an irrepressible conflict between these monstrous evils and the Son of God who came to destroy all such? And can his body, the church, fulfill its function unless it share with him in the warfare he is waging?

The New Testament

BAPTISTS of every clan and stripe everywhere—unless we except a few of the extreme radical school—find themselves in hearty accord with that part of the statement adopted by the Indianapolis convention which reads as follows:

"The Northern Baptist Convention affirms that the New Testament is the all-sufficient ground of our faith and practice."

We confess ourselves a New Testament people. We affirm our churches to be New Testament churches—nicknamed by our adversaries of long ago "Baptist" churches. We claim to derive our gospel from the New Testament. We yield to no authority less than that of the New Testament. In the avowal of primary allegiance to the New Testament, Baptists find themselves unified in their faith.

What does this mean? What should it mean? What spiritual and personal significance has that Indianapolis declaration of loyalty to the New Testament as the all-sufficient ground of our faith and practice?

If we will have it so, Indianapolis, 1922, may mark the beginning of a new chapter in Baptist history, the characteristic of which will be a renaissance of interest in the New Testament. If that word is all that we say it is, then we should restore it to the place from which it has fallen in Baptist homes, Baptist pulpits and Baptist schools.

The Indianapolis declaration comes as a searchlight into every Baptist family to reveal just how large a place the New Testament really has in that home. Is the Book read in daily family worship? Does it feed the souls of God's children day by day in their secret devotion? Does it even divide time with the Sunday comic and the slushy magazine among the children and youth?

Has the New Testament its rightful place in the worship of the church and the Sunday school? Is the scripture lesson sometimes omitted or curtailed to save time for the preacher or the choir? Probably the majority of our Sunday-school pupils never handle a Bible during the Sunday-school hour, although it is alleged to be the text-book they are studying.

One year of ardent and prayerful study of the New Testament will purify our lives, widen our vision, promote our fellowship, enlarge our giving, energize our missionary enterprises, enhance our spiritual power, mightily impress our denomination. Whatever else Indianapolis may mean to those who were present and to those who study its achievements, let it mean at least a new consecration to the study of the new covenant of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Survey the work of your church,—pulpit, Bible school, young people's society, prayer meeting,—and note where the New Testament is being ignored or slighted and bring it back to its rightful place as the instrument whereby God teaches his people and guides them in their service for him.

If you are already familiar with the Book, perhaps you will find new light and blessing by the use of one of the modern versions such as Moffatt or Weymouth; or if you know Greek, make your way through the sacred story in the twelvemonth in the original tongue in which Luke and Paul spoke and wrote.

Read your New Testament through during the next twelve months. THE BAPTIST will gladly mail to any applicant (if postage is sent) a helpful calendar for consecutive reading of the New Testament in one year by daily readings.

We claim to be a New Testament people: let us demonstrate the truth of our claim with a new ardor and constancy, and in his light we shall see light.

A Christological People

THE Christian Register has been greatly interested in our Baptist family affairs of late, and the Indianapolis Convention was reported in a two-page article by Curtis W. Reese. From that report we quote the following paragraph:

"Interspersed throughout the program were many spicy reports of great achievements and still greater projects. There were brief but thrilling addresses by returned missionaries. The whole affair gave evidence of radiant life!

"The most objectionable feature of the convention from my viewpoint, was the 'obnoxious exaggeration' of the uplifted Christ, the abnormal emphasis on the place of the cross in the religious life, the monotonous regularity with which the musical director selected Christological songs, the all but automatic call for prayer following every tense moment, and the pathological lust for ecstatic utterances. Unquestionably Jesus Christ is the God of orthodox Baptist Christianity!"

The Baptist delegates who were present will recall those high moments when President Montgomery lifted her heart in prayer, with deep spiritual passion calling on the Lord Jesus for help and guidance. Prayer to the exalted Jesus was characteristic of the early Christians; they were commonly described as those who "call on the name of the Lord." We are content to be known as their successors; we also call upon his name. We are at home in a realm of Christian thought and experience which concerns itself with "Jesus Christ, whom not having seen ye love, on whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory." We are a Christological people. We look steadfastly to the uplifted Christ.

Orthodox Tenderness

WE commend to all our readers, whatever label they may bear—or refuse to bear—a careful and humble perusal of the editorial under the above title which we take from the Sunday School Times. Charles G. Trumbull worthily continues the work of his noble father in promoting the study of the Bible and the winning of children and youth to Christ through the Sunday school. He has been a conspicuous advocate of what is called fundamentalism. He sounds a timely warning against the orthodoxy which is destitute of the spirit of Christ in its attitude to others who differ in their views of truth and of duty.

"Orthodoxy, somehow, is usually associated with severity. Is not this because we have gotten so far away from the whole counsel of God? For orthodoxy is severe, but orthodoxy is even more tender than it is severe. Charles E. Hurlburt, of the Africa Inland Mission, said recently to a little group of friends: 'It is not enough that we speak sound doctrine with phonograph accuracy if we lack the infinite tenderness of God.' There are some, too many it is to be feared, whose orthodoxy in everything but the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians is indeed phonographically accurate. But the lack of that part of sound doctrine which is the very character of God himself, who is love, makes what is left of orthodoxy only 'sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal.' In John's First Epistle the inspired apostle writes with unsparing severity and condemnation of sin. But in that same epistle he also writes, as the literal Greek has it, 'My dear little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not.' When we deal with the sins of others do our hearts overflow with love, and do our looks and the very tones of our voice show forth the infinite tenderness of God that counts the offenders as 'My dear little children'? There is no orthodoxy without love. Have we examined ourselves in the faith, to make sure whether we really are sound?"

The Discipline of Dislodgement

THE appreciative review of the life of the late Principal Curtis P. Coe which was published in THE BAPTIST for July 15, emphasizes the composite nature of the life of a modern American. When we recall the fact that the philosopher Kant was never in his long life more than thirty miles distant from his birthplace at Konigsberg, the contrast of those days with the present is more manifest. Mr. Coe was born, converted and educated in Illinois. He served as a Sunday-school missionary in Texas. He worked among the Hopi Indians of Arizona. He superintended the Baptist orphanage at Wood Island, Alaska. He held a professorship in McMinnville College, Oregon. He crowned his varied and farflung service for Christ by two years as principal of Keystone College, Pennsylvania.

Our reflections on the record of this fruitful life lead us to some conclusions, here set forth:

1. In the providence of God our lives are matured and enriched by a process which Prof. W. P. Paterson of Edinburgh has well termed "The Discipline of Dislodgment". In a sermon bearing that title Prof. Paterson applies the words of the prophet Jeremiah to the divine disciplines which shift us and turn us and move us and lead us about in ways for which we cannot find a reason, but by means of which we come to the fulfillment of the Father's purposes of grace for his children:

"Moab . . . hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel." (Jer. 48:11-12)

It is through the process of tilting and pouring and overturning, "the discipline of dislodgment" breaking us away from familiar associations and thrusting upon us new conditions of life and new problems in life—it is thus that God oftentimes works out his purposes for us. We are therefore encouraged to accept with patience and with faith those unwelcome and distasteful changes which are forced upon us, knowing that of them God makes a road to the goal of his planning.

2. Various and multifold are the influences and forces which the Father employs for the training and perfecting of his children. To few if any of us who work with human minds and souls is it given both to begin and to complete our work. "One soweth and another reapeth"; Paul plants, and Apollos waters. The process of building a Christian life is as complex in its human factors as the construction of a modern newspaper or a monster ship. For a year only we may have a pupil in our classroom; for a month only a boy in our Sunday-school, for a day only a student in our congregation. Yet we may think of these as having been sent to us by God for a touch which we are enabled by his grace to impart to them before they leave us to come under the power of other formative influences.

3. God chooses to make of some of his workers graving docks, imbedded for a lifetime in one church or one institution of which they become an integral part and to whose existence and success they seem essential. He makes of others floating docks, to be moved about from one harbor to another in order that their ministry, itinerant rather than immobile, may have an extensive quality and result in the salvage and uplift of men and churches and institutions to whose relief he comes for a time. Principal Coe was moved from place to place, from field to field, from institution to institution, throughout the nearly thirty years of Christian service; and left on each the mark of his fine character and stalwart faith and unselfish devotion. It becomes us—churches, schools, missionary societies—to consider that God may have his own wise method in sowing broadcast now and then precious seed which we would prefer to have planted, all of it, in our own field. He is Lord of the harvest, and his field is the world. He must have his way with his own.

The New Covenant and the Old

SOME things are sufficiently obvious to be taken for granted. It would seem hardly necessary that a man, every time he avows his love and loyalty to his wife, should have to re-affirm his gratitude to his mother-in-law, from whom as concerning the flesh his wife came.

Northern Baptists at Indianapolis declared their love and loyalty to the New Testament, and, strange as it may appear, some earnest Uzzas trembling for the ark have at once leaped to the conclusion that Northern Baptists have no appreciation of the Old Testament.

We live by the substance, not by the shadow; we are not under law, but under grace; now that faith is come, we are no longer under a tutor; we are not children of a handmaid, but of the freewoman; we are living under the gracious provisions of the New Covenant; we enter into the holy place by the new and living way.

The attitude of Northern Baptists to the Old Testament, as implicitly stated in the Indianapolis Declaration, is sufficiently defined in the following authoritative assertion:

"God, who in ancient times spoke to our forefathers in many distinct messages and by various methods through the prophets, has at the end of these days spoken to us through a Son, who is the pre-destined Lord of the universe, and through whom he made the ages." (Hebrews 1:1, Weymouth's translation).

Work and Prayer

By CHARLES W. GILKEY

"THE harvest truly is plenteous but the labourers are few; Pray . . ." Matt. 9:37-38.

It is the last conclusion that we American Christians would ever have drawn from such a situation. Here were great fields white to the harvest and waiting for reapers: a very big job needing to be done at once. To us energetic and practical moderns the thing to do under such circumstances looks so obvious that we should think of only one possible conclusion as following from Jesus' description of the present crisis; and we should probably state it in familiar American phrase. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few"—get busy.

Anyone who has been attending recent religious conventions, or who knows the lingo and technique of present-day religious movements, will have no difficulty in giving to this "American revised" text some very definite and up-to-date applications. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few"—organize. "Start a campaign—raise money—secure strong men for promotion secretaries—open an office—get adequate publicity—survey your harvest field—enlist and train your workers—plan your work to avoid duplication and secure maximum efficiency—work your plan." That is the way we have of handling a white harvest field. And if for any reason these large-scale methods of reaping seem not to apply, we have another conclusion ready. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few"—at the very least hold a mass meeting to arouse public sentiment, and form a committee to consider and report on a harvest program.

Not Jesus' Way

These are no doubt perfectly proper and promisingly efficient ways of meeting the problem of a ripe harvest field where labourers are few—but we cannot miss the fact that they are not Jesus' way. He evidently approached the task of reaping a spiritual harvest from a different side, and applied to it a different logic. And we who call ourselves after his name Christians, and believe that he knew even more about spiritual sowing and reaping than we do, will surely do well to examine his approach and see if it does not lead closer to the heart of the matter; to study his logic and see if it is not profounder than ours. Our methods are doubtless all right when it is western wheatfields that are to be reaped, or even when it is a political or civic campaign that is to be organized. But Jesus is looking into the hearts and lives of men, and seeking there a spiritual harvest for the kingdom of God; and his directions for such an undertaking are very explicit. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

WHAT a man chooses out of a hundred offers, you are sure by that who and what that man is. And accordingly, put the New Testament in any man's hand, and set the Throne of Grace wide open before any man, and you need no omniscience to tell you that man's true value. If he lets his Bible lie unopened and unread; if he lets God's Throne of Grace stand till death, idle and unwanted; if the depth and the height, the nobleness and the magnificence, the goodness and the beauty of divine things have no command over him, and no attraction to him—then, you do not wish me to put words upon the meanness of that man's mind. Look yourselves at what he has chosen: look and weep at what he has neglected, and has forever lost! —Alexander Whyte, in "Lord, Teach Us to Pray."

The first thing to be noticed about these directions is that plainly Jesus was no idle dreamer who thought that harvests could be gathered by anything else than hard work. The sharp contrast between our instinctive conclusion face to face with a plenteous harvest, that the immediate thing to do is to get to work, and his that the urgent need is prayer, does not come from any visionary idea on his part that "mere praying," as we sometimes shallowly call it, will by some magic or miracle avail to get this reaping done. He knows just as well as we practical Americans that what such a situation calls for is hard work and plenty of it; and the last part of his directions, with its emphasis upon labourers going forth to toil in the harvest field, is as definite and practical as any modern organizer could wish. But he knows also what we busy folk so often forget, that in all spiritual service some other things are just as important as numbers and activity, if not more so; that work to be effective, must be of a certain kind and done from a certain motive. He plainly believes that prayer has everything to do with getting that kind of work done. And so he puts behind the work that has to be done in the harvest field, the prayer that alone make it adequate and effective. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

Lord of the Harvest

The reasons why Jesus believes that prayer is an essential prerequisite to the right kind of work in the harvest field also appear in this explicit direction. Our modern inclination is constantly to think that the reaping of spiritual harvests, the extending of the kingdom of God on earth, is our human responsibility; and so, with the best brains and organization and effort we can summon, we try to make it our human achievement. Jesus reminds us here that the same God who in ways not only past our imitation, but also past even our understanding, caused the grain to grow from the seed and ripen into the head, is also "Lord of the harvest." It is his enterprise and therefore his responsibility; and we men can only find our rightful place in it as we put ourselves under his direction. God has his plans for the harvest as truly as for the sowing and the ripening of the grain; and his direction and blessing is as indispensable for the one as for the other. There is a glimpse here into Jesus' view of the spiritual processes of history and of the progress of the kingdom among men, which we self-confident and precipitate moderns greatly need. We feel sure we can rush out and bring in the kingdom with some grand campaign or efficiency program of our own device. Jesus reminds us that God's direction of the harvesting is just as necessary as his blessing upon the sown seed. The plan of campaign, if it is to be successful, must be his rather than ours; and we must place ourselves at his ordering, as must all other labourers, if the work is to be rightly done. This is the deeper meaning of Jesus' insistence upon prayer as the essential preliminary to the right kind of work in the harvest field. Only through prayer can we discover God's program, and go forth to our own part in it with his commission.

A meaning deeper yet in Jesus' emphasis upon prayer appears when we look for the nature of this divine commission which he insists is essential to successful work. The word translated "send forth" is in the Greek a very strong one, fairly to be translated "trust forth." The vigorous impulse which it implies surely cannot be that of outer compulsion, for Jesus never represents God as forcing his servants to work like a slave-holder. It is an inner impulse that God quickens in the hearts of all his true servants in every age—the thrust from within that Paul felt so powerfully when he said, "The love of Christ constraineth me." This is the only motive power to Christian service that is commensurate with the size and difficulty of the undertaking. Jesus makes it plain that it is God himself who thus equips his workers with the inner endowment which is necessary for the adequate performance of their task; and that it is prayer which opens the hearts and lives of his children to receive this indispensable commission.

Mere Mechanical Busyness

We can easily imagine that Jesus had seen in the religious workers of his own time abundant reason for insisting on this inner equipment for spiritual service which alone can make it effective. There was no lack in his day of those who thought they were doing the Lord's service. One considerable company of them—the scribes and Pharisees—were very careful to go through the motion of religious service with special attention to correctness of form. But Jesus and every one else saw that their laborious activity was absolutely without real influence on the lives of their fellows or the progress of the kingdom; it lacked the inner impulse of spiritual vitality, the contagious spirit of sincere good-will, which God quickens in the hearts of his fellow-workers, and which alone makes their work to prevail and endure. From that day to this there have been those who have laboriously or energetically gone through the motions of Christian service—with similarly barren results. In our time it is not so much perhaps the punctilious formalism of the Pharisee, as it is the galvanic activity of those who think they can save the world and themselves by much busyness about religious interests and undertakings; that reminds us again how utterly spiritual service depends for its value on that quickening spirit of reality and vitality which men can never achieve for themselves, but only God can create and bestow. How sorely we Christians of the early twentieth century need to pray to be delivered from the futility of mere mechanical busyness! For that never saved any soul nor really advanced the kingdom—nor ever will.

Then Jesus knew full well also that company of short-winded en-

Intercession

THAT man of all-prayer is still on his knees. He is "wrestling" on his knees. There is no enemy there that I can see. There is nothing and no one that I can see near him: and yet he wrestles like a mighty man. What is he doing with such a struggle? Doing? Do you not know what he is doing? He is moving heaven and earth. The man is removing mountains. He is casting this mountain, and that, into the midst of the sea. He is casting down thrones. He is smiting old empires of time to pieces. Yes: he is wrestling indeed! For he is wrestling now with God; and now with man: now with death; and now with hell. See! the day breaks over his place of prayer! See! the kingdom of God begins to come in on the earth!—Alexander Whyte, in "Lord, Teach Us to Pray."

thusiasts who in his time, as in every age, have been quick to take up the Lord's work, and as quick to drop it when the burden grew heavy or the road long. The gospels tell us that at the opening of his own ministry he was surrounded by great multitudes who hailed his preaching, were carried away by his personality, and wanted to follow in his train; but when he began to lead them by that way of the cross on which he frankly said all his friends must expect to follow him, they "went back, and walked no more with him." He has himself given us the perfect picture of this short-lived devotion in his parable of those whose hearts have no "deepness of earth"; the seed which falls there springs up quickly enough, but they have no "root in themselves" to endure the test of difficulty or adversity. What pastor does not know their modern successors: quick enough to enthuse over the new idea or the new leader, ready enough to respond to the urgency of the friend whose invitation to serve on his committee they cannot refuse for personal reasons; but rarely there to the finish of the long, slow spiritual task. Jesus knew well enough that the work of the harvest field to which he summoned men would not be done by mid-morning or even by noon; and that only the inexhaustible inner impulse with which God thrusts men forth to service (so wonderfully pictured in his own parable of the unfailling well of living water within the soul) can suffice to sustain his fellow-workers in their arduous and continuing toil. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

The Only Adequate First Step

In other words, the work of the kingdom is at once so delicate in its nature, so vast in its extent, and so exacting in its demands, that it calls for more than human wisdom, effort, and organization. Misguided activity must fail to advance it, no less than indifference and indolence. The kingdom for which we hope and work and pray is so essentially God's, that we cannot expect to serve it except under his constant direction, and by his continuing inspiration. Only he, by that secret entrance and influence which he possesses within the hearts of men, can thus call and equip for his service an adequate number of really effective labourers. The man whom Jesus has taught enough about "the mysteries of the kingdom" to realize this, will see that Jesus' call to prayer in the presence of the white harvest field is really the only adequate first step toward getting that harvest reaped: for it will put the man who prays under the immediate direction of the "Lord of the harvest" for whatever service he can render; and in ways that he may not fully understand, it will open the hearts and lives of others for whom he prays, to that same inspiring and enabling presence.

A spiritual truth so simple and yet so profound as this, is often plainer under the form of a symbol. Jesus taught us that the perfect relationship between men as brethren and God as their Father which he came to establish in the kingdom of God, is not simply a one-sided ethical relation between man and man, nor yet a one-sided religious relation between man and God; but rather a triangular relationship linking men with their brother men beside them, and with God above them. Jesus insisted that when the three points of this triangle (ourselves, other folks, and God) are linked together in a mutual relationship of confidence and love, spiritual forces will be released around that triangle, as around a closed electrical circuit, greater and more powerful by far than men isolated from their fellows and their Father can ever guess. He continually declared that prayer is, or rather, releases, such a force: so that men cannot only serve one another directly by acts of love, but can through prayer (by way of God, so to speak) bring blessing into other lives; and so that God cannot only do things for men directly through his mercy, but through other men whose lives have been made his channels by prayer on their part, can send his blessings by way of human agencies. In such a world of spiritual relationships, the man who wishes to forward the kingdom of God will look not only for opportunities for personal service to his neighbors, but for occasions for prayer on their behalf. And in the presence of fields white to the spiritual harvest, he will realize as Jesus said, that prayer to the Lord of the harvest alone can open the way, for himself and for others as well, to really effective work as a reaper.

This is the fundamental religious truth which Phillips Brooks stated with such beautiful precision and heartening power in one of his "Sermons Preached in English Churches," on the pathetic question of the disciples in Matt. 17:9—"Why could not we cast him out?"

"Not man alone, and not God alone, is going to purify this world. But man and God, made one by perfect sympathy, by the entire openness of life between them, by perfect love and free gift of himself upon the part of God, by perfect obedience and receptivity upon the part of man, they are the two together—nay, they two together are not two, they are the one which is to make the old world into the new world by the driving out of sin. The principle which makes God and man to be one power is faith. When man has faith in God his nature so opens itself to be filled with God that God and he make a new unity, different at once from pure heavenly divinity and from pure earthly humanity, the new unit of man inspired by God: and by that new unit, that new being, it is that the evil is to be conquered and the world is to be saved. . . .

"Oh, how the history of the world has lost this truth! Now with a faithless manhood which felt no need and claimed no presence of divinity, the fight against misery and sin has been carried on. Now, thinking that God would do it all and that man had no place in the great work, an impractical religion has stood by and waited for a miraculous cleansing of the earth which never came. Some day the perfect power—God using an entirely obedient manhood, man perfectly obedient and only asking to be used by God—these two together, not two but one, God in man and man in God, shall come, and then the world's salvation draweth nigh—nay, is already here!"

What now does all this mean for our characteristic modern religious activities? Not that we are to abandon our machinery, give up our organization, stop asking for money, or sit idly by while the opportunity of centuries passes. Rather that the sense of the crisis through which our world is passing shall drive us, not so much to hysterical and therefore spasmodic activity, but to our knees for a deeper understanding of God's great purposes and our own part in them, and for an inner equipment to play that part in his sufficient strength. Prayer in this spirit will not dispense with work or organization, but will vitalize them. The one thing we modern American Christians need to be very sure of is that our prayer is really a preparation for our planning and our working, and not simply an afterthought. Never were fields more white to the spiritual harvest than those that stretch the world around to-day. Never was there greater need, in our own hearts or in the hearts of hungry men who know not what they seek or where, that we should follow Christ's program for the reaping.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

Faith

I WILL not doubt, though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home with broken masts and sails;
I will believe the Hand which never fails,
From seeming evil worketh good for me.
And though I weep because those sails are tattered, Still will I cry, while my best hopes lie shattered;
"I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return
Unanswered from the still, white realm above;
I will believe in all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn;
And though at times I cannot keep from grieving,
Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing
Undimmed shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about a hive;
I will believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain;
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain.

I will not doubt. Well anchored is this faith,
Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale;
So strong its courage that it will not quail
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death,
O, may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening worlds may hear it,
With my last breath.

Tempestuous India and the Gentle Gandhi

By HOWARD R. MURPHY

THE present condition of India is exceedingly complex. India includes a multitude of races, languages and representatives of every known religion. To attempt an exhaustive discussion of the subject would require many volumes and a study more extensive than would be possible for any one individual however expert. It is possible to generalize only on a few outstanding facts. There has been a great tendency to overestimate and exaggerate the importance of present political movements in India. It is well to remember that a few professional agitators with a great capacity for noise can attract more attention than a great multitude of peaceful, law-abiding citizens who are loyal to their government.

Mr. Gandhi began his agitation by urging all students to withdraw from government-aided schools. He assured the people that in that way they would certainly attain swaraj—independence. That any sane man would think that national independence could be attained by students going on strike seems all but incredible. The most to be expected was that government should make a great saving on their educational budget. After all the agitation not one student in a hundred, taking the country as a whole, left school.

When it became evident that the school strike was a failure Mr. Gandhi opportunely announced that his purpose in the school strike had been fully attained; that the next step to the attainment of swaraj was the surrender of all titles and the boycott of the law courts by all lawyers and litigants. This was the best joke of all. Any one at all acquainted with court conditions in India could but thank God and take courage. The government of India would gladly dispense with half or more of the lawyers and it is constantly endeavoring to reduce the amount of litigation. Unfortunately only a very small number of lawyers and litigants responded.

Mr. Gandhi, not to be beaten, again announced that his purpose had been fully attained and that the next step leading certainly to the downfall of the British government was to stop buying foreign cloth and to introduce the spinning wheel in the Indian homes. This was no joke for the Manchester mills, but it only resulted in the British Raj taking a little firmer grip on the situation.

Indian Begins to Question

Another phase of the movement was a collection by house to house visitation of many millions of rupees. A large part of this huge sum was secured by concealed or open intimidation. The people were promised all sorts of personal benefits from these funds. For instance, while on the one hand urging people to boycott the courts, on the other they were promising to pay the cost of their court cases. Gandhi while urging the people to boycott everything foreign even to horse carriages, himself traveled in special trains and went to his places of meeting in the finest autos that money could procure. No account of the great sums of money collected from these poor people has been rendered nor will it be unless the government takes the matter in hand. The promised benefits to the givers has not materialized. It is not strange that the long-suffering and patient Indian is beginning to ask questions, or that the government has felt compelled to take measures to protect its loyal subjects against oppression and open fraud.

The slogan of the agitation has been "non-violent non-cooperation," but a truer designation would have been non-violent lawlessness. There have, however, been frequent hints thrown out that when the proper time should come they would refuse obedience to all state-made laws "even though there may be a certainty of bloodshed." Mr. Gandhi undoubtedly possesses a measure of sincerity and would be only glad to attain independence for India by peaceful means, but failing this it is equally evident that he contemplates the most drastic measures.

The government has seen clearly the trend of events. They know that in India is a large criminal class; that for centuries India has acknowledged the da-

Verdun

INDIA is the most difficult mission field in the world and Bengal is the most difficult field in India. It has been well called the Verdun of Hinduism. Baptists in Bengal-Orissa hold one of the most difficult and at the same time one of the most important sectors in the great foreign mission battle line of the church of the living God in the non-Christian world. As Bengal thinks today, India thinks tomorrow. Bengal is the first province in intellectual attainment in India. The poet Tagore and many of the Indian nationalist leaders are natives of Bengal.—J. C. ROBBINS.

coits (robbers) as one of her many castes; that the open advocacy of lawlessness and defiance of government, even though non-violent in name, would certainly lead to a wave of crime and terrorism. The patience and forbearance of the British Raj is proverbial. In the judgment of most Americans living in India, not to say Englishmen, patience has been carried even beyond the point where patience ceases to be a virtue.

The government although very reluctant, has been compelled in the interest of the great mass of contented and loyal subjects, to put Mr. Gandhi and many of his assistants in jail. Many thought the government should have taken this action much earlier, but it is becoming evident that the government has hit upon the psychological moment. A few months ago Mr. Gandhi was being worshiped as an incarnate god. All sorts of stories were being circulated regarding his miraculous powers. It was said that a whole platoon of soldiers fired at him but the bullets passed through him without doing the slightest injury; that they had tried to hang him; had put him in the fire box of an engine; had ground him in a flour mill with the wheat but that he came out with the flour, unscratched. The people are now realizing that they have been duped; that their money and enthusiasm has gone for naught.

Strange as it may seem a movement which was aimed at the British government and at the European is now spending itself in internecine strife and hate.

A wave of crime and terrorism is spreading over the country. Thousands of villages have been looted and burned, but rarely has an European been molested. The people are all but frantic in their appeal to the British Raj to protect them from violence and loss. The masses who a few months ago were worshiping Gandhi as a god would today gladly see him hung.

Looting and Burning

The trend of events in India is illustrated by an experience the writer had only a few days since. About midnight a man awoke me with the information that a band of 100 dacoits were looting and burning his village. Catching up a gun and lantern we made a run for the village a mile and a half distant. We hid the lantern about a half a furlong distant from the village but not before it had been seen by the robbers, for the leader was heard to shout to his men, "There comes a lantern from the direction of Bhimpore—it may be the Padre (missionary)—we better run." Entering the village we found that the band had been gone but about five minutes.

We attempted to follow them but the path soon led into heavy jungle where it was impossible in the darkness to tell the direction they had taken. The next morning some police were secured and two days spent in hunting the jungles without finding their rendezvous. However, we got them guessing and in an attempt to escape by crossing the river to the west of us three of the band, including the Mohammedan leader, were captured. The leader turned out to be a man who was wanted on the charge of burning two women until they died of their burns, in an endeavor to make them tell where supposed treasure was hid. Another woman he had stamped to death because she had thrown her jewelry in a well, preventing him from getting it. The leader turned informer and twenty-three of the band have been captured.

The people of the villages were simply terrified and scores of villages were completely deserted by night, the people taking their valuables and hiding in the fields. For several nights we had from five to seven hundred women and children sleeping in the mission compound for protection. The people fully appreciate that this condition is a direct result of Gandhi's propaganda and hate it accordingly.

The result as regarding mission work must vary greatly in different localities. In so far as Bengal-Orissa is concerned the net result thus far can be put down as a gain. In those areas where Mohammedans are numerous the present outlook is portentous and the outcome no one will attempt to predict.

The Mohammedans are taking every possible advantage of the general unrest and agitation that they may bring pressure upon the British in the settlement of Turkey's affairs. To this end they are ready for the time being to join hands with the Hindu and declare mutual friendship and fidelity. This can deceive but few and them not for long. The history of Mohammedanism together with the late outbreak in Malabar shows conclusively that the Mohammedan never unites with any one only until his ends are attained.

The Sighing of the Prisoner

A pathetic failure in brotherhood.

MAN'S failure in the art of dealing with his weaker and less worthy brother has no more complete demonstration than that to be found in the record of legalized punishment for crime. There are few chapters in all the human story blacker and more hideous than the tragedy of "Botany Bay," when England sent her crowded prison ships bearing the accumulated output of the criminal courts for years, to become members of the new convict settlements in Australia and Tasmania. The official and voluminous records of the voyages and of the colonies constitute an almost unbelievable page in the terrible tale of man's blundering misuse of his power over his fellows.

The blundering is far from ended even yet, although the old penal settlements are long since abandoned by civilized nations. A notable book has been published by Longman's, entitled "English Prisons Today," edited by Stephens Hobhouse and A. Fenner Brockway. The book is the result of the inquiries prosecuted by a prison system inquiry committee initiated by the Labor Research Department, in January, 1919. Against the announced opposition of the home office and other officials the inquiry was carried through. Chaplains, medical officers, warders, magistrates and discharged prisoners were interviewed, and the important facts thus verified are set forth in the volume referred to. We are indebted to the Christian World for a brief review of this timely publication, and from its columns make the extracts which follow:

"The primary purpose of the inquiry is to gather facts and focus them, but in a concluding chapter Sir Sydney Olivier discusses in his broad-spirited fashion the whole case of society and the offender and the need to revise our penal theory. He urges that we must distinguish between the effect on the prisoner and the effect on others who might be tempted to crime. As to the prisoner the evidence here gathered proves that imprisonment has in most cases no deterrent effect. The sense of fear and dismay often present at first passes into bravado, depression, callousness or despair. 'A prisoner is almost certain,' says Sir Sydney, 'to return to prison.' And in that sentence we have the indictment of the British prison system. * * * *

"Necessarily, the book is not pleasant reading. That was to be expected. What perhaps might have been expected was that the prevailing gloom might have been relieved by some compensating features. But it is not. The evidence printed here leaves the very definite impression that our prison system is strictly punitive and devoid of any redemptive side.

"An official visiting minister sums up the cellular confinement of hard labour prisoners and habitual convicts as wanton cruelty. Cellular confinement is isolation for twenty-three out of twenty-four hours of the day in cells measuring thirteen by seven feet. That it nearly drives men mad is quite believable. The silent system is almost as pernicious. It is described as the most manifestly 'dehumanising rule.' One Portland convict 'became like an idiot' under its unnatural pressure. The silent system is only characteristic of the whole system, which is clearly designed to destroy self-respect and prevent

"In the Shadow of the Wall"

THIS is a book written by one of our devoted Baptist women whose high privilege it was to labor for twenty years within the shadow of prison walls, as the wife of Chaplain Gunn of Iowa. In a simple, direct narrative Mrs. Gunn tells the story of their ministry to the spiritual needs of prisoners. There are many wonderful stories of penitence and renewal, many of answered prayer. The book cannot but increase one's belief in the power of the Gospel to save and renew. (Christopher Publishing House: Boston)—Helen Barrett Montgomery.

self-expression. The prisons themselves, the work given to prisoners, the way meals are distributed, the degrading sanitary arrangements, the hideous dress—all these things have the same degenerating tendency. 'The religious ministrations are almost valueless, because of the conditions under which it is offered,' and 'the chapel services almost worthless from the religious point of view, because of their prominent disciplinary features.' The official status of the chaplains tends to destroy their influence with the prisoners. "One section of the book deals with the mental and moral effects of imprisonment and under these headings facts of a startling nature are marshalled. The ratio of insanity in prisons is as 10 to 1 among the ordinary population, and the insanity rate increases with the length of the sentences served. In spite of most elaborate precautions the suicide rate is three times greater than outside, and suicide is particularly frequent among young prisoners. Practically all prisoners suffer mental deterioration of character; and are made more predisposed to crime by the prison regime. Dr. Charles Goring, speaking from experience of 3,000 convicts, repudiates the Lombroso theory of a criminal type, but says that the prisoner after several terms of imprisonment tends to conform to a type and acquire the characteristics of a so-called criminal class. The discipline is external, and a visiting Free Church minister declares that there is no effort—save by the chaplain, and that too often very formal—to get within men.

"Of peculiar value and significance is the large mass of evidence given by political offenders as to the influence upon themselves of their first experiences of prison discipline. This section is the main new contribution made by the inquiry to existing knowledge. Nearly all the witnesses were conscientious objectors, serving in the third division with hard labour. Many of them were men of superior education, some of them idealists. Their testimony, broadly rendered, indicates that there are four phases through which prisoners pass: (1) A period of excitation, (2) a conscious, deliberate and systematic attempt to make the best of it and occupy the time in a profitable manner, (3) a deterioration, when mental activity ceases and vacuity of mind ensues (those who struggle most against this are frequently those who in the end suffer from nervous breakdown), and (4) a period of settled apathy and torpor. 'Every day in prison,' says one 'brings its hour of desperation.' * * * One witness perhaps sums up the evils best when he speaks of 'the very emptiness of prison life.'

"It is obvious that an impairment of mind which involves deterioration of mental powers, atrophy of will, lassitude, childishness and irritability must react to a serious extent upon moral character. A certain number of political offenders have returned from prison life with less enthusiasm for ideal causes and with less capacity for high religious or political faith. Many are to some extent embittered. Idealism is transmuted into a spirit merely revolutionary and intransigent."

The Wrecked Automobile

By ARTHUR F. RAGATZ

IN a ward in the county hospital lay a middle-aged man recovering from serious injuries received in an automobile accident. In addition to his physical sufferings, which were intense, he was facing a serious criminal charge as the accident occurred while he was riding in a car which he had agreed not to use.

He had many visitors. Some were friends trying to plan a means of escape from the penalty of the law. Others were trying to wring from him some statement which might make his conviction sure. The American Bible Society woman was there to furnish spiritual comfort and cheer from the word of God. Both he and his friends resented her presence but he finally accepted a Testament and at each subsequent call seemed more glad to see her.

When he was moved to the county jail he took his Testament with him and even though the other prisoners laughed at him, he read it faithfully every day.

He soon became a "trustee" and in that capacity helped serve the Thanksgiving dinner. After the table had been laid, the prisoners filed in to their places and immediately began to eat. But this man said, "Boys, this is Thanksgiving and we have a lot to be thankful for. Let's have a blessing!" And before the warden and guards he earnestly besought God's blessing and returned thanks.

Months passed. The man was permitted to leave the jail on his word of honor to "return on call." He found friends who helped him financially, the civil proceedings were dropped upon the payment of damages, and the court imposed a suspended sentence. Today he is devoting his time to the service of his fellowmen and every Sunday he goes to the jail to carry the message of hope to the prisoners there. "I tried, like Jonah, to run away from God, but he found me at last and I am going to give him my life from now on and preach the gospel to others."

The Great Spirit in the Great Desert

Gone is the Indian of stage and movie fame, with his flashing tomahawk and bow and arrow; in his place there is a gentler race who have come to love the "Big Fellow" whom they once feared.

By EVA FEWEL

THE Piutes call their God "the Big Fellow," and they say he lives over on Job's Peak, the highest mountain in the vicinity. Some of the old Piutes tell this story of creation: "Long time ago the Big Fellow made the Red Man. He made four Injuns, two Piutes and two other kind. Pretty soon comes heap big fight, and the Big Fellow, he comes down and he says, 'Piutes, you stay here and all other Injuns, you go way!'" It is human, evidently, to suffer from an exaggerated opinion of our own importance!

The Piutes used to have many fights among themselves and when the white man came they fought him too. Naturally they did not like to see these white strangers coming in to take away their land and chase them from place to place. But eleven years ago a reservation of land was given them between two small towns, in the larger of which were fourteen saloons. It was forbidden to sell the Indians liquor, but the law was not respected then any more than it is in these days of the 18th amendment, and somehow the Piutes got all the firewater they wanted. They learned to gamble, too, for there is an old Indian proverb to the effect that whisky and cards are partners. Gambling made them shiftless and poor, and they said, "Why, Mr. President, he no stop it?" The women played more than the men and even the little children gambled quite aptly.

Before Jesus-People Came

These people who live here in our own Christian America had many strange ideas about life, death and the great beyond before the white Jesus-people came to tell them of a new plan of salvation. They had never heard of a God who "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." They believed in the Big Fellow but they were afraid of him. It was the evil spirit that had laid hold of their imaginations, and they had no knowledge of "the perfect love which casteth out fear." If any one was sick they called the medicine man and this strange doctor sang and danced and then tried to suck out the evil spirit that was causing the illness. The treatment was guaranteed to kill or cure! If a person died in a house they refused to live in it, for they said, "He comes back and catches you and you die, too!" They used to burn up their homes after a death but now they move them, for building prices have gone up among the Indians too! Their philosophy is locational, for they believe that when everybody dies the earth will turn over in a complete revolution and then we'll all be on top, but at present we are on the bottom. They believe even yet in witches. If a medicine man or woman points his or her finger and says, "You are going to die," it is bound to happen! Their old folks received little consideration. They were left in some lonely place to die if they were sick, and if they were well they lived in little wick-i-ups near their people.

When the government began to help these Indians, they had to be taught many things, among them that they must pay for the things they bought. They have learned much during the last eleven years. Most of them pay their debts now and are becoming better ranchers. All is changed and the old days are no more.

When the Baptists heard the call they built a chapel and sent out workers. From the very first the Indians loved the little mission and flocked there in large numbers. The hungry went there to be fed, the cold to be clothed, the sad and troubled to be cheered and comforted. For many months the red men listened to the old story of Jesus and his love and it seemed for a time as if the seed were being sown on stony ground. But one day, after a week of meetings, the reserves were broken down and many crowded up to take the Jesus-road. How happy they all were! It is nearly two years now since forty of these Indians gave their hearts into his keeping, and our hearts rejoice when we think of those who have been true to the light they received that day.

They have made mistakes, yes, many! But they have tried so hard to please him. They have been faithful in their attendance. They have given up gambling. They pray and speak in the meetings. They live the Christian life the best they know how. Fred says that he works "like the devil" to get others to be Christians! No longer are they afraid for they believe that the Big Fellow loves them. Of heaven and the life hereafter they have rather materialistic ideas, it is to be feared! "Go sky," they say, "it's a good country, no cook, lots grub, much water, no more cry—everything pretty good! You love Jesus, you go there!" The medicine man has lost his power both as doctor and witch, and they are no longer afraid to live in the same house where some one has died for they know that Jesus loves and cares for his own.

To some, romance lies in telling the "old, old story" beyond the seas in foreign climes. But to many there is no greater or more thrilling adventure than that of working among these responsive Piute Indians. Jesus told his disciples to begin at home, as well as to go into all the world and preach the gospel. And so, for many of us, the blue bird of happiness is to be found in service at our very doors.

Christ the Power of God

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

CHRISTIANITY is a religion of power; herein it differs from other ancient faiths of mankind. This power is coincident with man's freedom and here again it differs from other religions. There was something splendidly audacious about the Christian program. Christ's followers were to win a world steeped in false philosophy, or held in captivity by a sensuous conception of life, by proclaiming a simple story. That this was the power of God was evident by the results. Wherever the gospel was proclaimed, people were converted and pressed into the kingdom with joy and understanding. It brought man into personal relation with a spiritual dynamic which became a part of experience. The power of Christianity does not lie in the originality of its ideas, though many of them are new, but Christianity is original because it is a religion of power. Its ability to set a man right with God, to keep him true and faithful amid life's perplexities, was found in Paul's answer—Christ the power of God. Christ was not only a revelation, but a revolution. In this he has been reverently called the Iconoclast of human history. Christ the Son of God, mighty to save, is the power of God in the new meaning he gave to the language of man. He revolutionized our conceptions. Christ is the power of God in the completeness of man's nature. There is conscious need of adjustment with God. His is the power to control the human mind, to capture the imagination of man and to subject the will. There are two opposing labors—subduing the will and strengthening the weakened will; which is a cure from vacillation. Christ is the power of God to save from sin. The world is fair enough if sin were banished. Christ is the power of God to overcome death. He did not destroy physical death, but he interpreted it by drawing the curtain back just far enough to strengthen our faith and quicken our hope so as to enable us to understand that death does not end all. The strength of each one of us is determined by the degree in which we appropriate and understand this power of Christ working in our experience.

The Soul of the Indian

I BELIEVE the Indian is a far more naturally religious person than the white man. . . . He is out there on the plains living the life of the open, the life of God's big world, under the free sky and on the broad prairie; and it is so much easier to believe in God when you are in his home than when you are separated from him by scores of secondary causes. . . . We are living in a wilderness of brick and mortar, and in the midst of a mass of machinery set up to make life good. The Indian is nearer the deep springs of life, and he realizes that back of them are eternal purposes and eternal love. And so perhaps it is not because he is of a different nature that he is naturally religious, but because he has the simpler surroundings which we cannot have. Yet I do think there is an instinctive spirit of religion in the Indian people. I have never seen an Indian who was not a believer in God. . . . When the Indian went out of the door of his tepee in the morning, he said his prayer to the Spirit who sent the sun; when he smoked his pipe he raised it to the four quarters of the globe and murmured a prayer to the Spirit who sent him the good things of life."—From an address by Bishop Hugh L. Burleson of South Dakota.

thorities, and incited by the priests who tell them that the evangelicos are dogs and can be killed without consideration, have been emboldened. At the same time letters have come to hand telling of spiritual blessing and six more have identified themselves with our little congregation of Baptists.

These Indian towns are desirable trophies to bring to our Lord. Each town has its patrimony in some article of manufacture which has been handed down for many centuries. In Guatajiagua the inhabitants are dedicated to the making of all kinds of earthenware. The next town is occupied with the making of mats, the next with palm hats, and so each keeps to its own industry without infringing on that of its neighbors. Its industry has probably been decided by its location and by what happens to grow or may be found in the vicinity; for example, the clay in one place, the reeds in another and the palms in another.

It is generally a dangerous job when the gospel is taken to these towns for the first time. Recently preaching in a town for the first time, the missionary found upon his arrival that the priest had made all preparations for his reception. The town band was in attendance, but not to welcome him. The priest marched with it around the town halting at different points and led the people in shouting "Death to the Protestants! Long live our Lady of Peace!" Then a woman of the town was paid five pesos to take her family and do all that she could to disturb the meeting. In spite of this, however, a useful and well-attended meeting was held. After this the missionary and his party were stoned from the town. At this point we see the importance of our printing press, for it is manifestly impossible for our missionary to visit regularly the numerous towns of this class which contain his half million parishioners. Our press makes it possible to maintain a monthly visit of El Heraldo, the organ of our mission in El Salvador, which is sent by post to some thirty inhabitants of this town commencing with the priest himself and including the poor degraded woman who was his tool. Does it not seem necessary to our readers to send the gospel to a country where the religious leaders still employ such methods?

The New Hampshire Declaration

A Rejoinder by E. B. POLLARD

IN THE BAPTIST of July 15, my good friend John Bunyan Lemon challenges the statement of our late president, Mrs. Montgomery, in her presidential address that "The famous New Hampshire Confession, itself, was never adopted by the state convention that appointed the committee that framed it."

But Mrs. Montgomery is absolutely correct in her statement, and Brother Lemon advances no facts to discredit it. It would have been more like his ordinary carelessness had he gone into the sources—that is, the minutes of the New Hampshire Convention (sessions 1830, 1831, 1832) rather than the volume which my friend himself edited, namely, "The Baptists of New Hampshire." Dr. Hurlin, the chief compiler, to be sure, has stated the facts in the pages of that book accurately; but not one of them contradicts Mrs. Montgomery's statement.

On the contrary, Brother Lemon's declaration that "the New Hampshire Convention adopted this declaration of faith in 1833, adopted it unanimously" is not supported either by Dr. Hurlin's compilation or by the minutes of the convention, both of which are before me.

The convention in 1830 appointed a committee to prepare and present a declaration of faith. In 1831, this committee reported "that they had made some progress, but owing to peculiar circumstances had not been able to complete it." "Rev. I. Person was appointed to finish the work and report to the Board of this Convention as soon as convenient." In 1832, "The Committee to whom the Board had referred the articles of faith and practice prepared by Brother Person reported in favor of adopting them, with some slight alterations, but after some discussion it was resolved to refer them to the disposal of the Board." This was the second attempt to dispose of the matter outside the convention. There is no evidence in the minutes that the board ever brought the matter again before the convention; but since the declaration of faith had been left to their disposal, the board disposed of it by further amending it and then recommending it to the adoption of the churches.

It was never in its completed form read before the convention, nor adopted by it, but only by the board of the convention. Why the convention twice delegated the creed business to the board does not appear. Brother Lemon says, "The history shows that these articles were discussed, amended and referred, received and referred again until they were thoroughly trimmed down to the satisfaction of everybody." This is a bit of idealized history, I fear; for many alterations later took place in the declaration and these were made by one of the original framers of it, Dr. John Newton Brown. Dr. Brown added two articles, on his own initiative, to the original sixteen—one on "Repentance and Faith" and another on "Sanctification," since the original New Hampshire Confession lacked definite statements on these important doctrines. Changes were made in nearly, if not all, the other articles, some of them merely verbal, some substantial, nearly all improvements on the original, and numbering about fifty in all.

So far then, from the original New Hampshire declaration being "trimmed down to the satisfaction of everybody," one of its chief makers twenty years later trimmed it down still further and added two new articles to it. So that Brother Lemon doesn't seem to appreciate that the document he so eloquently defends as being "no bastard," and as "the creed that has stood the test for eighty-nine years," did not stand the test for two decades, even the test of its own chief author, J. Newton Brown. It was this revision of Dr. Brown's and not the original New Hampshire Confession that has been adopted by the large numbers of Baptist churches; and it was this revision that was presented for the adoption of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis. Indeed, if Brother Lemon knows of the existence of a copy of the edition of the declaration as originally put out by the board of the New Hampshire Convention, it will be of great value and interest to the historian. Its contents, however, from other sources, can fairly well be made out.

As to the motive for the issuing of the New Hampshire Declaration, that which was put forward by the original mover of the resolution, is revealed in the words: "Whereas, the Baptist denomination is believed to be united in their views of the important and essential doctrines and practice of our holy religion (although their declarations of faith are not in precisely the same language as it is desirable they should be) therefore,

"Resolved, that brethren N. W. Williams, Wm. Taylor and I. Person be a committee to prepare and present at our next annual session, such a declaration of Faith and Practice, together with a Covenant, as may be thought agreeable and consistent with the views of all our churches in this state."

Dr. Lemon asks, "Is it not clear that the idea was conformity and not publicity," and adds, "It was written for New Hampshire Baptists for exactly the same purpose that it was offered in Indianapolis for the whole denomination." Was the purpose of Dr. Riley and those who backed its introduction at Indianapolis, to express a belief that "the Baptist denomination of Christians to be united in their views of important and essential doctrines," or was it because they believed that the Baptist denomination of Christians differed in their views of important and essential doctrines? Was the declaration introduced at Indianapolis in order to find a declaration "thought to be agreeable and consistent with the views of all our churches throughout the whole denomination," or because they wished to pass a confession which they felt would be disagreeable to some? Was it to express conformity already existing or to enforce conformity, if possible? In this matter, again, I fear my friend has idealized the history a bit.

It is true, however, that the issuing of the New Hampshire declaration was from a different prevailing motive from that which actuated all the earlier Baptist confessions. Those were written to instruct the outside world concerning Baptist beliefs, that were so grossly misunderstood and misrepresented. The presence of the Free Will Baptists in goodly number in New Hampshire and the fact that just three years prior to the motion looking to a statement of faith by the regular Baptists, the Free Wills (1827) had formed a conference, or association of churches, doubtless had something to do with the desire of the regular Baptists to let the differences between the two types of Baptists in New Hampshire be known. The New Hampshire declaration is mildly Calvinistic, showing no doubt the influence of the presence of a large number of Arminian Baptists in that region. In light of the fact that the Free Will Baptists have been taken into the fellowship of the Northern Convention, we have sometimes wondered since Indianapolis, how they felt about the proposal to adopt the very creed, the original framing of which was partly intended to differentiate their body from the regular Baptists.

Finally, if a small body like that of the New Hampshire Baptists in 1830 confessedly "united in their views of important and essential doctrines" discussed the confession at three sessions "amending and referring, receiving and referring again" and then in apparent weariness left the entire matter to the "disposal of the board," what is likely to happen in a body two hundred times as large, if the Northern Baptist Convention should decide to go into the business of creed-making?

The New Testament

By FREDERICK L. ANDERSON

THE New Testament is the shortest and most interesting of the world's great sacred books. I have read the Koran and parts of other sacred books. They are for the most part a weariness to the flesh.

It is the world's best seller today and ever since the invention of printing and except where under the ban of the church, millions of copies are sold every year. For the Bible only there are publishing houses and stores devoted exclusively to printing and selling one book. It has been translated into nearly every tongue, and in many languages it has been the first book published.

It is the book most widely read. Educated men read the classic works of their own language once, five or ten times, but the New Testament is read daily by multitudes from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof, in Queensland and Petrograd, in Uganda and Uruguay, in Calcutta and Chicago. It is not only read but studied daily and weekly by millions of people, not only by the learned, but by the common folks of every land; Sunday schools in almost every city and town of Christendom are devoted to teaching it.

It is the best loved book in the world. Men and women have suffered bitterest persecution rather than give it up, have even laid down their lives for the privilege of owning and reading it. Nations have waged long and bloody wars on its account. The tempted fly to it for refuge and strength. Its pages are wet with the mourner's tears. Its gracious promises heal the sinner's wounded heart, give comfort and power to every saint. On its words, the dying rest their souls.

It is the most powerful book in the world. Its truth has changed the whole complexion of history, has created the Christian home, has uplifted woman, has glorified childhood, has given the people a richer and profounder liberty, and is the ferment which will yet work out a new age, the Christian age. For this reason popes, kings and all tyrants have feared, hated and banned it. The more discerning of them have always perceived that it would in the end undermine their power. But it has triumphed in spite of them and today no potentate would dare, as in the past, to try to exterminate it. Bible burning fetes are out of date, except in remote and backward South American republics.

The New Testament did not produce Christianity, as some seem to think, but it was itself one of the products of the Christian life. Jesus Christ himself was the supreme revelation of God to man. He was the Word of God. Just as the human word reveals to us the thought, feeling and nature of a man, so Jesus shows us the mind, heart, purpose and attitude of God. He inaugurated the Christian movement. He brought a new breath of spiritual ozone from heaven's hills into a dead and dying world. With him came a new movement of the spirit, a mighty moral and religious impulse which still increases in strength—indeed nothing less than a new way of life, a new age, a new world.

The New Testament is the choicest part of the literature of this epoch-making spiritual movement, which gives us not only the essentials of its history, but also, not less important, its spirit, its feeling, its thought, its hope. It is all alive with freshness, joy and power. Looking through it, we can see for ourselves that primitive age of our religion and feel the surge of the new wave of divine energy which produced it.

The New Testament is unspeakably precious, because it gives us practically all we know of Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world; because it gives us Paul, whom I call the greatest Christian, who was the most successful of all missionaries, the foremost of all Christian thinkers, the incomparable Christian statesman, and, if judged by his influence on the world, the greatest of authors, all in one.

It is unspeakably precious because it gives us the Gospel, the promise of eternal life in fellowship with God through union with Christ, a life begun here which lasts forever. It is the book of life and the book of hope. We ought to thank God for it every day. Moreover, it gives us the wonderful idea of the kingdom of heaven, the reign of God in the hearts of men, the state of things where God's name is everywhere revered and God's will is unanimously and gladly done, not in heaven, but on earth. This is an essential part of the Christian hope, and of the Christian faith, just now of the very first importance.

This book, we are sure, came from God. Not that he handed it to somebody once on a time, but that his Spirit, the Spirit of Christ, filled, energized, liberated and enlightened the minds and hearts of those who wrote it. Christians of today, who know and love that same Spirit are sure that this is true. The Spirit, who inspired these words of the New Testament witnesses with our spirit, which he controls, that this is indeed the message of God. Our experience, we find, tallies with the experiences which produced this book and which it describes, and over the two millenniums we know that we are one with Luke and Paul and John.

The supreme test of the truth of the New Testament and of our love and appreciation of it is living the religion it describes and teaches. That religion, practically conceived, is very simple. If all men and women would only do just what the New Testament tells them to do, everybody would be happy, sane and good, all the world's dreadful problems would be solved and our earth would become a heaven.

Baptist Bible Distribution

By SAMUEL G. NEIL

Bible and Field Secretary, American Baptist Publication Society

THE first Bible society for the distribution of scriptures was organized in the year 1524. The historian D'Aubigne says: "In this manner, for the most part, these printed works were circulated. Farel and his friends transmitted the sacred books to certain dealers or Bible workers, poor men of good character for piety, who, bearing their precious burden, went through towns and villages, from house to house, knocking at every door. The books were sold to them at a low price, that the interest they had in their sale might make them the more industrious in disposing of them. Thus as early as 1524 there existed in Basle, and having France for the field of operation, a Bible Society, an association of Bible workers, and a religious tract society. It is, then, a mistake to conceive that such efforts date only from our own age; they go back—at least in the identity of the objects they propose—not merely to the days of the Reformation, but still further, to the first ages of the church."

Ninety-seven years ago The American Baptist Publication Society was organized, "to promote evangelical religion by means of the Bible, the printing-press, colportage, Sunday-schools, and other appropriate ways." Since then the Bible work of the society has reached to the uttermost parts of the earth. Over hills and valleys, mountains and plains, the gospel in the form of the printed page has been scattered broadcast over our fair land, and the lands beyond the seas.

The American Baptist Publication Society, so far as we know, is the only denominational publishing house in the world which prints Bibles for itself. Several of our large presses are largely engaged in the production of scriptures. It has published the gospel message in a number of languages, dialects, and characters. It has been the John the Baptist for work among the foreign-speaking people in our own land, and its Bible workers are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a house-to-house visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts.

Already we have published the following foreign-language scriptures: the whole Bible in German, Polish, Swedish, Danish; the New Testament in Hungarian and Polish; gospels in Hungarian, Polish, Russian, Bohemian, Spanish, Italian, Slovak, Naga.

We have Bible workers in the homeland, and in Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and El Salvador. The task of the Bible worker has become very extensive, as the monthly reports show. Yet mere statistics do not show the full power of the Bible worker, which lies in the word spoken to discouraged seekers after truth, the patient listening to stories of failures to live a Christian life, the cheer brought to the lonely homes in sparsely settled districts, the placing of a Bible or Testament, or a child's Bible story book in a home devoid of any religious books, the seeking out of those who have fallen by the wayside, the cottage prayer-meeting in places where there is no religious service, talks by the wayside with homeless men and with those in the homes, Christian testimony and scattering Christian literature among factory employees at the noon-hour, for all this and much more enters into the daily life of the Bible worker.

"The Great Book of Human Souls"

The Torpedoed Bible

By CHARLES A. MCALPINE

NOT only has the Bible been the great preserver of man's higher life; it has itself been preserved in marvelous ways. And lest we should come to think that the day of miracles has really passed and the God of miracles has abdicated in favor of the time-table, here comes a 1920 tale of some "scraps of paper" so precious that they seem to be watched over by the Ruler of the seas who makes "the winds and the waves obey his will," and guides those priceless leaves to a safe haven and a friendly shore after months of apparently purposeless drifting on the waves of the vast ocean.

This most recent Bible "miracle" has been the recovery of a unique version from the very bed of the ocean, and it reads like a romance.

In southern Nigeria before the great war there was a missionary, Archdeacon Dennis, who wanted the Bible for his natives. Nothing but this book could hope to stamp out almost universal fetish-worship, widespread slavery,—which, though legally dead, is still operative,—the remnants of cannibalism and human sacrifice that still persist, and all the misery of savagery which the Bible has conquered in other parts of the world. There existed no Bible in the world in the dialect of the tribe to which Dennis had been sent, and he devoted the greater part of his life to the making of one. There in the steaming tropics he worked as few men have the energy to work; for the task of learning an African language, composing a dictionary, clarifying the grammar, and translating into the language the whole Bible, is one that needs all the perseverance given by a great faith and desire. Three or four hours are likely to be spent on a comparatively simple verse, and there are 31,173 verses in the Bible! And, when a real snarl is met, it may be a month before the translator can find the exact word or phrase.

Archdeacon Dennis had to use an infinite amount of patience and ingenuity in order to bring the meaning of the Bible home in a pagan language. What can an Efik or an Ibo of Nigeria know about the cherubim? How convey the abstract idea of the Holy Ghost to the cannibalistic worshiper of a visible juju? There was no ancient civilization in Nigeria which could help them to understand a translation that did not simplify for their understanding a book written in the cultivated East, and yet the translator's duty was to keep the essentials clear-cut and intact. It was a stupendous task, and the great responsibility felt while doing it made it none the easier.

When his translation was completed, Archdeacon Dennis set sail for England with his manuscript to oversee the last stage of his life-work. He never saw England, for by this time the war was on and the submarine roamed the sea. The missionary's ship was one of those that were torpedoed and sent to the bottom, he perishing in the wreck. But not "sunk without a trace"; the precious manuscript floated free. The life-work of the murdered missionary was borne onward by the wind and waves until it found its haven in a crevice in the rocks of Wales. Not to a savage or pagan or uninhabited soil it drifted, but to a Christian land, where the seacoast was small enough to be well visited, and the people intelligent enough to realize the possible value of sheet after sheet of words that conveyed no meaning to them, and where, through this combination of circumstances, the precious manuscript was retrieved, to become a Bible that will carry light to still another people of the Dark Continent.—Abridged from The Christian Endeavor World.

Helen Keller and Her Bible

By A. WESLEY MELL

THE Bible is the Book of all books I love," said Helen Keller, the world's famous deaf and blind woman, in a recent interview which I had with her in behalf of the American Bible Society.

"I should like to have my picture taken with my Bible," she continued. But her Bible is not like yours, for she reads not with her eyes, but with her sensitive finger tips by a system of raised dots representing letters.

"What is your favorite chapter, Miss Keller?" I asked.

Miss Keller promptly opened the Gospel of St. John to the ninth chapter and swiftly and with tender and caressing touch, her trained fingers traced the raised dots until she reached the fourth verse: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." Her face grew serious and tense as she slowly repeated these words, but it lighted as she read on—"As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."

Miss Keller then turned to the first chapter, and with radiant illumination of expression she read aloud: "In him was life; and the life was the light of men. . . . That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

And when I gave her one of the army and navy Testaments with a word concerning Bible distribution during the war, Miss Keller clasped the little Testament and confidently and eagerly exclaimed: "I am so glad that the Bible is being distributed everywhere. When Christianity has spread throughout the world, then brotherhood will come to the nations. I rejoice in the American Bible Society."

It was an hour never to be forgotten. As I left Miss Keller standing in the sunlight before the open window, and saw in her face "the light that never was on sea or land," I thought how true it is that "his life is the light of men."

A Book for Young People

By JOHN CLIFFORD

DO the people of our day use and value the Bible as did our fathers and grandfathers? Has the Book lost its power in fixing ideals, guiding the conduct

"Let Him Come After Me"

If a man now would have real fellowship with Christ in His life and sufferings the best way is to do for the heathen what he did for the world—to leave His Father's house and go and save it.

JAMES ELDER CUMMING.

and building the characters of the present generation? I fear that the attitude towards religion and especially towards the scriptures has been seriously altered during the past fifty years. I wish to speak of the place of the Bible in the life of our young people.

The Bible is more than literature, infinitely more; and it enters into the life of the young to achieve what no other literature can. It is, as Paul says, "Inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for amendment, and for moral discipline, to make the man of God proficient and equip him for good work of every kind." That is the great objective—to save men, to save them completely, to make men according to the pattern of manhood presented in Jesus Christ.

We welcome the advice of Paul: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." We do not take what other people say without inquiry—we study for ourselves. We seek all the light we can possibly get from the past and the present, from the studies of others, from cooperative investigation by Bible scholars, and find sure footing in the indestructible truths of revelation, truths vindicated by history and experience, illustrated by countless biographies; and made authoritative by the general consent of those who have tested them.

Now the greatest danger that besets us is that of allowing the controversies of the theologians and of churches to block the way into the temple of Christian truth. We must not stay on the outskirts of that edifice. We must with reverent spirit and eager desire press right into the holy of holies, even to Christ Jesus himself. He is central. He is "the light and life of men" and the light and life of the Bible. We can understand it if we understand him. It is Jesus Christ himself in his incarnation and ministry, in his life and death, resurrection and enthronement, who floods the whole Book with radiance, satisfies the yearnings of the prophets, and guides humanity into ways of truth, goodness and beauty.

We may make up our minds to this fact, a fact demonstrated over and over again in the lives of heroic servants of mankind; that there is no book like it for making manhood strong, pure, clean, wise; and womanhood brave, considerate, gracious and graceful. It is the Book. Miss it, and we miss the best. Ignore it, and we injure ourselves incredibly. We must use it fully, start each day in fellowship with it, and make it our constant companion, ever present in thought and in influence; and so shall we find it makes us wise unto the salvation which is in Christ Jesus.

I speak from a long experience, and I say, I know of no book that feeds courage for the right and the just and the true as does the Bible, that restores a failing faith in God and goodness so quickly and effectively, that enables a man to escape routine and convention and take his own freely chosen path, that comforts in sorrow, heals the wounds of defeat and swiftly lifts to their feet those who have fallen in the way, that gladdens the soul with the purest joys, that clothes womanhood with the charm of patience and meekness and fortitude, and sustains men in facing disaster, and carries them to victory.

Our Financial Goals

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

OUR finance committee did a great piece of work for us at Indianapolis. We are able to see daylight ahead for the first time. They planned for a minimum contribution of at least $10,000,000 this next year. That means an increase of $1,000,000 over what we gave last year. They take the first $7,000,000 of distributable receipts received and divide that up pro rata among all the organizations. They then take the next receipts, above the $7,000,000, and pay them over to the bodies which have under-drawn up to this time, The American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board, and the schools and colleges, until they have received 50 per cent of their total under-drawings.

If we raise $10,000,000, this means that we can apply $1,000,000 to provide for our deficits, and we can, besides that, reduce the debt which we owe to the schools and colleges, the Home Mission Society and the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board, because of their under-drawings up to the present time, by one-half. Then, assuming that we reach $10,000,000 the next year, we should find ourselves entirely out of debt to these three organizations, and with our deficits paid for. This puts a real challenge up to the denomination. We must not fail to reach these figures. We have good hope that we can reach them. In this year of intense financial depression we raised $9,000,000. It is reasonable to suppose, with the churches cooperating as they have not up to the present time, with thorough canvass of new members, and with insistence on the paying up of all pledges made, that we can get in at least $10,000,000 this next year. Should we get more, we would come even nearer to meeting our deficits and stopping the interest that must be paid on these big debts.

So many times people ask what percentage of every dollar given goes to the different organizations. It may be well to keep the following figures in mind:

About 16½ cents on every dollar goes to the Foreign Mission Society.

Nearly 6 cents goes to the Woman's Foreign Mission Society;

Over 7 cents, to the Home Mission Society;

4½ cents to the Woman's Home Mission Society;

A little over 2½ cents, to the Publication Society;

Almost 8 cents, to the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Fund;

A little more than 1½ cents, to the Board of Education;

26½ cents to the schools and colleges;

13 cents, to all the state conventions;

5½ cents, to the standard city missions;

A little over 4 cents, to the General Board of Promotion;

½ cent to the Northern Baptist Convention;

About 3¼ cents to the Contingent Fund.

Ten Million Dollars ought to be written on the heart of every Baptist. You know it is said that a king of England remarked that "Calais" would be found written on his heart. Let's feel so deeply and take our responsibility so seriously that each Baptist can say that $10,000,000 is written on his heart. It will not do much good to read these big figures unless we keep in mind the little figures that represent our own share. What is my part in the big goal? Am I doing my share?

General Board Plans Important State Promotional Conferences

ONE of the outstanding purposes manifested at the meetings of the Board of Promotion and the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis was the determination to avoid so far as possible the recurrence of conditions which in previous years have so often made it necessary to crowd into the closing months of the fiscal year the greater part of our effort to secure contributions to our great denominational enterprises. It was recognized that if we are to reach the goal which the denomination has set before itself for the present fiscal year, we must begin at once the task of stimulating contributions. An added reason for prompt action this year is found in the fact that the convention, on recommendation of the committee on organization and program, set aside the month of October as a period during which special emphasis is to be laid upon the stewardship obligation in all our churches. If the stewardship program in October is to be effective, the plans for its observance must be well under way before Sunday, October 1.

With these considerations in mind, the committee on field activities and the advisory committee of the General Board of Promotion held a joint meeting on Tuesday, July 25, at the office of the board in New York, and considered ways and means of inaugurating the promotional program for the year at the earliest date possible. At this meeting the committees had before them letters from many state secretaries and others in the field, containing suggestions for the year's work. In the light of these communications, plans were formulated for a series of conferences to be held, one in each state within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, for the purpose of giving the necessary initial impetus to the promotional work.

In order that the churches may be ready actively to begin the stewardship program on October 1, these state conferences are all to be held during the last two weeks of September. Four teams of specialists in various lines of missionary and other denominational work will cover the entire field, devoting a day and a half to each conference. It is too early as yet to announce the personnel of the teams, but it is assured that they will include some of our ablest and most representative missionary secretaries and pastors, who will be able to bring to their audiences a vital message concerning what our denomination is accomplishing and the ever-enlarging opportunities with which it is confronted.

The conferences will not be lacking, therefore, in inspirational features. It is not contemplated, however, that their primary purpose shall be inspirational, but they are designed chiefly to bring to our denominational leaders in each state the facts concerning our present situation and suggestions as to ways and means by which each state can carry out its part of the entire denominational obligation. Definite methods will be proposed which state leaders can employ for the organization of the Baptists within their state with a view to reaching the objectives which the denomination has set before itself in the program for the year. A definite, detailed program for the promotion of the stewardship idea in each church during the month of October will be presented.

The plans for these conferences are announced thus early in order that those who should attend may reserve the dates and make their plans to be present. The exact dates and places for the various states are now being arranged and will be announced in the denominational press shortly. In view of the purpose and character of the meetings, it is hoped that every one concerned in the leadership of the promotional program will plan to attend the conference in his or her state. Associations which have promotional committees should send every member of such committees. If there is no promotional committee, each association should be represented by at least a pastor, a layman, a woman and a representative of the young people's societies, as suggested in the promotional program adopted by the convention at Indianapolis. Officers and members of the state convention and promotion boards and of national boards resident within the state should also be present. In addition to these official groups, every pastor, layman and woman who may be available for service as a volunteer worker in connection with the promotional program should be urged to attend. Every state should see to it that the persons in the groups just mentioned have the benefit of the inspiration and contacts of these highly important meetings. Upon the spiritual power generated by the conferences and the initiative shown by the state leaders in following them up depends to a very large extent the financial outcome of our whole denominational enterprise during the present year.

General Director.

The Chimney Corner

Who Only Stand and Wait

Wednesday, July 16.

Dearest Lazy-Bones,

Here I am, darling, and it is going to be the greatest fun in the world being a waitress when I get used to it! Only don't forget it's to be a secret between you and me, and that, if anybody asks where your mother is, you are to say (very proud and haughty-like) that she's in the mountains for the summer, sir! You know how: with beetling brows and lofty mien, as if I were in the habit of coming to magnificent resorts like this all by my lonesome every year. And if they dare insinuate that a mother's place is by her son, especially when he is suffering as you are, then you are to say in a mysterious fashion that made you nervous to have the dear thing hanging around the hospital and the doctors finally had to send her away! But mind you, Peter, no lies—I couldn't bear to have you lie just to cover our false pride about being poor, but a little skilful covering of our real reason will do us both no harm. And the dear Lord understands, because he knows how dreadfully hard we're both trying to make you well and strong enough to fill your father's shoes some day.

As for this hotel, it is beyond your wildest dreams, Peterkin. It stretches out and out like palaces or—or—railway stations, and there are terraces where the pretty ladies walk at night, and there is a moon, hired for the summer to shine right over that terrace every evening as long as the orchestra plays. At least it shone last evening, which is all I can actually vouch for, as I only arrived at sunset time. I was a bit overwhelmed to see such an imposing place; even the bell-boys are plastered all up and down their blue fronts with gold buttons, and the men guests put on evening suits for dinner. Real Society, my son, with a swishy capital S. Isn't it lucky I'm not a guest, for whatever could I wear?

I had a frightfully lonely feeling as I trailed along a fourth floor corridor to my room on the heels of a bell-boy; I found alas! alas! that I have to share my room with a Peroxide Blond who started right in calling me "dearie." She chews gum, Peter, and tucks it away under any horizontal bit of furniture which lies nearest her hand. She assures me this is a "swell place," and the tips something grand, if you mind your p's and q's. I made up my mind to mind 'em! Nevertheless she is somewhat of a blow to me, as I had been painting a picture in my mind's eye of rooming in solitary splendor. It's under the peak of the roof, but far from solitary. Yet I am sure your father would have said that she had been given me on purpose, as he used to say about certain coolies I hated to have near me. So there may be better chapters about "dear Mabelle" later.

You will be wanting to hear about that waitress-lady that used to be your mother. Well, she's a very forgetful body, poor woman! It's all one to her whether they want oatmeal or grape nuts; but it's not all one to them. No, indeed! And they tell her in so many words: cool or peppery, according to their natures, sir. I dassn't turn back to ask their orders all over again, either,—poor Lot's wife, no wonder she turned to salt, dear creature. That's what would happen to me if I did likewise. But in time I shall master the bill-of-fare, for what is a mere menu to me? It's probably quite simple to memorize when you put your mind to it. I used to think I never could learn Shelley's "Ode to the Wild West Wind", but you remember how well I rattle it off now every fall when we scuffle through the leaves. The only trouble is that poetry is so much more satisfying to the soul than somebody's else toast—mercy! did they want it dry or buttered?

It's all just a game, Peter, and I'm going to love it, tomorrow. For I always aim to beat, and although I never can beat you, sonny, yet I'm sure I can win from my eight Noble Masters and Mistresses!! I must stop now and prink for luncheon. I'll write you about said lords of creation tomorrow. Meanwhile, you will be glad to know that the head waiter is a Harvard man, and ushers the guests to their seats as if it were to be a lecture on gastronomy, instead of the real thing.

The view from Mabelle's window (and mine) is superb. Fold on fold of green mountains ripple along over the landscape as if some Giant Clerk had unrolled bolt after bolt of soft green velvet for some wealthy customer. "Which shade do you prefer, madam?" As for me, I never can decide, so I ask him to wait, please. And he leaves them out on the counter all night.

Peter, I miss you so! But don't you dare go missing me. Be awfully sorry to that nurse; let her monkey with your hair and do all the foolish things she'll want to do and which you'll hate. You see, she's probably just aching to really own a pluperfect little scamp of a son like you, so show her what a real darling you are, for my sake, and I'll be forever and ever,

Your devoted,

Mommer.

Precious Stay-a-Bed,

The doctor wrote me that you are in such fine trim that the expensive new cast goes on you today. I am all one prayer that it needn't hurt you. But you know you come from a race of men who know how to stand things that are hard. Oh Peter, if I could only bear it for you, dear! I'm so very strong, you know. It's just nothing to be here carrying trays; I'd so much rather be behind the door of the operating room waiting for you to come out. I know you'll have that game little smile on your lips! But I did an awful thing before I left—I told that nurse all about you. Yes, I did! How when you smile the perkier it's sheer bluff. So she's "on" to you, and you might as well act natural from now on. Let out a few groans, darling; she'll simply revel in them, and know when, where, and how to nurse you best. That's why I'm here and she's there.

And now for my career. It's high time you should be meeting the nobility around whom I arrange funny little bird bath-tubs full of vegetables and things. I'm becoming very clever at remembering: I named my fingers—one is soup, another roast beef, another chicken, another is a boiled potato—the thumb is mashed! Then when the Hungry Horde rattle off their orders as if I were a dictaphone I wiggle the appropriate fingers, and all I need do in the kitchen is to remember the number of wiggles. Simple, but confusing. As I haven't nearly enough lady fingers to go around such an elaborate menu. The Chef is truly marvellous. I'm sure he was a crown prince before the war; his snowy cap is the most regal-looking affair, and his Van Dyke beard would have reduced Rembrandt to tears! But nobody ever heard of Rembrandt here; nobody in my world, I mean. There

Trees

I THINK that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest, Against the earth's sweet flowing breast.

A tree that looks at God all day
And lifts her leafy arms to pray.

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair.

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.
—Joyce Kilmer.

are two distinct worlds: ours (Mabelle's and mine), and the aristocrats on whom we wait.

Purely for your benefit I must name these cross sections of the Four Hundred, sonny, but as you shouldn't spread their really-true names around the hospital I have done them over into appropriate pseudonyms. Colonel Cod-and-Beans sits at the head of the table and is most impressively "Beacon Street," with a regular Boston bay window curving out the front of his vest, my dear. He came over in the Mayflower, I know he did; straddling the bowsprit, likely, so he could be the very first Pilgrim to land on that bleak and rockbound coast. He has a very wintry eye and a most superior air. Of course I bore him nearly to death, being only a waitress-person. Beside him sits his lady sister, Miss Spill-the-Beans, so-named because she has a real penchant for giving away his secret reasons for ordering each dish. Mrs. Horatius Gobbler, beside her, is very deaf, so above the clatter Miss Spill-the-Beans can generally be heard shouting into her sympathetic ear: "You've no idea what a liver we all have, we Cods and Beans. Ever since my great-grandfather's day (he came over in the Mayflower, as I told you) we've all had to avoid fish and pastry. But the poor Colonel here is worse than any of us, and . . ."

"Tut! Tut!" gurgles the Colonel, down in his Adam's apple. I'm sure he feels the way I do when you occasionally explain to utter strangers that, being newly-arrived from China, my clothes are dreadfully out-of-date, etc., etc.

Mrs. Gobbler is a curiosity, Peter dear. She is composed entirely of meals! I surround her with the neatest network of bird dishes, but in no time at all she has licked the platter clean and like Oliver Twist, wants "more." In getting her enormous orders I grow slimmer and slimmer, while she grows fatter and fatter.

The Colonel has two very Bostonian grandchildren with him, and I try so hard to wax affectionate over the boy-person, since he's exactly your age, belovedest. But there's muckle o' a difference in lads, I'm thinking; and Ben Bolt gulps his food so fast he hardly seems human. Who was it who said that soup, like children, should be seen and not heard? The Back Bay has not yet taught him to muffle his eating processes.

Sweet Alice is Ben Bolt's sister, and sweeter Alice-y-r spinster of seven years you never did see. She wears owl spectacles and studies the menu as if it were an examination paper, and pronounces all the syllables so primly. O Peter, some day I do so want to kiss her in the tickly place in the back of her neck and hear her give a real squeal. Or as she would say: "Emit a spontaneous exclamation of surprise." I feel unnaturally giddy and young in her quaint, prim presence.

Then there's Mr. Ivory Dome to be introduced. He's a man. At least I suppose so, for he wears trousers and his head is very, very bald. But he is the nearest to a mummy of any living mortal I ever met. And beside him sits the Beautiful Debutante, his daughter. She be 'orrible 'aughty, Peter! Beautiful Debs have to be haughty, did you know it? I don't know why. But she can look straight through me as if I were a pane of glass. Beside her is a vacant chair. And in that chair all sorts and conditions of men do stray, led by the Harvard head waiter. But the Deb is a snob, sonny, and if she doesn't approve of the new "he", she tells the Head waiter about it on her way out and the poor undesirable is painlessly removed by the next meal. I can't think how she does it with such neatness and dispatch.

My other dears are the Ramrod Widow and Curlytop, her son. He is a sunbeam, that baby, and she's a Lightning Rod, very correct—dresses like the wax-work ladies in the store window. So your mother is moving in frightfully select circles. Best families and all that. Only they're not actually "best", at all, as I shall explain another day.

Mabelle has just breezed in. She's been out with a beau, and says I'm still good-enough looking to pick one up right easy. why don't I nab one while the picking's good? I said I had a steady in New York. She wanted to know his name. "Peter," said I. "Umph!" said she, "he sounds Irish, and awful steady."

I took a short walk today out in the forest primeval on pine needles, dear, and I'm enclosing a few so that you can sew up any rents in the spelling of your very loving Mother.

Deceiving The Empress Dowager

THE famous Tsi An, empress dowager of China, displayed statesmanship worthy of the shrewdest masculine head in any country in the world. Yet, on the authority of the Princess Den Ling, author of "Two Years in the Forbidden City," it seems to have been possible to deceive her.

Each year on her birthday she was in the habit of buying ten thousand birds from her own privy purse and setting them free, praying to the gods as she opened each cage that they might not be caught again.

"One year," writes the princess, "each court lady had presented to her a hundred birds, so that there was a goodly flock. Among the number were a few parrots chained on stands, and when the eunuchs broke their chains the parrots would not move.

"How funny!" said the empress. 'Each year a few parrots will not go away at all, and I have kept them until they died.'

"At this point the head eunuch arrived, and when her majesty told him what had happened he went down on his knees.

"Your majesty's great luck," he said, "These parrots understand your majesty's kindness and would rather stay here and serve your majesty."

This releasing of the birds is considered as a very meritorious action and will not fail of reward in heaven, it appears, but the situation was not precisely as the head eunuch had explained it.

The eunuchs at his orders had long ago bought those parrots and trained them. Every day during her majesty's nap the parrots had been brought to the top of the hill where the ceremony was to take place and were thus made accustomed to it. The object of the rehearsal, of course, was to please and fool the empress by making her feel happy and think she was so merciful that even dumb things would rather stay with her than have their freedom.

"The huge joke is this," concludes the princess. "While her majesty is setting the birds free there are a few eunuchs waiting at the rear of the hill to capture them and sell them again, and so, no matter how her majesty prays for their freedom, they will be caught at once."

Pushing Ahead in New York

IN the early morning the East side's push-cart army winds its sluggish way through cross streets to the busy marts. There are Greeks, Italians and Turks, clad in corduroy suits, white aprons, caps and plow shoes. They whistle and sing as they trudge along.

The picturesque little carts, topped by huge sun umbrellas, are filled with hot frankfurters, lemonade—2 cents a glass, chocolate bars, chewing gum and other staple gastronomic gim-cracks. They cover certain routes every day.

On the sides of their carts are painted inscriptions: "George, the Greek"; "Nick, the Busy Bee"; "Pedro, Who Loves America"; "Buy from Me!" and "I Want to Be a Big American Business Man." It is a touch of America in the making, for the push-cart men of today are the East-side shopkeepers of tomorrow.

A few short steps from Forty-second Street on Fifth Avenue is one of New York's largest confectionery stores. It is owned by a Greek who five years ago sold ice cream bricks at the curb in front. His was the success of syndication. With his earnings he started others pushing carts and took a percentage of the earnings.

The push-cart men live in adandoned slum cellars. As a class they are the thriftiest among the newly arrived immigrants. At dusk daily a long line of them is standing waiting to deposit their meager earnings in an all-night Bowery 10-cent savings bank.

They live through the hard, bitter days with high hopes. In far-off countries wives and sweethearts are waiting for news of their success. The police keep them moving and hundreds are arrested daily for blocking traffic but they pay their $2 fines—perhaps a week's earnings—and rarely complain. They seem to know that in the end they will succeed.—Indianapolis Star.

THE ORIENTAL IN THE UNITED STATES

Isa. 45:20-25

(CONQUEST MEETING)

I. Like and Unlike

We are accustomed to regard the Oriental races as unassimilable because of their strongly defined and persistent racial characteristics and attachments. It is difficult for some people to comprehend a 100 per cent American citizen who happened to be born of Mongolian parentage in China or Japan. Yet his very persistence and loyalty are traits that would seem commendable in an American living in a foreign country.

"Orientals come to America mainly for economic reasons, in this not differing from European immigrants. They first came in response to the demand for labor to build our transcontinental railroads and to develop the resources of Hawaii and the Pacific Coast. They have provided a fairly dependable supply of labor, easily moved and controlled to meet the needs of large contractors or the temporary demands of farm work.

"It will surprise many to know that there never has been any general movement of immigration to America from either China, Japan or India, such as we have seen from various countries of Europe. Those who have come are from small districts where poverty and overcrowding have forced the more enterprising young men to break the strong traditions which bind them to the family home.

"They should not be regarded as types of their countrymen, though they represent an average of the people of their districts. The Chinese in America are Cantonese, from three or four counties between Hongkong and Canton City. Japanese laborers come mostly from the southwest coast provinces of Japan. Hindus from the plains of northern India. In each case the inhabitants of these districts are especially enterprising and venture some, being distinguished as traders, fishermen, or soldiers."—G. W. HINMAN.

Love of country, a feeling of kinship for his own race, and a tendency to maintain in a strange land the customs and standards of home, are strongly marked characteristics of the Oriental peoples. Moreover, the accustomed standards are naturally far beneath those of America, judged economically. Hence it is possible for the Chinaman and the Japanese to accumulate a modest or a larger sum of money in America that will mean wealth in his native village.

Social and economic questions are bound to arise wherever two races dwell together. It is not so much the task of Christianity to solve these problems as to see that Christ is adequately and honestly presented to those who know him not. We must show them what Christianity really means. We must demonstrate that Christianity is a reality and not a mere name.

II. From the Flowery Kingdom

Of the nearly 80,000 Chinese in the United States, about 75 per cent live in the Pacific Coast and mountain states. Many of these are American-born and are therefore citizens, with all our rights and privileges and with the same love of our flag and country. As long ago as 1898 the American-born Chinese in Portland, Ore., formed a patriotic alliance, which, in 1915 was amalgamated with a similar organization in California. The result was the "Chinese-American Citizens' Alliance." The president is Leong Kow, managing editor of the Chinese Republic Journal. He says: "The welfare of this nation and of the native-born Chinese of the United States are the primary objects of this alliance. It is our purpose to educate American-born Chinese to become good citizens, loyal and truly American, and to promote harmonious relations between our country and China."

Fully one-third of the Chinese in America are engaged in farming. They have very effective labor unions which contract to supply any number of men at places where there is a temporary demand for labor. Many immigrants have found their way into more settled industries. Some have assumed the responsibility of renting land and farming on their own account. Nearly a third have engaged in trade or manufacturing. Every city, east or west, has its quota of well-patronized Chinese restaurants, stores, and laundries.

Though "Chinatown" is conceded to cover gambling dens and other vicious places, these form only a small element in the generally peaceful and industrious Chinese community. Compared with their total number in the United States, the proportion of Chinese in penal institutions and almshouses is small. There are very few dependents, and those are generally cared for by their own benevolent organizations.

Owing to crowded conditions, the death rate is high among Chinese in American cities. One-third of the deaths in San Francisco's Chinatown are from tuberculosis.

The majority of Chinese in America are men, there being more than ten times as many men as women. There is little intermarriage between Chinese and Americans. The Chinese generally look upon it with as much disfavor as Americans.

The Chinese immigrant was in the homeland bound by unchanging tradition and custom. Early marriage; a patriarchal system under which married sons remained at home, themselves and their families controlled by their parents; and grinding poverty, necessitating unremitting toil for the bare necessities of life, made him virtually a slave to conditions. In America all such restraints are removed. He is able to earn sufficient to indulge in luxuries, and has leisure to enjoy them. In these circumstances, is it not astonishing that habits of thrift and industry control him still, and that he conducts himself with such self-restraint that there are so few real prodigals when a Chinaman goes to a far country?

Baptists have been at work among the Chinese in America since 1854, when a mission was established in Sacramento. There is now a string of missions all along the Pacific Coast, under the supervision of Dr. Charles H. Shepherd, formerly a professor in Shanghai Baptist College.

This connection with the college acquainted him with the best and most promising young Chinese pastors. It is his plan to bring to America the finest of these young men to work among their own countrymen for a period of five or more years. At the end of that time, they will return to China, themselves enriched by the knowledge gained of America's spirit, government, society, and home life. Already several of these pastors have been settled in Portland, Sacramento, San Francisco, and other places, and are doing a good work.

Typical of our Chinese work is the First Chinese Baptist Church of San Francisco, situated in what the Chinese call "Queen of Heaven Temple Street," because a Chinese temple is located there. Its American name is Waverly Place. The mission serves as a sort of clearing-house, or receiving and transmitting station, whence come and go many Chinese from interior towns and eastern cities, to China, and return.

A kindergarten cares for the little children, a day-school is provided for non-English-speaking pupils of primary grade and other pupils up to the sixth grade. The pupils are drawn mostly from families or parts of families who have recently arrived from China. Those who are fresh from heathen villages of China are most attentive and receptive to Christian truth. It is all so new and beautiful that they believe America is indeed a beautiful flower-garden, and that Christianity is the religion of love.

The receiving-room of the school is one heterogeneous mass of big and little, old and young, those who have been years in America, and the newly arrived. All come to learn English, but carry away also some knowledge of Christ, the Saviour of men. This room daily presents great opportunity, for who knows what moment the son of some merchant or a relative of the consul may enter? Some remain for only one lesson. Others are soon hurried off across the continent. Some remain long enough not only to learn English, but to hear and believe the gospel. Some have returned to their native land, preaching the gospel in their native villages; others are active Christian workers in America.

With the Chinese, as with other foreigners, the surest way to help is by the personal touch. A busy Baptist state senator out in Idaho discovered that he had a Chinese neighbor. He called upon him, learned he had two children, a girl entering her teens, and a little boy. He offered to come for them each Sunday in his car to take them to Sunday school. As a result Senator Witty has had the joy of knowing of the conversion of the daughter and witnessing her baptism.

III. From the Land of the Rising Sun

The first Japanese students came to America in 1886. That same year, records show that 194 Japanese immigrants settled in this country. The passage of the Chinese Exclusion Law, in 1884, brought about the use of Japanese labor in California in place of the Chinese. Later they were employed in large numbers in railroad construction, so that by 1907 the number admitted reached 20,000. Then the labor unions protested, urging that the use of cheap Japanese labor was lowering the scale of wages of American workmen, and that the coming of so many of the yellow race was a danger to the white population. This resulted in the Japanese Exclusion agreement, under which the Japanese government undertakes to issue passports only to (1) former residents; (2) parents, wives, or children of former residents; (3) agriculturists.

A study of the immigration statistics shows that while a majority of Japanese immigrants are farm laborers, they furnish a considerable percentage of professional men, and the rate of illiteracy is less than among Italians, Lithuanians, and other Southern and Eastern European people.

A conspicuous work for Japanese farmers is maintained by Baptists at Madera, a neighbor of Los Angeles. On the outskirts of the town there are many small truck farms intensively cultivated by the Japanese. Men and women work side by side, and frequently children are assisting. Often a baby-carriage contains a sleeping child, while the mother works near by. On a well-located corner in the midst of these little farms stands a very attractive building. It is a Baptist church. Inside an equally attractive audience-room appeals to the beauty-loving Japanese, and back of it other rooms for Sunday school and social use.

A parsonage and garage-house, the efficient Japanese pastor, and the faithful Ford that carries him over his extended parish.

Across the harbor at East San Pedro another church-building stands, facing the blue Pacific, surrounded by the neat little homes of hundreds of Japanese fishermen, also with a Japanese pastor in charge. The men of the village go out in their boats and bring in the fish, while the women work in the canneries. In the findings of the Conference on Work among Orientals, Baptists were especially commended for seeking out these two needy and neglected fields.

Our largest work for the Japanese is in Seattle, where a church and community house are doing a wide-reaching work.

The missionaries in charge have a calling-list of over 1,000 names and are in close contact with over 2,000 women. A graded Sunday school, using the Keystone Graded Lessons, a B. Y. P. U., girls' and boys' clubs and other organizations flourish. Classes for teaching English and citizenship do not lack pupils, and social affairs enliven the community spirit fostered by church and home.

American churches frequently minister to their Japanese neighbors. A conspicuous example is the church at Everett, Wash., which has a class of Japanese doing good work. The women meet in one of the homes and sew, embroider, and knit under the direction of their teachers. As they work they are learning the language all the more readily because of their interest in their work. Bible stories are told during part of the hour. There is also an evening class for men. These read and discuss their text-books and the daily papers, and close the evening with the New Testament, a copy of which was given to each pupil by the pastor.

IV. From India's Coral Strand

The past decade has brought to the western coast, principally to central California, a new group of Orientals, East Indians from the plains of northern India. They are Hindus, Sikhs, and Mohammedans in religion, and are chiefly employed as agricultural laborers. They are generally very poorly housed, owing to the temporary character of their employment. The gang usually sleep together in one room, wrapped in their blankets, on the bare floor. Cooking is done over a hole in the ground, and the men stand or squat on the ground while they eat. They have little furniture and few cooking utensils. Their food consists largely of vegetables and large, flat cakes of bread in which the other food is rolled and eaten. Meat is occasionally used, but the Sikhs will not eat beef or the Mohammedans pork. The caste system often breaks up a gang into separate eating-groups, no one of which will touch food prepared by the other. East Indian prisoners in county jails have gone for days without food rather than eat anything prepared by one not of their caste.

The Hindus have shown little power to transport their religious practices to a new land, though cases are known where they have burned the dead body of a comrade and scattered the ashes on the river as they used to do on the Ganges.

Baptists have recently begun work for these neglected people. Rev. Theodore Fieldbrave, a native of India, but educated in America, has been appointed for evangelistic work among them. Last year he was married to Miss Alice Bux, a member of the faculty of the Isabella Thoburn College at Lucknow. Let us pray that through these consecrated young workers many may find Christ in America.

V. Oriental Students in the United States

America has long been a Mecca for students from the Orient. Inspired by their missionary teachers, graduates of mission schools have sought America for further study, and have graduated with honors from our most distinguished institutions of learning. Japanese and Chinese statesmen and professional men and women are possessors of degrees in arts, science, law, medicine, engineering, music—all that the best of American institutions have to give.

The greatest need of these students is Christian friendship and fellowship. They need to see Christianity in action, to be taken into Christian homes, to see America at its best.

At a recent meeting of the Foreign Mission Society, nine foreign students studying in America under the auspices of the society were presented. These young men are preparing to occupy positions of leadership in our Baptist work on their return home. Among them were two students from Japan, two from China, and one from the Philippines. Keigaku Kakuda, of Japan, would be the sixtieth in a direct line of Buddhist priests had he not been converted to Christianity. Instead he became a Baptist pastor and served two churches before coming to America, where he received his M. A. at Princeton, 1921, and afterward entered Newton Theological Seminary for special study before returning to Japan. Thomas C. Ling, of China, entered Brown University as a graduate student to specialize in industrial chemistry. H. A. Aguilin, from the Philippines, graduated from Colgate University and the Northern Baptist Seminary. He served a year as secretary for Filipino students in America under the Friendly Relations Committee of the International Y. M. C. A., and also had the unique privilege of serving an American church as pastor during his student life.—Adapted from Service.

Religious Education

Sunday School Hocus-Pocus

BY HENRY EDWARD TRALLE

To call the Sunday school "Bible school" does not make it a Bible school. I was in a church where the pastor said Bible school and the superintendent said Bible school and all the teachers said Bible school. It was in the church calendar Bible school, and on the front of the church it was Bible school. I attended the Sunday school in this church, to see if it really were a Bible school. It was not. There was not a Bible in it, and it was not a school. It was not organized as a school; it was not equipped as a school; it was not conducted as a school; and it was not taught as a school. It was a conglomeration of disassociated noises.

To call the Sunday school "church school" does not make it a church school. There is only one way to make a Sunday school a church school, and that is to get all the church into it and back of it, with church influence, church money, church confidence, and church enthusiasm. The church may elect the Sunday-school officers and teachers, in an annual "business meeting" with one-tenth of the membership present, but that does not make the Sunday school a church school, unless the church as a whole is supporting it.

Do you want the Sunday school to be a Bible school? All right, then make it that, but do not think you have made it that when you merely call it that. Such easy hocus-pocus will not do the business.

Do you want the Sunday school to be the church school? All right, then make it that, but do not think that you have made it that, when you merely call it that or merely cast an annual vote. No such hocus-pocus will effect the transformation.

If you want the Sunday school to be a Bible school, then see that the Bible is taught in it in accordance with the best educational theory, and by people who live the Bible life.

If you want the Sunday school to be the church school, then see that the organization is so enlarged and conducted as to include week-day instruction, church vacation schools, missionary education, and training in recreation and socialization, and that the church as a whole actually functions educationally through this organization. Then you will have a church school—after you have paid the price.

The New Order in the Sunday-school World

By popular vote the plan of reorganization by which the International Association and the Sunday-School Council of Evangelical Denominations become one body was enthusiastically ratified. Of the great throng who voted, only two negative voices were heard. From this time on the organization is to be known as the International Sunday-School Council of Religious Education. Most, if not all, the state associations will reorganize under the name of state councils. Thus is brought together in a single group the denominational leadership of the evangelical churches represented by the Sunday-school boards and publishing houses of some thirty denominations, and the voluntary territorial leadership hitherto represented by the state associations and the former International Association. Just what the implications of this reorganization are for the program of religious education in the field is not yet clear. The program yet remains to be worked out in detail. It is safe to predict that a way will be found without undue delay to eliminate the competition and overlapping which has existed in recent years between the work of the official church organization and the voluntary

We Never Know

"Preachers and teachers all are we—
Sowers of seeds unconsciously.
Our hearers are beyond our ken,
Yet all we give may come again
With usury of joy or pain.
We never know
To what one little word may grow.
See to it then that all your seeds
Be such as bring forth noble deeds."
—JOHN OXENHAM.

state associations. The conviction is very strong on the part of many that a way of doing this must be found. The unreached constituency is so overwhelmingly large; the typical Sunday school is so far removed from thoroughgoing efficiency; the total leadership available comes so far short of sufficiency for the task of immediate supervision and direction for Sunday-school work alone—not to speak of the rapidly-developing field of week-day religious instruction—that a unified program is an absolute necessity. A strong committee on education has been for some time working at the task of formulating the new program. It is a task that cannot be accomplished in a few months. Prolonged study, much consultation, and thorough discussion are necessary for its development. The administrative organization of the new association and of the state councils will necessarily depend very largely upon the program. Readjustment in organization must be made gradually as program and methods of work are determined.—Wade Crawford Barclay in Western Advocate.

International Sunday School Lesson for August 27

NEHEMIAH'S PRAYER

Lesson: Nehemiah 1:1-11. Golden Text: James 5:16

Setting

The year is 445 B. C. with Artaxerxes Longimanus on the Persian throne. Thirteen years have passed since Ezra's reforms. That these reforms had aroused the enmity of the foreign element of the people is probable and they had broken the walls which Ezra must have restored, although no account of his doing this is given. Shushan, or Susa, was one of the Persian capitals, the winter residence of the king, 300 miles east of Babylon.

Lesson

"Nehemiah, son of Hacaliah,"—so designated to distinguish him from Nehemiah of Ezra 2:2 and Nehemiah 3:16. "It came to pass in the month of Chislev"—the latter part of November and early part of December—"I was in Shushan the palace . . . one of my brethren and certain men of Judah came; and I asked them concerning the Jews; . . . and concerning Jerusalem." Nehemiah was all eagerness to hear good news of Jerusalem, but when he heard that "the remnant left are in great affliction and reproach; the wall of Jerusalem broken down, and the gates thereof burned with fire," he sat down and wept (Oriental custom) and mourned for a period of three months. He fasted and prayed, calling from the depths of his being upon "Jehovah, the God of heaven and earth, the great and terrible God, that keepeth covenant and lovingkindness with them that love him and keep his commandments." The very phrasing of this invocation shows how deeply Nehemiah was moved. Then comes confession of sins, a reminder of former promises and beseeching for answer to his prayer. "This man," in the last words of the prayer, was Artaxerxes, and Nehemiah's hope was that the heart of "this man" would be moved to allow him to give up his position of cupbearer (an office of high honor in the Persian court) and go to the help of his kinsmen in Jerusalem. In a few months opportunity came to make known his wish to Artaxerxes, who granted him leave of absence and appointed him governor of Jerusalem. Accompanied by a military escort he set out.

Leading Thoughts

1. Nehemiah prayed as though every thing depended upon God, but he also did all he could to move the heart of man. 2. Faith and works must be companionous. 3. "He that prayeth for another is heard for himself."

Church Vacation Schools

By THOMAS S. YOUNG

The following are samples of reports that are beginning to come into our Philadelphia office from all over the country. Let us have yours.

Bethlehem, Pa., Rev. Fred R. McArthur, pastor: We started off with an enrolment of 444 and a teaching staff of seventy-four. Our average attendance is about 350. (79 per cent is a very high average attendance for a vacation school.) Plainwell, Mich., Rev. Mr. Mackintosh, pastor: We closed with a registration of 170 and twenty-eight teachers.

Alton, Ill., Rev. D. T. Magill, pastor: School was a marked success, closing Wednesday, July 13. Average attendance was 125.

Galesburg, Ill., Rev. Charles Durden, pastor: Every feature of our school emphasized the fact that it was a school of religion with child evangelism as its objective. The children loved it and wanted it to continue. The enrolment was over 200 with an average attendance of 130. We had fifteen helpers and two salaried workers. We had five visits from "Dodo" to the delight of the children. We held a mission study class for older boys and girls every day. A picnic and an evening session of the school with adults in attendance closed our work.

Every Baptist church holding or working in a vacation school should send a report to the Church Vacation School Division of the Publication Society, Philadelphia. Send for blanks.

Russian River Church Vacation School

It was an experiment. It has been a success. A large camping ground beneath the giant Redwoods by the side of a beautiful river. Thousands of people living in the open and many children. The school was held under the trees. The children responded readily to the invitation to spend the morning hours in school. The time was equally divided between Bible work and craft work. One evening was devoted to a "weeney bake," with songs and games. On another evening after a chalk-talk, poppers were produced and a bag of corn and the huge bonfire cooperated in producing popcorn.

The school closed Friday, July 14, and commencement was held in the evening. The parents of the children and many friends were present to view the fine display of articles made by the children and listen to the features of program as presented.

This kind of school work found a responsive chord in the campers. Many saw in this school for the first time this kind of educational work. A unanimous vote requested the school next year.

The Santa Rosa Baptist Church did its full share in making this school possible. The other organizations cooperating were the Publication Society and the Northern California Convention.

Several members of the Santa Rosa Church assisted in the teaching, among whom were: Mrs. Williams, in charge of the kindergarten, Mrs. White, Mrs. Shaffer, Mrs. Godfrey, Miss Elizabeth Pressley and Mr. Williams.

From the convention office were: Drs. Thomas, Brinstad and Tingley, Mr. Bancroft, Mr. Willey, Mrs. Robinson. Pastor and Mrs. Kern of Gerber were also on the faculty. Others helping were: Dr. Shepherd of the Home Mission Society, and Mr. Barrett of Petaluma.

NOTE: Russian River is a beautiful stream in the region north of San Francisco, where thousands of city folks go camping in the summer.

The Daily Vacation Bible School

By F. A. HAYWARD

Indianapolis has closed a most successful year with its daily vacation Bible school program. Two years ago not more than two schools had attempted anything of the sort in the Baptist churches in the city. This year eighteen schools have undertaken the work with an enrolment of more than 2,500 pupils. Early in the season conferences were held in the executive board of the Federated churches and the board unanimously decided to put money into the movement and instructed the executive secretary to ask the department of religious education to push the program. The Rev. P. J. Morris, chairman of the department of religious education and his committee decided to ask Mr. John Barnett, of Franklin College, to act as city superintendent.

The first large institute held was at the First Church where for two days the program was intensive and active. The second institute was held at the Mt. Paran Negro Church for the Negro schools. Many other smaller conferences and institutes have been held since. About 225 teachers have given service and so far as we know without recompense this year. More than 2,500 pupils have been enrolled and the most remarkable programs have been attempted. Bible study outlines were typewritten and habit stories included and given each principal. Craft ideas have since been included in the mailed copy. Conferences have been held with the teachers and principals at headquarters and the spirit of loyalty and cooperation is enjoyable.

The "play" games, yells, songs and picnic ideas have gone far beyond our records. Genius has expended itself. The commencement programs given Friday night, July 28, in the schools were of a high order and would do credit to any common school. The craft displays and the "side luncheons" added materially to the interest and financial returns. People came—wondered; remained, entranced, and went away with a new vision. No parent attending the commencement programs will need to be convinced of the value of this great movement and no pastor undertaking this summer school will ever again need urging to begin the good work.

New York City has 250 daily vacation Bible schools this summer, meeting in churches and social centers under the auspices of the Metropolitan Federation D. V. B. S. Four hundred superintendents and 1,700 instructors are directing the work, which is expected to reach a total of 70,000 children. Stanley B. Hazzard, a Baptist minister, is chairman of the training-school committee.

FIRST CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL, GALESBURG, ILLINOIS, REV. CHARLES DURDEN PASTOR.

Our Own Folks

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

On to Green Lake

Everything is in readiness for the Baptist Assembly at Green Lake. There will be two full weeks of Baptist programs there this year. The ministers' retreat and the W. W. G. house party began August 7 and continued for three days. These are followed by the state convention of the young people, and after that the assembly for ten days. A good strong program for the assembly has been prepared. Some of the faculty and speakers are Boyd, Alborn, Stewart, Hulbert, LeGrand, Koehler, Ingram and Tunison. Dr. Judson Thomas, of Chicago, had charge of the program for the ministers' retreat. The W. W. G. house party for the Wisconsin girls planned on taking care of 100 girls. Miss Alma Noble was the guest of honor. Everything indicates a big time at Green Lake this year.

Resignations

The resignation of Dr. Henry Clarke, of Racine, has been reported, but the farewell service held on the last Sunday in June was an outstanding feature of the breaking of the pastoral relationship. Nine congregations attended the closing service, each one of them dispensing with their own services for the evening. Special tributes were paid to Dr. Clarke by several speakers, and messages from old friends in the East were read. Dr. Clarke has held a large place in Wisconsin affairs. He was a member of the board of managers of the Baptist convention, and has been honored as the president of the board and as a member of the executive committee, as well as on other committees. He was also a member of the trustees of Wayland Academy. Dr. Clarke has not yet decided what his future plans are to be, but for a time will continue to live in Racine.

Dr. W. T. Dorward, pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church of Milwaukee, for the past twelve years, surprised his congregation on Sunday morning June 23, by reading his resignation to them. The resignation takes effect September 1. He has not announced his plans for the future, except that for a time he will be open for supply work and lecture engagements. Dr. Dorward is well known throughout the city and the state of Wisconsin as a lecturer and public speaker. He has had a long pastorate and one that has been successful despite the changing conditions of his large field. The church will not call a pastor just at present, but will secure a permanent supply for six months or more, while they are looking about for a successor to Dr. Dorward.

Wayland Academy

The August number of the Wisconsin Baptist contains the reports of the committee appointed to investigate Wayland Academy. The reports are ample and thorough. Principal Brown and his board requested the investigation, and the board of managers of the Baptist convention appointed the committee to investigate. I quote the following from one of the reports: "Moral training, educational development, proper recreational and social life, mental and moral caliber of the faculty, etc., leave nothing to be desired at Wayland. The type of religious training and Bible teaching that is given should be entirely satisfactory to those who hold to the modern historical method of biblical interpretation; it is certainly more or less unsatisfactory to those who hold to the literal method of biblical interpretation."

Some Notes From The Field

Rev. R. E. Moss has resigned the pastorate of the church at Clinton.

Rev. E. W. Palmer, of Darien, has accepted the call to become pastor of Berlin Baptist Church. He will begin his work on the new field September 1.

Rev. Arthur Woods, of Iowa, has accepted the call to the pastorate of the churches at Hustler and New Lisbon. He will begin his work soon.

Rev. R. H. Crawford, of Illinois, has accepted the call to the Pewaukee and Martin churches. He enters a difficult field, but one of promise.

The church at Neenah recently suffered a loss from fire. A loss of $6,000 was covered by insurance. Repairs are being made and by autumn the church will be back in the plant ready for a splendid year of work.

The Honey Creek Church is rapidly pushing its new building to completion. The entire plant, consisting of community hall, and church auditorium was burned two years ago. Without cancelling the New World Movement subscriptions it has gone ahead and will have one of the finest rural plants in the land when the church building is completed.

The South Baptist Church of Milwaukee will be able to enter the first unit of its new building in October. This unit will house the Sunday school and have a temporary chapel. The new location is strategic, and will prove a great challenge to the church and its pastor.

The state convention will meet this year at Oshkosh. Among the speakers will be President Clarence Barbour, Dr. H. F. Stilwell, Dr. W. E. Chalmers, Dr. Joseph C. Robbins and several others. It is proposed to give a survey of the whole task of Wisconsin Baptists. Pastor Mintz and his good people are making plans to entertain one of the largest conventions in recent years.

The Work in Porto Rico

By HERBERT FORD

Three more pastors have been ordained recently in Porto Rico—Josué Díaz, pastor at Yauco; Enrique Inurigarro, of the First Church at Ponce; and José Perez, pastor of the Playa Church of Ponce. These last two are natives of Spain, being the only two Spaniards connected with the Porto Rican mission. Both have given faithful service over a long period of years. Mr. Inurigarro, however, being a comparatively recent acquisition to our denomination. He has been a gospel preacher of rare devotion and usefulness in Spain, Venezuela, and Porto Rico. His statement of Christian experience was without doubt the most inspiring that the writer has ever heard given in an ordination council. Mr. Díaz, of Yauco, has been for some time one of our most progressive and dependable pastors, and his church comes pretty close to being the best organized and most efficiently conducted of any church on the island. During the war he was given leave of absence from the work, and filled a responsible position with the army Y. M. C. A.

Rev. G. A. Riggs, general missionary for Porto Rico, is regaining his health gradually, after an enforced rest caused by an operation at the Presbyterian hospital in San Juan. Some of his friends felt that he got back on the job too soon for his own good, but you can't keep a good man down.

A movement has recently arisen in Porto Rico which has caused intense excitement throughout the island, but so far as can be observed, has worked no injury to our cause. A young woman of San Lorenzo has put forth claims to miraculous powers of healing. Two days a week she visits a spring on a nearby farm, goes into a trance, consults and advises the sick and crippled, and dispenses the "magic" waters of the spring. She has made a remarkable play to the superstitious. As the road to her "clinic" passes the writer's house, he has had opportunity to observe the crowds. At times when he has counted, he found an average of eleven cars a minute, and it was impossible to enumerate the swarms on foot. The writer is convinced that the girl is sincere. She is almost illiterate, and her head has been turned by spiritism. She accepts no fees for her treatments. Her trances are undoubtedly hypnotic, evidently induced by a male relative, whose directions she seems to follow implicitly. It speaks volumes for the solid biblical instruction of the members of our churches that they have not yielded to the popular clamor. So far no authentic cure has come to the writer's attention.

The third annual summer conference of Christian workers has just come to a close in San Germán, Porto Rico. It was easily the most inspiring and all round successful conference ever held in the island. Several persons who have attended similar gatherings at Silver Bay, Northfield and elsewhere, unhesitatingly pronounced its spirit as in every way comparable to those. It was necessarily smaller and with a less extensive array of talent, but in quality it left nothing to be desired. Dr. Samuel G. Neil, of our own publication society was the high light of the conference. His daily messages were of the highest order. Special mention should be made of three: "The Gospel of Good Cheer," "The Foolishness of Preaching," and "The Temptations of the Ministry." Another visitor from outside the island who made a large contribution to the spirit and success of the gathering was Mr. Huffman, of the United Brethren, who is at the head of the union evangelical mission in Santo Domingo. These interdenominational conferences are the outgrowth of our own Baptist summer conferences which were held for several years, and which proved of such success that our brethren of other communions were anxious to have their influence more generally extended. In all three of the conferences our Baptist leaders, both native and continental, have taken the leadership, not because they sought place, but because the big ones naturally come to the top when the basket is shaken. In this conference, in addition to Doctor Neil, our pastor at Caguas, A. M. Diaz, gave a series of penetrating studies on spiritism. In athletics we ranked highest. The spirit of buffoonery was not to be crowded out, and some most ridiculous Ku Klux Klan performances and mock trials were pulled off. Doctor Neil's rollicking personality and his singing of Scotch songs endeared him to all. His addresses in our Baptist churches before and after the conference were a round of glory. It is safe to say that no speaker from the North ever exceeded him in getting a hold on the affections of the Porto Rican people.

Rev. H. Cotto Reyes, Baptist pastor at Mayaguez, has just been elected editor of the Puerto Rico Evangelico, the union evangelical paper. Of four editors, three have been Baptists.

From an Indian Missionary

I enclose herewith copy of a letter from Rev. Alfred Lord, Indian missionary at Coarse Gold and Nippinnawassie, which you may like to publish in THE BAPTIST. Alfred Lord is a full-blooded Indian. He is from a Canadian tribe but I do not know which one. He is a fine Christian man, and doing a splendid work.

C. W. BRINSTAD,
Exec. Sec. Northern Calif. Convention.
(We run it "as is."—Editor.)

Coarse Gold, Calif., July 3, 1922.
I just came back from Reno, Nevada. Now I thank God that he helps me in a wonderful way. We held the meetings at the Indian Camp, Reno, Nevada 12 days very night. Brother Scott and I, we work together. He leads the singing every night, and I preach the gospel to the Indians. 57 Indians converted, baptized 38 by brother Scott. Organize the church 35 members. The Indians at Nevada just began work outside of Reno. Few of them after they converted they go out to work. Brother Scott will baptize them some other time. Thank God that the Indians except Christ. Medicine man and gambling man, and drinking man, they all came to Christ, and we bring them in the church of Christ. Praise God for his word its true that saved from sin. Remember Reno Indian Camp Baptist Mission in your prayer.

Sincerely yours,
ALFRED LORD.

Annual Meeting of Oregon Baptists

The report presented to Baptists of Oregon in their annual meeting at Columbia City on July 26 by Rev. O. C. Wright, executive secretary, indicated a year of marked advance.

Over $95,000 was raised this year for mission work, two-thirds of which was sent for work outside of Oregon and beyond the seas.

Receipts for work in Oregon amounted to $103,385 of which $88,000 was invested, $15,385 paid in salaries, approximately $30,000 invested in buildings, and a large part of the remainder was invested in permanent income-bearing profits. More has been added to the income-bearing permanent funds the past two years than in all other years of the Baptist convention in Oregon. It is also to be noted that more money is being invested in new churches and parsonages—if either one of Portland's two finest Baptist churches are excepted—than Baptists have spent on buildings during all the years since 1844 when the first Baptist church in Oregon was organized.

A new era of church building is at hand: New church buildings will soon be erected at Medford, Riddle, Astoria, Bend, Hillsboro, Broadbent, McMinnville, Gresham, Eugene, and in Portland, Sellwood, La Comb, Arleta, Grace Montavilla, and the Mt. Olivet Negro Baptist Church. Parsonages at Grants Pass, La Grande, Veneta, Gresham, and the Glencoe parsonage in Portland. New churches dedicated during the year were, Fairview, Cherry Grove, and the new Italian Chapel at Portland.

Fifty missionary workers have been employed for whole or part time during the year, and the baptisms into the Baptist churches will probably reach 1,800. Sunday-school attendance has increased about 40 per cent, and the young people's work has shown great progress.

For the first time in its history, Linfield (McMinnville) College, is out of debt and has received during the year from Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield, of Spokane, gifts in property estimated at more than $250,000.

A report to adopt a quota of $100,000 to be raised this year as Oregon's part of the $10,000,000 goal of the Northern Baptist Convention was approved.

Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions

By MARY E. BAMFORD

Baptist women did their share of work at the sixteenth annual assembly of the Federate School of Missions held at Mount Hermon, July 8-15, under the auspices of the international committee representing the women's boards of home and foreign missions. Mrs. J. M. Davis, of Oakland First Church, and Mrs. George Thomas of the same church did valiant service at the registration taken day after day. There was a larger registration than for years—183. Divided by denominations, it was as follows: Baptists 21, Christians 8, Congregationalists 11, English Lutherans 4, Methodists 46, Methodists South 2, Episcopalians 2, Presbyterians 78, United Presbyterians 4, Catholics 1, Plymouth Brethren 1, Salvation Army 1, not designated 4.

Mrs. George Thomas distinguished herself by writing and putting on a pageant called "The Peace of India" which was a beautiful demonstration of the text-book. Mrs. C. Caldwell, of Oakland, took the part of "India" and many of the women of the pageant were from Oakland First Church.

How glad Baptists were to see Dr. John Snape arrive! Dr. Snape lectured at Mount Hermon on Thursday night, but before that Baptists had a chance to meet him at their "rally" at the Sanbourne Cottage where he told an interested circle about the convention at Indianapolis.

The Wright Act was presented at two of the sessions and was endorsed by the Federate School. At the Friday noon "fellowship luncheon" Mrs. J. M. Davis was toastmistress. Deaconess Dorsett, a Baptist from New York City, was one registered in the Federate School. The two text-books "Building with India" and "The Trend of the Races" were taught by Dr. C. C. McCown and Mrs. Moffitt Rhodes. Rev. Ralph N. Rowe of Eureka Baptist Church sang one evening.

11 p.m. More than 100 delegates will take the night train to the general conference at St. Paul, Minn., which opens its session the following evening.

Death of Notable Christian Woman

No greater testimony to the power of the gospel can ever be given than the life of a noble Christian woman. That this is as true in mission lands as elsewhere has been strikingly emphasized by the recent death of Mrs. Mercedes Marchán, wife of the Baptist pastor at Juncos, Porto Rico. For seventeen years a pastor's wife, the mother of ten children, she has lived a life of such rare devotion to her Master, that her death, May 20, after a two-weeks' illness was the occasion of an unprecedented demonstration of grief and love on the part of the entire evangelical population of the island.

Born of a Spanish father and a Porto Rican mother, she passed her entire life in the island of her birth. She was possessed of a mind of unusual clearness and poise, but at the same time had the sincerity and humility of a country girl. Never flippant or unduly animated in conversation, she was the soul of cheeriness and social graciousness. She had that culture which comes of refinement of birth and purity of soul. No small part of her husband's pastoral success has been due to the fact that his family life was a living benediction to the community.

Mrs. Marchán was a constant aid to her husband in the work of the church. Though she kept no servant, she did a prodigious amount of religious and charitable work. She taught a Sunday-school class during her entire married life, was president of a local children's welfare society, was an indefatigable worker in the parent-teacher organization, and in the penny lunch for poor school children. Her intellect and natural gifts of leadership made her the logical and inevitable leader in any movement for the general good, such as Red Cross activities.

During her brief illness practically every other subject of conversation was suspended in the town, or where Christian people were gathered together. At the funeral service in the church, so few could enter the building that an open-air service was later held near the gate of the cemetery, where a series of discourses were given by representatives of different sections of the public. No woman in Porto Rico ever had so impressive a funeral, and only an occasional man, some great patriot like Muñoz Rivera or Doctor Barbosa. For blocks the procession packed the streets tightly between the houses on both sides.

church largely through the influence of special evangelistic services previously held by Rev. M. Favro. The pastor has a men's class of fifty-four. This class has pledged $1,200 toward the building fund and in addition each member has pledged a penny a day. The church expects soon to erect a new church building on the corner of Brayton Avenue and Stafford Road where the church has purchased a lot at a cost of $10,000. The pastor is having his vacation during the month of August. On August 6 he preached at the North Baptist Church of New Bedford, and on August 20 he will preach at Central Church of Tiverton, R. I.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. CHARLES P. MACGREGOR, pastor First Church, Manchester, is spending his vacation supplying the Baptist church at Winter Harbor, Maine. Since beginning his pastorate, November 1, 140 members have been received, seventy of these by baptism, and the church has been strengthened in many ways. During this period 1,400 pastoral calls have been made. A vacation school was conducted in July with an enrolment of over 150, and an average attendance of 100. Sixteen young women and three young men rendered assistance during a part or the whole school period. Summer supplies include Rev. M. R. Froshay, pastor for ten years immediately preceding the present pastorate.

NEW YORK

TWO UNIQUE EVENTS have marked the work in First Church, Elmira, in recent weeks. One Sunday morning Rev. W. T. Henry, pastor emeritus, who began his work forty-five years ago, baptized five of his grandchildren. Nearly thirty years ago the mother of one of the candidates was the first to be baptized in the present baptistery. At a meeting of the board of trustees the resignation of Mr. J. Sloat Fassett, chairman, was accepted with regret. For twenty-eight years Mr. Fassett served in this capacity and before this his father, Newton P. Fassett, held the place for eighteen years. By a resolution adopted by the board Mr. Fassett was made honorary chairman in order that the board "may have the inspiration of advice, which shall always be cherished his moral support and sound temporal as a fitting complement to the spiritual guidance of his beloved contemporary in service, pastor emeritus, William Thomas Henry."

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Chemund River Baptist Association will be held with the Pine City Baptist Church instead of the Wellsburg church, as announced in the New York state annual. This change has been made necessary on account of the resignation of Rev. E. D. Chapman, pastor of the Wellsburg church. Mr. Chapman has had to give up the work on account of ill health.

REV. H. C. MYERS settled at Otego last fall. For several years the church had only had a Sunday afternoon service. I tried to raise about $400 per year and had sales and suppers to raise that amount. In January the pastor conducted evangelistic meetings with good results. February was given to stewardship, preaching on the subject every Sunday morning and studying the subject every mid-week service. Of seventy-eight resident member sixty-eight signed tithing cards. Quite extensive improvements have been made on parsonage. The every-member-canvass secured pledges for $1,400 for current ex-

A MOST INTERESTING and helpful daily vacation Bible school was held at the Cutts Avenue Baptist church, Saco, during the month of July. The number enrolled was ninety-five; the average attendance, seventy-six. There were four different nationalities among the children; visitors were present from four states of the union. The pastor, Rev. A. D. Paul, was dean of the school, assisted by Mrs. Paul and six helpers. Plans are being laid to hold a similar session next year.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE SUPPLIES for the pulpit of the Cutts Avenue Church, Saco, during the month of August: Aug. 6, Dr. Arthur Cleaves, pastor-elect of First Church Providence, R. I.; Aug. 13, Rev. B. M. Osgood, pastor First Church, Fort Dodge, Iowa; Aug. 20, Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C.; Aug. 27, Dr. Arthur Cleaves; Sept. 3, Dr. W. R. Wood, Haverhill, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE SUMMER CAMPS OF THE North Adams Church and school have finished another successful season. Fifty boys spent eight days on the shores of Lake Ashmere, thirty miles from town. These then gave place to forty girls. This year Pastor J. A. Vachon, of Cheshire, with his Boy Scout troop, camped with the boys from North Adams. The camps are under the direction of Superintendent H. B. Clark, and Pastor Daniel H. Clare. The purpose is not only to give the young folk a pleasant outing, but also to enable the leaders to get in closer touch with them, and impart to them some spiritual benefit. The work of these summer camps, begun by the former pastor, Rev. J. Foster Wilcox, is now a regular part of the summer activity of the church. Over $1,500 is invested in camp equipment, including four steel boats. The church edifice, which occupies the most commanding site in the city, was renovated on the exterior last summer. This year the interior is being re-decorated. Every automobile which crosses the famous Mohawk Trail passes the corner of this church. The pastor, Rev. Daniel H. Clare has entered upon his fifth year with this loyal and wide-awake people. The pulpit supplies for August are Rev. A. A. Morrison, of Pittsfield; Rev. Harry Everett, of Jersey City; Albert T. Davis, of East Orange, and Rev. J. Austin Huntley of Troy, N. Y. The World Wide Guild sent four delegates to Northfield. The young people's society will have four delegates at the young people's conference there, and in August the entire force connected with the primary and beginner's departments, numbering seventeen persons, will be in attendance at Ocean Park.

CONNECTICUT

THE BAPTIST HOUSE OF WORSHIP on Willington Hill has been undergoing a thorough renovation at a cost of several thousand dollars. The improvements consist of a new roof, stained glass windows, electric lights, hardwood floor in the auditorium. The moving spirit in this work was Miss Rosa O. Hall of South Willington, a devoted member of the Baptist division of the Federation. On Friday, June 30, at 2:30 p. m., the annual business meeting of the Federated Church (Baptist and Congregational) was held in the newly appointed house of worship. Reports showed the work of the church to be in a flourishing condition, under the leadership of Rev. W. V. Allen. Rededicatory services were held in the evening with an address by Rev. H. B. Sloat and dedicatory prayer by Dr. A. B. Coats, secretary of the state convention. This service was followed by a union communion service with the pastor in charge, assisted by Rev. Mr. Reece and Rev. F. W. Tholen, pastor of the Stafford Baptist Church.

MASSACHUSETTS

DURING THE YEAR OF Rev. William Clements' pastorate at Third Church, Fall River, he has received into the church twenty new members who came into the penses. The women paid some $60 for the continuation campaign, the church is co-operating in the New World Movement and a real spirit of evangelism prevails among the members.

THE AUTUMN WORK OF PARK CHURCH of Utica begins in May, with the appointment and organization of commissions to develop plans for various departments of church activity, based on careful surveys. These commissions deal with religious education, fellowship and evangelism, and young people's work. A well-balanced program is worked out for the various young people's organizations, including the phases of recreation, education and social service. More than one-fourth of the present membership of the church has been added in the past three years during the pastorate of Rev. C. J. Oxley. A substantial payment has been made this year on the church debt, and pledges given for the complete liquidation of this mortgage which has been of long standing. During July a vacation Bible school was in full swing through the hottest days. With an enrollment of more than 200, the school has accomplished so much in the three years of its existence that it has been the pioneer to inspire a system of such schools among a number of churches of the city. At every communion service during these three years new members have been waiting for the hand of fellowship, and the church has set a new record for baptisms during the last year.

NEW JERSEY

NORTH BAPTIST CHURCH, Camden, James Dalton Morrison, minister. In June Mr. Morrison, who was called to the North Baptist Church before his graduation from Rochester Theological Seminary, concluded his first year as pastor. It has been a year of steady, constructive progress. Over fifty from the advanced departments of the Bible school made decisions for Christ. Twenty-nine members have been added to the church, twenty-three by baptism. A girls' weekly club with classes in religious education, public speaking, White Cross work, sewing, gymnasium, etc., was organized under the direction of Mrs. F. Wayland Ayer, in October with about forty members; by spring the membership had been increased to eighty. Over a period of six months 60 new scholars were added to the Bible school without any campaign or special rives for members. Miss Edna M. Lane, graduate of the Bible Institute for Christian Workers of Philadelphia, took up her duties July 1 as minister's assistant. On September 1 Mr. Osgood H. McDonald, a graduate of McMaster Institute, and at present director of boys' work for the Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec, will take up his duties at the North Church as director of religious education. The North Church not only over-subscribed its apportionment in the New World Movement campaign but to date has overpaid several thousands the amount subscribed, having paid in all over $57,000. Mr. Morrison is taking his vacation during the month of August, and is visiting at Lakesbury, Ont., Can., and for two Sundays will supply Westmount Baptist Church of Montreal. In Mr. Morrison's absence, Rev. Clinton Wunder of the Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y., and Dr. A. McAlpine of New York City, will apply the pulpit of the North Baptist Church. Mr. Wunder will preach August 13, and Dr. McAlpine on August 20 and 27.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

EARLY IN THE PRESENT YEAR the Falls of Schuylkill Baptist Church, Philadelphia, received a pleasant surprise in the promise of a memorial organ. That promise has been fulfilled and more. Mr. and Mrs. John Stinson have given to the church a splendid two-manual pipe organ complete. It was built and installed by the Estey Co. The organ is a memorial to the mother of Mrs. John Stinson, Mrs. Sarah Ann Ayrton. It will be dedicated on the anniversary of the mother's birth. Mrs. Stinson, shortly after announcing the gift, offered to become a committee of one to raise funds to erect an enlarged platform and pulpit and to repaint the interior and exterior of the church. Through her diligent efforts over $1,700 have been raised to renovate the auditorium and to paint the exterior of the church. Dedication of the organ and of the renovated auditorium took place Sunday, July 16. The Junior society presented to the church a first class pulpit Bible. On Monday evening the Falls Male Chorus sang several selections and Dr. Adam Geibel rendered organ selections. On Wednesday evening there was a union service of the Falls Protestant churches, bringing greetings and providing special singing. Dr. John Hainer, president of the Philadelphia Baptist Association presented the greetings of his association. In the year and five months that Rev. Edwin W. Saylor has been pastor of Falls Church the church and parsonage have been improved by the church members. Evidence of progressiveness is seen week by week.

ORDAINED AT TURBOTVILLE, Pa., David H. Winters, July 13. Sermon by Rev. R. M. Hunsicker; charge to the candidate, Rev. James Patterson; charge to the church, Rev. F. G. Bangs, ordination prayer, Rev. A. M. Gregg.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Keystone Academy

The sudden death of Principal Curtis P. Coe a few days after the successful commencement of the academy brought gloom and near despair to the trustees and friends of the institution. But as Elisha followed Elijah without interruption of the work, so Prof. Curtis E. Coe, eldest son of Principal Curtis P. Coe, was found prepared and on July 3 was unanimously elected to fill the place made vacant by the death of his honored father. Young Mr. Coe is in every way well qualified for this position; he taught for two years in a prominent school for boys in New York and part of that time was also assistant administrator, thus gaining valuable experience in school government. He is of pleasing personality and possesses many of the qualities which made his father so successful.

Keystone should have larger consideration from the Baptists of Pennsylvania; hitherto it has had but scant recognition beyond a radius of about thirty-five miles from Factoryville. It is an important feeder to Bucknell University, and although not a ministerial school, it is thoroughly Christian and has been responsible for the development of many Christian ministers. It is the only Baptist secondary school in the state. It was well born. Dr. John H. Harris, eminent educator, president emeritus of Bucknell, established it more than fifty years ago; it is beautifully situated among the hills of northeastern Pennsylvania, close enough to large cities for convenience and understanding of their complex life and yet far enough removed to avoid their annoyances and allurements; it has an honored history and is now looking forward to its best work. We are not appealing for money, although we are asking those who subscribed to the endowment fund three years ago to pay their pledges. We are asking the great Baptist denomination throughout Pennsylvania for its genuine interest, its moral support; having this we shall then have the world's best treasures, the boys,—your boys.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

REV. C. M. RUPE, formerly well known in Ohio and other sections as pastor and preacher, has been called to be supply pastor of the First Baptist Church, Fort Myers, Fla., during a pastorless interval.

CHARLES PALMER was ordained at the Pleasant Valley church of the Mansfield Association of Ohio, June 8, moderator, Rev. W. A. Carlisle, of Shelby; clerk, Rev. L. A. Wood, of Mansfield; sermon by Rev. Robert Hughes, of Bucyrus. Mr. Palmer becomes pastor of the Pleasant Valley Church.

PASTOR CHARLES WALSH has removed from New Lexington, O., to Sidney, beginning his ministry there August 1.

IN ACCORDANCE WITH a call from the First Church of North Fairfield, to the churches of the Huron Association, delegates from the churches at Attica, Auburn Center, Fitchville, New London, North Fairfield, Monroeville and Norwalk, met in council at North Fairfield on July 19, 1922, to consider the advisability of setting apart to the work of the gospel ministry, Mr. P. J. Garcia. The council voted unanimously its satisfaction with the experience and views of Mr. Garcia, and voted to proceed with the ordination service at 8 p. m. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. H. A. Woodard, of Norwalk, the pastors of the churches represented having charge of the other usual parts of the ordination service. J. Frank Smith acted as moderator; Jett F. Mohr, as clerk.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH WEDDING Anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. H. H. Hoyt was recently celebrated by the First Church of Loudonville. The good-will expressed on the occasion had its climax in the presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt of a silver casserole containing twenty-five silver dollars and a number of checks. Mr. Hoyt came to Loudonville from the Arlington Street Church of Akron, where during a pastorate of fifty-three months he received 478 members into the church.

LESTER W. BECKLEY and Grover L. Kettering were ordained in a double ordination service at Loudonville, Ohio, July 20; moderator, Rev. Robert Hughes of Bucyrus; clerk, Rev. L. A. Wood, of Mansfield; sermon by Rev. Wm. L. Pettingill, of Wilmington, Delaware, dean of the Philadelphia School of The Bible. Mr. Beckley is from Mt. Gilead, and is a graduate of the Philadelphia School of The Bible, class of 1921. He becomes pastor of the Vermillion church, address Loudonville. Mr. Kettering is a graduate of the Philadelphia School of The Bible, class of 1922, and becomes pastor of the Green Camp church.

MICHIGAN

JULY 25 A NUMBER OF REPRESENTATIVES of the churches of the Detroit Association, in response to an invitation of the Baptist Church at Wyandotte, Mich., met for the purpose of considering the ordination of Brother Emanuel B. Jacobsen. Mr. Jacobsen is a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary, and was recently called by the Wyandotte Baptist Church as its pastor. The representatives organized into a council with Dr. H. C. Gleiss, superintendent of Detroit Baptist missions, as moderator and Rev. H. C. Wedel, of River Rouge, as clerk. The council was satisfied with Mr. Jacobsen's statements as to his Christian experience, his call to the ministry, and his views on Christian doctrine, and the council recommended to proceed with the ordination. The service of ordination was conducted by Dr. H. C. Gleiss. Invocation by Rev. W. A. Steinkraus, pastor of Scotfen Ave. church, Detroit, and scripture reading by Rev. E. W. Jennett, of Detroit. Ordination sermon was preached by Rev. W. R. Shaw, pastor of Conley Memorial Church, Detroit. Rev. Geo. E. Dawkins, pastor of Royal Oak, gave the charge to the candidate and the right hand of fellowship. The charge to the church was given by Rev. W. B. F. Brown, former pastor of Wyandotte church. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. E. B. Jacobsen.

DR. H. M. FORD WHO has been the pastor of the College Church, Hillsdale, for the past three years has tendered his resignation and it has been accepted with regret. The resignation takes effect Oct. 1. During his pastorate of three years 127 have been added to the church membership so that the membership is the largest in its history. The church went over the top in the New World Movement pledging $21,000 and two-fifths of it is paid. One thousand dollars has been raised for Eastern Relief so that benevolences and charities have increased fourfold. The congregations have been excellent and uniform. The church is in a prosperous condition. Dr. Ford has accepted no calls as yet.

REV. S. J. SLOUGH, PASTOR of Clark Lake Church was pleasantly surprised at his home Friday, July 28, by a company of the church congregation gathering there to remind him of his birthday. An enjoyable time was had and a bountiful dinner served. Mr. Slough was presented with a token to show the appreciation of the church for his faithful work during the past two years. Rev. S. J. Slough and family will take a two weeks' vacation and spend the time at Wolf Lake.

REV. L. S. SLAYBAUGH has closed his first year's work with Bethel Church located just out of Royal Oak and in the district of Berkeley. It is a new church and when Mr. Slaybaugh came to the field, there was a membership of 31. During the year there have been added 43. Four letters have been granted, and no deaths, leaving a membership of 70. There are three candidates that have been received for baptism, and three ready to come into the church upon the confession of their faith.

SIX CHURCHES IN CENTRAL MICHIGAN have united in forming a new association to be called the Berean Association. The action is in protest against the State Convention for rejecting the "Des Moines Confession" at its annual meeting in May.

ILLINOIS

LAMOILLE CHURCH has only ninety members, but it is well organized and aggressive. It has just finished the first year of the church vacation school in which there was an average attendance of forty-six. The school was so successful that three good-sized pledges have already been made for next year's work. The Baptist pastor was principal. The community supported the school and the children were not charged. The teachers' training class, begun by a layman, Mr. Anson Fields, and taught by a laywoman, Mrs. A. N. DeLong, closed its first year with six out of eight attendants having received certificates. The church pledged over $8,000 to the N. W. M., the major portion of which is paid. It gives more to missions than it uses for home support. The Woman's Missionary Society was the only one in Ottawa Association to go over the top in the continuation campaign. The B. Y. P. U. is a standard society, and the Bible school is 94 per cent standard. The Ladies' Aid has just paid $500 for church repairs and the young people have paid $100. The church sent the pastor, Rev. R. W. Barber, to the N. B. C. at Indianapolis. There is a fine choir of fifteen voices, conducted by a well-trained director, Mr. A. N. DeLong.

TEN CHURCHES AT JACKSONVILLE put across the first community daily vacation Bible school during June. Over 400 enrolled. Twenty teachers were employed at $1 a day. Four church buildings were used for the kindergarten, primary, junior and intermediate departments. Two ministers "stayed on the job" without remuneration. Rev. A. P. Howells acted as principal of the intermediate department, which was held in the Baptist church with an average attendance of fifty-three. This was the only department to receive an offering for missions. The daily "penny-march" amounted to $7.25 which was given to the Mexican Daily Vacation Bible School at Los Angeles. The expense for the school was $575, paid in full by the churches.

MISSOURI

EVANGELIST AND MRS. C. E. HILLIS of Kahoka, concluded a six months' evangelistic season in Wyoming July 2, following which they took a delightful trip through Yellowstone Park. The past year has been the best year in evangelistic work they have ever had. Their dates for the coming year are filled with campaigns in Nebraska, Iowa, Arizona and Wyoming.

DURING JULY Evangelist O. Reed and V. A. Day, chorus leader, held twenty-two days of tent meetings at Mound City. In spite of rain most of the time attendance was good. Twelve were received for baptism, representing seven new families. The church financed the meeting, except that the association furnished the tent. Mr. Reed and Mr. Day began meetings at Walkup's Grove, July 23, and will hold meetings at New Liberty about September 1.

KANSAS

CHELSEA CHURCH HAS INSTALLED a new choir loft surrounded by fine oak panels. The congregations are becoming larger weekly and the prayer meeting has been protracted. About forty members meet five nights a week for prayer. The troubles which have so long menaced the fellowship of the church are practically an item of history.

A MOST INTERESTING midsummer Christmas entertainment was held on the evening of July 25, under the auspices of the White Cross department of the women's society of First Church, Emporia, assisted by the officers and children in the primary department of the Sunday school. The real Christmas spirit was evident in the program, the gifts, and the decorations, including a tree. The gifts included White Cross supplies, dolls, toys, and many other useful articles, besides a liberal cash offering, all of which will be sent to Dr. Grant's station in China for distribution on Christmas eve.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Summer Assembly

South Dakota held its fifth annual summer assembly at Sioux Falls College, July 16-23. It proved to be the most successful gathering of the kind held in the state. There were several contributing factors to this, notably the efficient work done in preparation by Rev. W. H. Bayles, state director of religious education, and the abandonment of all the college force in attending to the hospitality of the assembly delegates. In this regard mention must be made of the self-sacrificing service rendered by Dean A. W. Fauquet, Professors Martini, Hacker and Hoffman, and Miss Button, registrar. College dormitories and tents furnished comfortable apartments and the recitation rooms of the college afforded excellent accommodations for the class work.

There were more than 200 in attendance at the assembly, these coming from all parts of the state. The Rosebud section, about 200 miles distant, furnished a splendid delegation, while Trent and Dell Rapids, as usual, carried off honors for large delegations.

The following constituted the faculty: Bible work—Dr. W. H. Main, of Philadelphia, and Dr. E. V. Pierce, Brookings. C. V. S. and teacher training—Rev. Mr. Wiesle, North Dakota, and Rev. J. F. Olthoff, Avon. S. D. B. Y. P. U.—Rev. Mr. Fredmond, Viborg, S. D. W. W. G.—Miss Fletcher, of the Woman's Society. Bible school, elementary department—Mrs. Hackett, Parker, S. D. Bible school and B. Y. P. U. methods and plans—Dr. W. E. Chalmers, Philadelphia. Missions—Dr. J. F. Ingram, of Burma. An interesting lecture was given one evening by Dr. W. B. Lippard, of New York, being the story of his experiences with the "Ship of Fellowship." Mrs. G. W. Mingus was the efficient music director.

The following officers were elected for the year: President, Prof. W. H. Hacker, Sioux Falls; vice-presidents: Rev. Van Ander, Centerville; Rev. J. F. Olthoff, Avon; Rev. I. Fredmond, Viborg; Rev. B. L. Carlton, Big Springs. Corresponding secretary: Rev. W. H. Bayles, Huron; recording secretary, Miss Mary Simpson, Dell Rapids; treasurer, Carl Swenson, Sioux Falls. Additional members of the executive committee: Mrs. G. W. Mingus, Sioux Falls; Rev. Shelley Robinson, Trent; and Rev. Walter Ingram, Mitchell.

The next assembly will be held at Sioux Falls College.

Rocky Mountain States

MONTANA

REV. C. A. IRWIN, FORMERLY of Nebraska, began work on June 1 as missionary pastor at Hardin, Lodge Grass and Wyoala, an important circuit on the Crow Indian Reservation.

REV. T. L. HUXLEY BEGAN HIS pastoral work at Livingston on July 9. He has held successful pastorates at Lewistown and Kalispell and returns to Montana after several years in Missouri.

REV. ERIK GRONLUND CLOSED his work with the Swedish Baptist church in Great Falls on July 1.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH at Billings has let the contract for the Sunday-school unit of its new edifice. Work is to be completed on it by December 1. The unit will cost $45,000 and it will be the finest equipment for religious education and social activities in the city. Rev. W. D. Whan is the pastor of this active church.

SECRETARY G. CLIFFORD CRESS of the Montana Convention will be one of the speakers on the program of the Pacific Coast Theological Conference, at New Westminster near Vancouver, B. C., August 14-17. His subject will be "The Problem of Denominational Cooperation." August 20 he will supply the pulpit of the First Church of Seattle.

IDAHO

A COUNCIL was called by the Knull Baptist Church of Gooding for the purpose of examining its pastor, R. J. McKoven, for ordination. District Missionary E. O. Otto called the meeting to order. The permanent organization was as follows: Rev. E. O. Otto, moderator; Brother A. S. Martin of Twin Falls, clerk. The council instructed the church to proceed with the ordination which was done at once, Rev. Otto giving the charge to the candidate and Rev. Jones, of Buhl, the charge to the church. Rev. Tolliver, of Twin Falls, preached the ordination sermon, and made the ordination prayer.

Pacific Coast

CALIFORNIA

EVANGELIST GEO. W. TAYLOR, of 4505 Bramercy Place, Los Angeles, Calif., assisted by Mrs. Taylor, cornetist, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Basil Long, musical director and pianist respectively, have held two good meetings during the summer. One was at Hoover Street Church, Los Angeles, and the other was a union tent meeting at Hawthorne, Cal. Notwithstanding the off-season both these meetings were well-attended and resulted in over 200 decisions for Christ and the church. The Taylor party will work the coming season in Pacific Coast, opening in the Baptist Church, Azusa, Cal., Sept. 3. For open letters he can be reached at his home address.

VALLEJO BUILDING IS PROGRESSING. Thursday evening, July 13, the men got together to consider the "standard for church objectives". On almost all points they are well to the top and still coming.

SUNNYVALE men met recently in an enthusiastic session. They are lining up or "the standard" in a most encouraging manner.

work of the churches is using the printed age for the advancement of its particular views. All of these agencies use the services of distributors to place their literature in the hands of the common people, and some of the literature so distributed is very injurious and harmful to the non-churchgoing public. It is said that only five out of one hundred young men in the United States belong to the Christian church and only fifteen out of one hundred attend church. The Bible worker can reach these young men who do not attend church, by the roadside, in boarding-houses, mining-camps, construction-gangs on the railroads, along the docks and water-fronts of our cities, on board the ships, in hospitals and prisons, at the crossing of the highways, and in all other places where men congregate together. "And every day, in the temple and at home, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ."

The service of the Bible worker is sorely needed at this time. There is scarcely a family in the United States that is not reached more or less regularly with printed matter setting forth the doctrines of skepticism, infidelity, and materialism. Unsound teachings and doctrines are eating their way into the heart and life of the American people, and this is the primary cause of the great wave of crime sweeping over our land today.

Material progress of itself is not sufficient. We have a complexity of legislation, all kinds of welfare associations for the uplift and betterment of mankind, yet our police courts are still overcrowded and our penitentiaries fairly full. We have tolerated the fox-trot, the bunny-hug, and the shimmy, not always to the elevation of our moral standards. The sex-problem play on screen and stage is not an evidence of increased culture. We have got rid of the saloon, but the social evil remains, and there are "vamps" not only on the screen, but in real life. Side by side with great wealth is the gaunt specter of poverty with all its attendant ills. We have schools of eugenics that tell us much of the means to improve the physical quality of the race, pretty much akin to the books published for stock farmers; all very well as far as they go, perhaps, but unfortunately they don't go far enough, for they fail to tell us anything of the development of the spiritual in man. Notwithstanding their erudite theories, we find more real happiness in the large families of the poor but God-fearing than in the homes of wealth and fashion, where a so-called select progeny learns nothing of God. A glance at the home will show us that respect for parents is fast becoming a shadow where it has not vanished altogether. Our progress in the main has been along material lines, and since man has a soul with infinite cravings after God, he cannot and does not find lasting satisfaction in that which ministers solely to his bodily comfort.

We ought to appoint fifty new Bible workers at once. We could speedily locate every one of them, and there is an urgent necessity for them.

Thinking people know full well that Hindu-Mohammedan unity would not last one day after swaraj was attained. It is beginning to enter the consciousness of India's masses that Christianity alone offers a common denominator for all the varied religious and political aspirations of India.

Our Book Shelf

Stories from Foreign Lands, by Cora Banks Pierce and Hazel Northrop. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

The very title of this book suggests its contents, but it deservedly requires the adjectives vivid and fascinating. These stories would educate as well as interest the oldest to the youngest reader, but are especially adapted to those of the junior age. Don't miss them, they are great.

The Career of a Cobbler, the Life Story of William Carey, by Margaret T. Applegarth. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. 75 cents.

Readers of THE BAPTIST need no introduction to Margaret T. Applegarth, editor of the Chimney Corner pages. She has the gift of telling old stories in a new way. In "The Career of a Cobbler" she steps aside from the regulation biographical method and has Vishmuswam, a Hindu, tell the story of William Carey to an incredulous listener.

Further Adventures of Lad, by Albert Payson Terhune. New York: Doran Company. $2 net.

The best dog stories and the name of Albert Payson Terhune go together. Those who have read "Tales of Lad" will be desirous of following his further adventures; those who haven't will find it profitable to make the acquaintance of the gallant collie.

A Program for Sunday-School Management, by Charles W. Brewbaker. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. $1 net.

A book dealing with various practical phases of Sunday-school work, such as organization, finance, music, community life, the Sunday school's relation to the church and various details of administration. The aim of the book is to help those who have not the time or opportunity to devote themselves to special preparation for efficient work in the Sunday school, but whose inclinations are toward that phase of activity.

Denise of the Three Pines, by Edith A. Sawyer. Boston: The Page Co., pp. 315. $1.65.

A little Belgian refugee completely lost from her people, and adopted by an American couple, is the chief figure in a house party in the Maine woods, along with a gassed American soldier and some other interesting folks. The story is a sweet wholesome tale of nature and life, of youth and love, of fine friendships and helpful service, with everybody coming through all right in the end. Dancing comes in incidentally, and a charming young Japanese girl proves a powerful agent in effecting the cure of the soldier, as the reader will anticipate.

The Galilean, by Nathaniel Micklem, M. A., Mansfield College, Oxford. London: James Clarke & Co. New edition 1921, pp. 156. $1.75.

The key to the book is in the following excerpt: "So far as religion and our happiness and our spiritual and temporal welfare are concerned, what matters is the way we take our experience. Religion is the right attitude to life and to experience; it is to see things as they are, and to respond to them rightly." "The religious man is distinguished from the irreligious... by the way he reacts to his experience, by the way he takes it." "In fine, religion is a matter of reconciliation, reconciliation with God, reconciliation with man and reconciliation with life." The work will prove suggestive as giving a fresh point of view and new emphasis on the author's peculiar thesis.

Church School Administration, by E. Morris Fergusson. New York and Chicago: Revell Co. pp. 270. $1.75.

Dr. Fergusson is superintendent of the Maryland Sunday School Association, and was for eight years educational superintendent for the Presbyterian Sunday School Board. He has written, out of a Sunday-school experience of thirty-six years, a manual for pastor, teacher, superintendent, and director. It is a compendium of plans and principles which will answer practically every question that may arise in Sunday-school management and ministry. Along with the material found in every book of its kind, there are three notable chapters: "The School and the Homes"; "Training for Leadership"; and "The School's Religion." In the last-named chapter is the culmination of the spiritual emphasis which pervades the entire book. "What shall it profit a church school if it grow in numbers and popularity, adopt every modern method, listen to the last word in educational science, and fail in causing its pupils to walk with God?" "The church school is first of all a school of religion. Back of organization, curriculum and method, the teaching of the Bible and the work of conversion, is the objective of holiness, the life conformed to the likeness of Christ and in all of its aspects dedicated to God." This splendid and complete survey and interpretation of the modern Sunday school should go the rounds of the working force in the Bible school of the church. It may promote a revival, not only of interest but of religion as well.

Lord, Teach Us To Pray, by Alexander Whyte. New York: Doran Co. $2.00.

Dr. Whyte was for many years minister of St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, and a man mighty in the Scriptures. During his later ministry he preached a very remarkable series of twenty-three sermons on prayer, which have now been collected and edited by Rev. J. M. E. Ross. They are aflame with the spiritual passion which characterized the preacher in his lifetime. The themes include "The Magnificence of Prayer," "The Geometry of Prayer," "The Costliness of Prayer," "Imagination in Prayer," and "The Endless Quest." Eleven of the sermons deal with types of prayer, as Moses, Jacob, Elijah. "We never see Elijah but he is in a passion, as we say. . . . He was a mountain of a man with a whirlwind for a heart." We know of no modern book on prayer more calculated to kindle a new flame of devotion and intercession in the heart of minister and teacher. It is the fruit of a lifetime of praying and of studying.

The House of Adventure, by Warwick Deeping. New York: The Macmillan Co. $2.00.

A thoroughly wholesome and timely story of the reconstruction of a small French village. An English soldier whose pal has been killed by his side at Beaucourt during the war, makes his way back to that ruined and desolate village after the armistice. There he encounters the widow, Manon Latour, weeping over the wreck of her little Café de la Victoire. Brent had been a builder in the old days in England; he had also been a failure; but when he buried his pal he had exchanged identification tags and taken his friend's name, under the impulse of a vague desire to begin a new life and do something for the world. The plight of the widow appealed to him, and he consecrated himself to the task of restoring her home. "What is it that you want? Manon demanded warily and fearfully. 'I have told you. Work—a new chance—a man's chance.' . . . 'Manon, can you understand a man who has been a failure wanting to do something that is good and unselfish? Can't you understand him craving for a clean taste of life in his mouth?' She took him frankly at his word, and they began to restore the ruined home. The whole story develops from that enterprise, and with a simplicity of style reminding one of Bennett, but with a sympathy which Bennett does not have, the author unfolds the narrative of Brent's moral re-creation through his fellowship with Manon in the service to which he has consecrated himself. The spirit of reverence, the simple purity of the love story, the fineness and cleanness of the book, make it worth a place on the family table. There will be a scramble to get it first, for it is full of interest.

Go, Little Song.....Ashford (50c)

One sacred song and three secular numbers. The first title is a finely conceived sacred song, built with a keen eye for legitimate effect by a composer justly approved for his splendid achievements in the field of church music. His inherent reverence for the dignity of music for divine worship is everywhere evident. Many technical effects which may be perfectly authentic when used in music for secular music should not be inserted in church music, largely on account of their secular associations. Mr. Harris always displays a nice discrimination in such matters. This song is a fine example of what a sacred song can and should be. It is singable, melodic, rich in color, devotional in spirit, and simple enough to be of universal availability. The other three songs are interesting examples of modern American songs, tuneful, sentimental in appeal, easy to do, and generally pleasing. They are not put out as master-songs—they are designed to please and amuse; they will do that. Teachers will be interested in their pedagogical possibilities. All these songs are issued in two or three keys for the convenience of the various voices.

From Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

Thou O Father, Thou Alone.....Loomis (60c)
My House of Dreams.....Lester (60c)
Love Sings a Song.....Morse (50c)

The Loomis song is a serious setting of the fine poem by Whittier; it is well-designed and should come off well at the hands of a capable singer and organist. The range will take it away from the high voices—it will be most effective when used by a low or medium voice. The Lester song, to a lyric by Margaret Lester, is a tuneful, easy "ballad" of the better class; it is published with optional violin and violoncello obligati, either or both may be used. It is issued in two keys, and should be a successful program song wherever a brilliant, taking number is desired; it has an effective climax and the sentiment has general appeal. The last title is more of a conventional "teaching-song"—it calls for a light high voice with good high range. Melodically it is not of any particular distinction; but it is well written, and shows a feeling for delicate nuance.

AN ARCHAIC ARGUMENT

Every once in a while, probably as the result of the summer heat, the regular occurrence of dogs' days, or the advent of the "silly season," we get a recrudescence of the old wives' fable that church organs and choirs should "donate their services to the congregation and to the Lord." Recently, we understand, this archaic argument hailed, or waived, from Baltimore; and by this time has probably reached the Pacific Ocean, where we hope it will find decent burial. Our object in alluding to here is not to give it a resurrection but a suitable obit. As an appeal has been made—by the supporters of this argument—to Scripture, a dangerous procedure in any cases, it is just as well to state that the choirs and musicians of the Jewish temple service were paid functionaries, they being of "the sons of Levi," for whose support special tithes and free-will offerings were apportioned. Under the gospel dispensation the great apostle to the gentiles declares that "they who proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel," and much more to the same effect. And although it may be urged that these and similar words had no primary application to music, they certainly have a general application thereto, because the ministry of song is, or should be, as spiritual as the ministry of the word, failing which it should be cast out of the church as "salt which has lost its savor."

Meanwhile, church officers, whose duties are most decidedly material, are paid, and paid good salaries, for example, vergers, caretakers, etc. It has been urged by the more militant section of the musical profession that the church musician and organist shall "receive a salary equivalent to that of the minister, on the ground that the former is just as valuable to the cause of religion as the latter." With this we cannot altogether agree. The father of the writer of these notes was professionally a minister, but practically a saint; and we can never succeed in persuading ourselves that it is possible for the editor of this department to be a better man than his father. On the contrary, the whole question resolves itself into one of moral merit but into a much simpler one of duties demanded and time consumed. Thus, if a minister gives seven days a week to his church, and the organist gives only two or three, the salary of the latter should be about one-third that of the former, the qualifications of both minister and organist in their respective professions being about on a level, or, as the scientists would say, equal and constant. But when these vary the salary should vary accordingly, or "accordionly," as Mark Twain once preferred to put it. Were this proportion observed throughout Christendom, there would be a rise in organists' salaries somewhat commensurate with the recent rise in the cost of living. At least church musicians would then be as well paid as scavengers or slaughtermen, instead of occupying, as at present in many cases, a position which, financially speaking, is considerably lower than that of many menial and unskilled laborers in and on our land.—Musical Observer.

"Let Everybody Sing"

Fully one-half of the hymns and tunes in many of the church hymnals might safely be omitted, for no hymn or tune is valuable for congregational singing until both words and music have become familiar, and it requires months, and often years, to accomplish this. "Let us all unite in singing," says the preacher, when hymn and tune are new, the tune frequently being unsingable except by a trained choir. "All sing!" "Let us all sing!" "We will sing," and "Let everybody sing," said a good minister not long ago, and yet every piece was new to the congregation and to me; but when the last hymn came—their regular closing song, they sang con spirito. A record kept during twelve years showed a few hymns used once or twice; some ten to thirty times; and over half the book never used.

The Canadian Baptist announces the sudden death on Monday, July 31, of the wife of Chancellor McCrimmon of McMaster University, at her summer home near Port Rowan.

Orphan children greatly outnumber adults in several Armenian cities where Turkish butchery has done its hellish work. Alexandropol has 31,000 orphans and less than 3,000 able bodied adult males. Erivan has nearly twice as many children as adults. Near East Relief is caring for the orphans as far as funds will permit.

According to statistics gathered by the Federal Council of Churches and printed in the Year Book of the Churches which has just been issued, of every 106 persons in the United States, ten have no religious affiliation and ninety-six are affiliated through membership, financial support, attendance or other ties with various religious bodies as follows: Protestant 75; Roman Catholic 18; Other Faiths 3; No religious affiliation 10.

The International Astronomical Union met at Rome in June, seventeen nations being represented. The committee on reforming the calendar asked to be discharged. Evidently the star-gazers do not care to tinker with the calendar we have. The next meeting of the Union will be at Cambridge, Eng., in 1925.

Principle A. E. Garvie of New College (England) becomes head of the amalgamated institution resulting from the union of New and Hackney colleges, rendered necessary by the financial difficulties suffered by both schools, and hastened by the recent death of Hackney's great leader Principal P. The work of the department of Architecture of the American Baptist Home Mission Society has so expanded as to require an associate for Secretary George E. Merrill. Mr. Emery B. Jackson who for twelve years has been associated with Mr. C. A. Coolidge of Boston and Chicago, has been appointed. After graduating from the University of Chicago, Mr. Jackson was associated three years with Mr. James Gamble Rogers of New York City. This practical experience with one of the foremost architects of the country was followed by an attendance of three years and a half at the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Paris. Mr. Jackson is the son of Rev. John L. Jackson, D. D., of Bloomington, Ill., formerly pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist church of Chicago and Fountain Street Baptist church of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Secretary of Francis Wayland Foundation

Dr. Vernon S. Phillips, after a nine years' pastorate of the Tenth Ave., Church, Columbus, Ohio, resigned Sunday, July 30, to become full time executive secretary of the Francis Wayland Foundation. The Foundation was originated by Dr. Phillips and the Tenth Ave. Church to receive and to administer permanent funds for the Baptist work in university centers. The Foundation has an ambitious program and the hearty cooperation of the Ohio Baptist Convention and the Northern Baptist Board of Education. The church has now a membership of 527, raised in 1921, a grand total of $19,208.00 and has already paid to the New World Movement $22,845.31.

The Mother Tongue

"TRADE follows the flag," was the slogan in the old days of dollar diplomacy. Conversions, churches, Christian schools, follow the Word, is a constant principle of Christianity.

The story of the translation of the Bible into the languages and dialects spoken by mankind the world over is one of the most fascinating romances of history. Somebody some day will put that story all together in one monumental work and so render noble service to posterity.

The British and Foreign Bible Society alone has a record to date of 550 languages into which the Bible or some part of it has been translated. During twelve months recently the society published the gospel in twelve new forms of speech for people hitherto unreached, as follows:

In Africa, Meru for a tribe on the slopes of Mount Kenya; Kololo, for Barotseland; Kroo, for the West Coast; Jaba, for Northern Nigeria; and Lugbara, for Western Uganda; Luba Katanga, for Belgian Congo.

Southern Chin is spoken in Upper Burma; the Kiaotung dialect of Chinese is current in Eastern Shantung; and Western Lisu belongs to the Province of Yunnan.

In Canada, Coastal Gree belongs to the shores of James' Bay.

In the South Pacific, Manus Island is spoken in the Admiralty Group, while in the Solomon Islands is found the Arosi dialect of San Gristoral.

The translators included Englishmen, Frenchmen, Africans, Asiatics, Americans, Canadians and Germans.

Broadcasting the Bible

The great radio broadcasting station at Newark, N. J., is now sending out the word of God regularly as a part of the radio service provided by the Westinghouse Company. Mr. P. W. Wilson, an English Baptist and New York correspondent of the London News, makes the selections of scripture which are thus scattered to the four winds of heaven.

Bible broadcasting, however, did not wait for the invention of the vacuum tube or the genius of Marconi. For 106 years a Bible broadcasting agency has been operating from its center in New York City, sending the word of God all over America and the world. The work of the American Bible Society in scripture translation and distribution has been a tremendous factor in the progress of Christianity during the past century.

The total issue of the society since its foundation is 146,584,804 volumes. For 1921 the society's circulation was 375,227 complete Bibles, 749,369 New Testaments, and 3,730,841 portions of scripture.

The translations in foreign languages circulated by the society number more than 150, covering all the principal mission stations of the world. This is but a small part of the entire foreign language circulation. The Bible complete or in parts has been translated into 770 different tongues.

The war has seriously affected the cost of Bibles and Testaments, through increased cost of production. The cheapest New Testament now obtainable from the society costs 15 cents, and the cheapest Bible 38 cents.

Minister and Missionaries Benefit Board

An increase of 233 has been made in the number of beneficiaries. There have been thirty-three deaths, making the total number now receiving grants 1,255. Of these 501 are men, 479 women and 275 children. A steadily increasing number of pastors are availing themselves of the retiring pension plan. The largest number accepted in any one month was 192 in March. Other denominations are now adopting virtually the same plan. A special gift made it possible to pay 65 per cent of the premium for the first year for a good number of low-salaried men, thus giving them the benefits of the plan. Many churches are now providing for their pastor's pension in their annual budget. The cheapness of ordination makes the work of the Board difficult.

Jack—"No, I'm not; but if I fight my ma'll find it out and lick me."

"How'll she find it out?"

"Man," he exclaimed, "is a progressive being, other creatures are stationary. Take, for example, the ass. Always and everywhere it is the same creature. You have never seen, and you never will see, a more perfect ass than you see at the present moment."—Boston Transcript.

The Reconciling of the World

THERE is no hope for this broken body of humanity except through a Church of Jesus—that is, a company of men and women who believe utterly in him and are prepared to stand for him. We must cease to utter the pathetic formula that, if only the world would accept the principles of Jesus, all would be happy and all would be peaceful. Of course that is true: but men can be won but singly into that kingdom where Christ reigns, not by mass methods but by personal ministries of love and friendship. We must set to work. The problem before the world is how we can live side by side and at peace, not with those with whom we have a natural affinity, but with those whom naturally we dislike and by whom we are repelled; there are class antagonisms, race antagonisms, color antagonisms, and these constitute the problems of the modern world. Jesus has the solution, and there is none other. He could make friends and brothers of Matthew the publican and Simon the Zealot; his love broke down "the middle wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile, and there is no deeper cleavage in the modern world than this was, neither between Briton and German, nor between white man and yellow man. For the love of Jesus knows no barrier, and he who shares the love of Jesus sees all men with new eyes and allows no more likes and dislikes of his own and lives for service and calls no man enemy. Men have been at work on war, but it is love and the adventures of love which shall hold their hearts when they see Jesus. For God was in Christ, reconciling men unto himself and unto one another and unto their lot.

—From "The Galilean," by Nathaniel Micklem.

Rev. H. Lee McLendon and wife, of Cleveland, are spending the summer in Chicago. Mr. McLendon is available for a pastorate, and can be addressed through the office of THE BAPTIST.

Rev. R. Rowntree Clifford, who is remembered with affection in the churches where he spoke when in America some years ago, has celebrated his semi-jubilee at West Ham Central Mission, London—"a notable event", the Times and Freeman says of it.

A Sunday school workers' association has been formed at Manila by 250 Christian workers of the Philippine capital. W. C. Pearce of the World's Sunday-school Association is to spend a week there beginning Aug. 11, after a highly successful tour of Australia and New Zealand.

Mordecai Wyatt Johnson, a Harvard Divinity graduate at the last commencement, gave one of the commencement addresses, a cogent and appealing message in behalf of his race, "The Faith of the American Negro." It is published in The Nation for July 19.

Wake Forest (S. C.) College is to admit Greek Letter fraternities for the first time, by a divided vote of the board of trustees following a vigorous discussion of the issue. The college has recently received a legacy of $1,250,000 for its endowment fund.

Dr. Frederick W. Norwood, an Australian Baptist minister who through his notable work as chaplain won for himself a conspicuous place in England and so became pastor of the City Temple, has returned home after a highly gratifying and fruitful mission in the United States in the interest of international friendship. Dr. Norwood received calls from two large churches in this country while here, both of which he declined. He has been invited to supply at Fifth Avenue Church, New York, next summer.

Assistant Commissioner Augustus S. Downing, has notified Keuka College that the College is now on the list of standard colleges approved for students who earn state honor scholarships. Keuka College has a capacity of forty freshmen per year. The number the first year was forty-one, and already the registration for September is near the limit. The first year was a marked success, and the future for Keuka is promising.

The "Church Times," July 14, endorses warmly the plea of the British Weekly for sincerity, and unhesitatingly admits that union is impossible between Nonconformists and Anglo-Catholics. "Evidence of fundamental division between Nonconformists and ourselves accumulates. Plainly they are animated by an intense dislike for the things for which Anglo-Catholics stand. . . . Moreover, it seems quite clear now that reunion with Nonconformists can only be bought at the sacrifice of all hope of reunion with either Rome or the Eastern churches. . . . And one fact is this: There are probably very few members of the Church of England who, if they were given their choice between reunion with the East and reunion with Free Churchmen, would not Have you met our new assistant to the pastor? He calls regularly once a week, always has some helpful word for every need, gives us a clearer vision of Christ and a larger outlook on the world, helps us to enter sympathetically into the trials and sorrows of our fellow-men; and strengthens our love for God's children and for our own church.

The Pastor's Assistant

Every church in the entire Northern Baptist Convention may have just such an assistant to the pastor. Every pastor may have such assistance by securing a club of subscribers to the Baptist; $2.00 each in clubs of ten per cent of membership.

Killam's Kollum

Inviting Solicitation

A busy layman responded to our modest request for some cash on account, with a check, some information, and a command:

"Now, Mr. Manager, you wake up the pastor or a deacon of the First Baptist Church of (a town west of Plymouth Rock). You could have had your money any time an agent approached me."

In view of this brother's request shall we create the new office of beadle in the churches to wake up the pastors who neglect to appoint an agent for THE BAPTIST? If the deacons were taking the paper they would never need a beadle, for THE BAPTIST would keep them awake and everlastingly on the "deak."

Has your church an agent for THE BAPTIST? Doubtless there are busy men and women who take all their other papers through the solicitation of promoters, and who would treat THE BAPTIST right if they were asked to. Let's ask 'em right now! Fire when you are ready, Big Ben, and wake up the committee-makers so we can subscribe!

Off to College

What an army of young folks will leave home this fall for college and university! What prayers will attend them, what love will cherish them, what longing eyes will await letters from them through the long year! So much may happen, so many new temptations to face, so many new problems to solve, so many issues to meet!

How thoughtfully you will prepare for their departure; with what care you will pack their trunks; with what persistence you will ransack your minds to make sure that nothing is wanting to make it a great and victorious year.

One thing you had almost forgotten: a subscription to THE BAPTIST to go to them direct. As you get your copy each week they will also get theirs; as you read the news from our missionaries they will also read it; as you find your heart stirred by a story or other message, you may breathe a prayer that they also may be stirred. And you will have that added bond of interest between the home and the absent one—both get THE BAPTIST and read it the same week.

Of course it is cheaper to send them the copy from home after it has been on hand a week or two; but that is poor economy. Freshness and fellowship are preserved if those names are on our subscription list; and moreover it is a treat for college folks to get a weekly periodical all their own. Send in the names of your candidates for college, with a paid-in-advance subscription. You will be more glad than we, before their graduation.

choose the former. Even quite moderate men, we believe, would do so."

Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, Chicago, will preach for the First Church of San Francisco two Sundays this month. Dr. Ross has under consideration a call from this church, which has been pastorless for more than five years. Dr. Arthur S. Phelps has served ably and devotedly as permanent ministerial supply.

Mrs. Dixon, wife of Dr. A. C. Dixon, formerly pastor of Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn, died at Kuling, China, Sunday August 6 of spinal meningitis. Dr. Dixon was on an evangelistic tour of the world when Mrs. Dixon was taken ill. The news of her death came in a cablegram to the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

Japan has formally ratified all of the treaties agreed on at the Washington Conference last winter.

The education board of the Southern Baptist Convention, as instructed by the parent body, has appointed a committee of five members, all living in Birmingham, whose task it will be to select Christian scholars to write science textbooks which will not "seek to discredit the Christian conception of the Bible as the inerrant word of God." The committee consists of W. C. James, Albert R. Bond, J. E. Dilard, J. C. Stivender, and Mrs. J. C. Sharps.

Hamburg Baptists Welcome Americans

Advices from Hamburg give highly appreciative reports of the visit of Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard. They spoke before large congregations on Sunday morning, July 16, in the churches of Altona and Eilbeck respectively. The largest Baptist church in Hamburg was crowded to capacity for an evening service at which both of the brethren from America spoke.

At the Baptist Theological Seminary in the afternoon there was an informal conference to which many of the leading figures in religious affairs in Hamburg had been invited. Among those present, beside the Baptist brethren, were Herr Professor Dr. Meinhoff, leader of the Oriental Seminary, Herr Missionsdirektor Professor Dr. Schlunck, senior of the Hamburg clergy, and other prominent pastors, literary men and prominent political leaders.

The conference took the form of a frank discussion of mission work and of national affairs. Dr. F. W. Simoleit of Hamburg writes, "I have seldom been present at a meeting where our conditions were discussed with so much interest and thoroughness." Of the service rendered by the representatives of the Baptist brethren in the United States during their stay in Hamburg, Dr. Simoleit writes further, "They dwelt among us in the full blessing of the love of Christ and their service amongst us was as the odor of a precious ointment."

China Missionaries Safe

Swatow Almost Destroyed in Typhoon

THE Foreign Mission Society has received the following cable dated August 9 from the Swatow missionaries:

"Typhoon the worst of all. Three thousand killed. Swatow mission property has been damaged. Loss estimated at $50,000 Mexican. All missionaries safe."

On August 2 a typhoon struck the city of Swatow, the wind blowing 100 miles per hour. A tidal wave followed, the catastrophe reaching its climax on the following day and turning the city of 50,000 people into a shambles.

More than 75 per cent of the buildings are reported down, including the silk factories and the old German consulate. On Double Island, the summer resort of the foreign community, not a single house was left intact. Press cables from Hongkong say that to all appearances Swatow is the scene of a war-ravaged town—a heap of ruins. A dispatch to the Philadelphia Ledger says that the scene of the devastated city is as if a superman with a monstrous shovel had scooped the whole mass of buildings into one great heap of ruins.

Steel structures were twisted beyond recognition. Great stone buildings crumbled like cards. The American consulate was unroofed, and also the Ursuline convent. The American Baptist Mission suffered heavy damage as above reported.

The loss of life makes the disaster one of the most appalling in history. A British sea captain who has spent forty years in the China seas says this is the most terrible catastrophe he ever saw. The cable from the Swatow missionaries states the loss of life to be 3,000. The first press cables from Hongkong dated Aug. 7 estimated 10,000 dead. Dispatches of August 8 to the Ledger place the number of the dead at 20,000 to 40,000. The storm-swept area covered not less than forty square miles. A steamer captain coming from Shanghai reported seeing dead bodies floating in the tide fifteen miles from Swatow.

The Associated Press report of August 8 was that the Hongkong branch of the Swatow Chamber of Commerce said that 28,000 bodies had already been recovered.

The state Department at Washington had cables from the consulate at Swatow stating that some Europeans had been injured, but no Europeans or Americans had been killed; and that the loss to property ran into millions of dollars.

August 11: Press cables report 50,000 dead and 100,000 homeless in the Swatow district.

The Swatow Mission

Swatow is the third shipping center in China with a population of 60,000. Our work was opened there in 1860. The mission compound is across the bay from the city proper, at Kakchieh. The mission includes the Swatow Academy for boys, the Ashmore Theological Seminary, a girls' boarding school, a woman's school, a kindergarten, a woman's Bible training school, and a hospital. Six mission residences, teachers' residences, and the school and hospital buildings constitute the material equipment.

The Swatow missionary staff includes the following named, some of whom are on furlough in this country at present. The list is as nearly correct as our available information makes possible.

The place of local church membership is added where known.

Rev. G. H. Waters and wife (Rochester, N. Y.); Rev. A. H. Page (Rockport, Me.), and wife, (Cooperstown, N. Y.); Rev. R. T. Capen and wife (Madison, Wis.); Rev. Jacob Speicher and wife (Philadelphia); Rev. William Ashmore and wife (Granville, Ohio); Mr. N. H. Carman and wife (M. D.) (Hyde Park, Chicago); Mr. Paul C. Cressey, (Granville, O.); Rev. Geo.

W. Lewis (Redlands, Cal.); Miss Abbie Sanderson (Houlton, Me.); Dr. Marguerite Everham (South Chicago); Miss Marguerite Wellwood (Morgan Park, Chicago); Miss H. Fielden; Miss Melvina Sollman; Miss Emily Miller (Philadelphia); Miss Enid P. Johnson (San Francisco); Mrs. R. E. Worley (Illinois); Miss Margaret Winn (Winchester, Mass.); Miss Marjorie Fleming (Columbus, O.); Miss Fannie Northcott (Cleveland, O.); Miss Edith G. Traver (Spokane, Wash.); Miss Mabelle R. Culley (Philadelphia).

A Visit to Dr. John Clifford

By CARTER HELM JONES

IT WAS a small but delightfully congenial company of Baptists that sailed from New York, July 4. Yes, it was Independence Day and a good day for Baptists, who are "agreed to differ but resolved to love." The company consisted of Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, the new president of our convention, Rev. James H. Franklin, foreign secretary, Rev. W. S. Abernethy, president of our Foreign Mission Society, Rev. W. O. Lewis, our new representative in Europe, Mr. W. T. Sheppard, a member of the foreign mission board, accompanying Dr. Abernethy at his own charges, and the writer. The voyage was swift and smooth; the welcome by our British brethren promptly and hospitably given. A telegram was handed us as we landed, inviting us to lunch with the Council of the Baptist Union of Great Britain. We were whirled from the dock to Waterloo Station, London, and from the station to the beautiful Baptist church house. There we had the privilege of meeting and briefly addressing nearly 100 of the representative Baptists of the British Isles.

But I want to speak especially of the afternoon of our last day in London when we were the guests of Dr. John Clifford in his lovely suburban home on Waldeck Road, West Ealing. Moving among his books and flowers, wrapped in the tender gloaming of life's long day, our Grand Old Man illustrates the noblest traditions of Baptists. At home in the yesterdays, alert to every phase of the world's life today, with glowing optimism he "greets the unseen with a cheer." It was a cruelly swift clock that ticked those two hours away. What a conversationalist, in an age when conversation is becoming a rare art: "From grave to gay, from lively to severe" he ran the gamut of human interests and our hearts burned within us, as he talked. His remarkable knowledge of men and measures among American Baptists astonished us, while his world-wide sweep of kingdom sympathies and his mighty faith in our mission as a denomination stirred us to enthusiasm. Eighty-five years young, Dr. Clifford, by the grace of God, has blended in his personality the courage and simplicity of Peter, the irenic serenity of John and the heroism and wisdom of Paul. But the parting time is here—we must hurry away, Abernethy and Sheppard to Northern Europe, Taylor and Jones to Czecho-Slovakia accompanied for a few days by Franklin our "guide, philosopher and friend." We knelt at the family altar, Dr. Clifford bears us to the throne of Grace, asking the Holy Spirit to anoint us for our mission and "Heaven comes down our souls to greet and glory crowns the mercy seat." An apostolic benediction has been breathed upon us by the greatest living Baptist Henceforth, for us, the name of that place is Bethel.

Paris, July 15.

The Baptist

The Price of His Presence

GODLINESS has promise of the life which now is; and no portion of that promise is more precious than the assurance of the presence of Christ and the conscious enjoyment of his grace and guidance, day by day, here and now.

The impressive words of Prof. Deissmann concerning the Figure of the Redeemer, "blessing and consoling, exhorting and renewing, revealing himself anew to every generation of the weary and heavy laden," accord both with the promises of our Lord and with Christian experience as it is realized in the life of his church from age to age.

If we cherish as we should this privilege of his presence, we will seek to understand the conditions which determine the measure of its bestowal. If in any degree the believer is able to regulate or control that presence, he should penetrate the secret of such control; and so insure that he shall never be driven to cry out in longing and despair, "O that I knew where I might find Him!"

We may easily believe that the early disciples of the risen Lord cherished as one of his crowning promises the words given them at the trysting-place in Galilee: "Remember, I am with you always day by day" (Matt. 28:20, Weymouth). We may be sure that many times that promise bore them over hills of difficulty and through dismal swamps where else they would have yielded to despair and failure.

We claim that promise for ourselves also, and derive from it comfort and courage and constancy, where else we should fear and falter and flee. He who came to Paul in the hour of difficulty and conflict at Corinth and said, "Be not afraid, I am with thee," has promised to be with us as well in our time of need; and both divine promise and human experience warrant us in assuring one another, "Faint not nor fear, his arms are near; he changeth not, and thou art dear."

Why then do we not continually practice the presence of God, as Brother Lawrence called it? Why is not the Saviour's promise completely and perennially fulfilled to us in our Christian experience? The answer is ready—various answers indeed: unbelief hides him, sin hides him, error hides him. True; but we have omitted one other cause which weighs heavy in his own judgment of the matter.

We are assured that we may possess him, day by day and always; but the promise is the sequence of an injunction. The Great Possession is vouchsafed to us in the Great Commission; and as we fulfil the Commission we achieve the Possession. The risen Lord pledges his presence to a progressive church, to a teaching church, to a world-embracing church.

The living Christ reveals himself to his people as alive forevermore, and incarnates himself in the church which is his body; and as his body shares his life, it becomes thereby vital, dynamic, efficient, progressive. "I must go on my way," he had said, when in the last days of his earthly sojourn he turned his face to Jerusalem. "Go on your way," he said to his assembled church after his resurrection (the word is exactly the same in the two passages, Luke 13:33, Matt. 28:19): "go on your way, and remember, I am with you always, day by day."

The price of his presence, then, is indicated in that word, "Go on your way and make disciples of all the nations." The progressive church is the possessive church. The witnessing church is the sort of company he loves to attend on its way. The evangelizing church is the realizing church.

What richer reward could we hope for, what greater inducement could be offered us, what more dazzling lure could persuade us, than the promise of the unremitting sense of our Redeemer's presence with us day by day and all the days? And this is all for us, when and insofar as we obey the divine impulse, and go on our way to make disciples of all the nations. In the continuous evangelism which is the chief and singular task of the church and of the Christian is found the price of the abiding presence of Jesus Christ with his church and with each of his loved and redeemed followers.

Have we failed to relate, as he has himself related, these two phases of Christian life: The conscious and abiding sense of Christ's presence with his people, and the perennial activity of the church in evangelizing the world? Have we missed the true appraisal of evangelism because we have overlooked this relation? Have we lost a portion of our inheritance because we have left unfulfilled the condition of securing it? Have we suffered loneliness and disheartenment and even defeat because we did not know the price of his presence, or were reluctant to pay that price?

The mother shares with her little one the sweet story of Jesus, going on her way in fulfillment of her Lord's command, and so qualifying for the heritage of his presence. The teacher faces the little people in the Sunday school and gives them what she has found concerning God and his Son and the sweetness of a life lived within the Saviour's fold. The preacher from the pulpit and on the doorstep and along the highway discloses the love and grace and tender compassion of the Redeemer, seeking thus to make disciples. The instructor in the day school incarnates the truth and life and joy and power which has come to him from Christ, in so winsome and compelling a testimony as to attract disciples after him and so after his Lord. Nay more: every trustful and obedient disciple, in the daily round, the common task of life, may find open doors for the word, providential occasions for bearing testimony to the worth and power of Jesus as Saviour whose comradeship is to him the dearest treasure he possesses. And as these various witnesses in their varied work go on their way making disciples, they realize and enjoy the presence of him who sent them and who pledged his unfailing presence.

Now we understand why the foreign missionaries become, not only reconciled to their isolation and hardship, but absolutely tenacious of it and eager to resume it after their furloughs at home. They are longing to renew their tryst with their Great Companion in the hard places where they saw him most clearly, heard him most distinctly, felt him more surely, loved him most passionately. In the places of their most utter sacrifice for him, he most richly endowed them with the enjoyment of himself.

Shall we pay the price of his presence? There are other reasons for undertaking evangelism; but so far they have not persuaded us all to commit ourselves to the task. Will not this inducement win our consent? "Go on your way and make disciples of all the nations, and remember, I am with you day by day and always."

Organized Alienism

FORTY delegates to the German-American Citizens' League met in Chicago, July 17, headed by George Sylvester Viereck, conspicuous during the war for his journalistic propaganda in favor of the German cause. The Chicago Tribune, in an editorial under the heading above used, says of the meeting of the league:

"The Viereck league is an insult to the Americanism of citizens of German blood. Its effect, if it has any effect, will be to set them apart from all Americans who think of their country's problems and policies from the viewpoint of America's welfare. It is an organization of the most insolent and mischievous alienism, of which this country already has had quite enough."

The validity of this criticism will be sufficiently obvious when we state that one of the resolutions adopted by the league as a part of its program was the following:

"We demand the immediate legalization of the sale of beer and wine to end the reign of hypocrisy and corruption which is disrupting the very foundation of law and order in the United States."

The bold attempt to organize American citizens of German birth against the authority of the constitution well deserves the stigma of "organized alienism"—it is an insolent conspiracy against the fundamental law of the nation.

The Authorized Version

THE resolution adopted by the Indianapolis Convention concerning a confession of faith has been variously and variably quoted in print in both the religious and the secular press. We have secured from the recording secretary of the convention a certified copy of the exact text as it appears on the official records, and print it here for the sake of accuracy:

"The Northern Baptist Convention affirms that the New Testament is the all-sufficient ground of our faith and practice and we need no other statement."

Great in Prayer

LOOK at Paul, as great in prayer as he is in preaching, or in writing Epistles." In these words concerning the great apostle, an eminent Scottish preacher unconsciously interprets himself to his congregation and to his readers.

Our leading article in this issue is a sermon of the late Dr. Alexander Whyte, first the colleague and later the successor of Dr. Candlish at St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh. Dr. Whyte died in January, 1921, at the age of eighty-four. Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, in an editorial in the British Weekly of that month, lovingly portrays his character and reviews his history, and writes thus of his long-loved friend:

"On thinking over our long association, it becomes clear to me that his main characteristic was his intense humility. He might seem austere, and he was austere at times. The burden of the world lay more heavily upon him than it lies on most, and before men he could at times denounce sin with terrible emphasis, but his face was often before God as a fountain of tears. He could not endure controversies with men. If he thought he had been carried away in some access of passion he humbled himself to the dust before the man whom he thought he had wronged. Evangelical humility is the note of all he preached and wrote."

Dr. Whyte was no ministerial Uriah Heep—he was every inch a true Puritan, fearing and adoring Almighty God, and fearing no man on earth. His masters theological and spiritual were Bunyan and Baxter, and Ruthenford, and preeminently Thomas Goodwin, who was, says Dr. Nicoll, the master influence of his life.

The standard biography of Dr. Whyte now being prepared by Rev. G. Freeland Barbour, will claim a place in the preacher's library, and in his heart along with Allen's Brooks, and Smith's Drummond, and Adamson's Parker and Dorothy Hughes' life of her heroic father. Meantime we have just from the press of Hodder and Stoughton, of which firm the Doran Company are the American agents, a series of twenty-three sermons on prayer which Dr. Whyte preached to his Edinburgh congregation through a period of several years. This notable book was reviewed on our book page in the issue of August 12, and the sermon published this week "Our Lord in the Garden," is taken by permission of the Doran Company from the volume, which is entitled "Lord, Teach Us to Pray."

Our chief purpose in giving so large space and so unusual attention to this book is that we may encourage the circulation and use of it among the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention. We cannot hope to perfect our holiness in the fear of God, we cannot expect to see revivals in our churches, we cannot achieve the New World Movement task, or reconstruct human society on a Christian basis, until we have mastered the art of intercession and have become a truly praying people. The one text which pervades the whole of Dr. Whyte's searching series of sermons is the text which we need to weave into all the warp of our plans and activities and conferences and canvasses, if we are to fabricate an enduring and a beautiful work for our Lord as his witnessing people: "Lord, teach us to pray!"

Will Irwin on Prohibition

WILL IRWIN is one of a group of eminent California authors whose influence was adverse to the prohibition campaigns in the Golden State. In a recent article on boot-legging, in the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Irwin has this to say concerning the results of national prohibition:

"Lately I have talked over the general situation with several social-settlement workers of New York. They all report their people doing well under prohibition. In general they find less desertion, less thriftlessness, fewer crimes against women and children. One or two lament a recent increase of home-brewing which affects the sobriety of the women, but they seem to regard this, at its present extent, as a minor evil. Of late the traffic in women and commercialized vice in general have dwindled almost to the vanishing point."

Two Sorts of Polls

THE 10,000,000-vote poll being conducted by the Literary Digest is giving concern to the drys and ecstasy to the wets, despite the cold mathematical fact that of 617,838 people voting, 489,240 refused the opportunity to vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. Less than twenty-eight per cent of the total vote was cast for repeal; and no sneers or juggling with figures on the part of the liquor advocates can alter that plain fact.

The votes that really settle things are being counted in Nebraska and Missouri and Ohio and other states where primary elections are taking place. A St. Louis man running in the republican primary in Missouri for senator on an avowed wet platform was soundly defeated; Congressman Fess was a clear winner in Ohio for the republican nomination for senator as the Anti-Saloon League candidate against strong wet opposition. The elections tell the story and determine the issues.

If every friend of a stainless flag and a dry nation will register and vote in the primaries and at the general election the Eighteenth Amendment will be neither nullified nor modified. The liquor forces are organized, amouflaged and financed, for a last desperate stand to capture congress this year. The American people have banned the traffic in strong drink, and now is the time for every good citizen to ratify by his own vote and influence, the action of forty-five sovereign states which adopted the amendment as prescribed by the Constitution.

Back to Normal

HOW we have gloated over that terse phrase, revealed in the vision it inspired, anticipated the glory it promised, sighed for the relief it heralded!

Normalcy—the very word was as potent on the lips of Warren the Crusader as was "God wills it!" on the lips of Peter the Hermit. The nation has waited, the church has waited, the bank has waited, the street has waited, for the glorious days when normalcy should usher in its benign regime and a bab should be banned from our land.

And lo, here cometh Hugh Fullerton, star reporter for the sporting pages, to startle us by intimating that normalcy may be, not a victory, but a tragedy; and that "back to normal" may lose us the pennant!

Hugh is discussing the chances of the Cardinals for the National League championship. They head the list in the league, but Fullerton says they seem to lack the drive needed to clinch the flag. Their strength is "spotty," he says. For instance, there is Fournier, first sacker; "Fournier is hardly a championship first baseman. He has slumped back to his normal in hitting"—did you get that? "Slumped back to normal!" Back to normal—downward! Normalcy, with faces to the rear! Back to normal—and defeat by an abnormal team! A bab spells victory; normalcy means mediocrity, a goal for slumpers.

When folks talk to you about getting back to normal, ask them, "which way back?" If back to normal means losing our high ideals and our splendid goals: if it means taking our eyes off the world field and fixing them on the garage or the money till: if it means forsaking college to draw spending money Saturday nights: if it means slowing down on missionary offerings to install a new organ: if it means confusion and conflict and competition in raising missionary money instead of unified program and enlightened cooperation: if it means a penny a day to evangelize the heathen, and ice cream suppers to pay for the parsonage—if this be normalcy, we lose the flag. A well-known book a generation ago was entitled "The Nonesuch Professor in His Meridian Splendor." This ambitious title undertook to show how abnormal, how distinctive, how peculiar, are the people to whom God has revealed himself in saving grace. One smiles to think of Paul wrestling with the slogan "Back to normal" adopted, let us say, by the church at Corinth. That would certainly have given us a Third Letter to the Corinthians—and it would have outdone the Second! "Back to normal"—put that alongside "His unspeakable gift" and "unspeakable words"; and "the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded," and "My grace is sufficient for thee." He would have told that church in very plain Greek that they had picked a slumper's slogan, and would no longer need the shout he had given them, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory,"—for normalcy never took the prize or came off the field pennant-winner.

Normalcy has to do with rule, with precision, with regularity, with conformity. Normalcy may serve as a substitute for life, spirit, vision, power, conquest. But where the Spirit of God is, there is not normalcy but liberty; not rule but radiant life; not precision but overflow. Normalcy cleverly calculates strains, loads, capacities; and deals in moderation, by rule, with its task—and with its apportionments. Pennant-winning churches, victorious in prayer, in holiness, in evangelism, in missionary achievement, leap with full hearts to assent to that stirring challenge of Phillip Brooks: "O do not pray for tasks equal to your powers; pray for powers equal to your tasks: and then the doing of your work will be no miracle, but you will be a miracle, and men will wonder at you, and at the grace of God that is in you."

Our Lord in the Garden

The sermon here printed is from the book, "Lord, Teach Us To Pray," by Dr. Whyte of St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, recently published in America by the Doran Company, and referred to editorially in this issue. The book may be ordered from any branch house of the Publication Society.

By ALEXANDER WHYTE

*Gethsemane can I forget?
Or there Thy conflict see,
Thine agony and bloody sweat,—
And not remember Thee?*

"THEN cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane," says Matthew, who was one of them. "And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives," says Mark. "And he came out," writes Luke, "and went as he was wont, to the Mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him." And, then, John, who also was one of them, has it thus: "When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples. And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place; for Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with his disciples." Where our version says "a place called Gethsemane," the Vulgate version has "a villa"; while the Rheims version has in Matthew "a country place," and in Mark "a farm"—"a farm called Gethsemane." Now, there was in Gethsemane a garden, and the owner of that garden had given our Lord full permission to come and go in that garden when and where he pleased. Make yourself at home in my garden, said the owner of Gethsemane to our Lord; and he did so. "It was his wont to go out to that garden," says one of the evangelists. "He oftentimes resorted thither," says another.

Terrible Preaching

When he is leading his readers up to all this, Luke, with his practised pen, has two verses that throw a flood of light on the whole of that Passover week, so full of preaching and of prayer. "And in the daytime he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives. And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him." We have some of the sermons of that Passover week preserved to this day in the 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th and 25th of Matthew; and terrible sermons they must have been. They are sufficiently terrible to read to this day: and what must they have been to hear that week, and to hear from the lips of the Lamb! So terrible was his preaching that Passover week that it did more than anything else to bring matters to a head, and to a last issue, between the preacher and his enemies. If true preaching does not subdue us, it is sure to exasperate us. The better the preaching is, the more it is either a savour of life or a savour of death to him who hears it. "This was but a matter of seven days before he was crucified," says Dr. Thomas Goodwin, one of the savouriest of the Puritan preachers. "For, Christ when he saw that he must die, and that now his time was come, he wore his body out: he cared not, as it were, what became of him: he wholly spent himself in preaching all day, and in praying all night": preaching in the temple those terrible parables, and praying in the garden such prayers as the 17th of John, and "Thy will be done!" even to a bloody sweat.

Gethsemane

"And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. And he taketh with him Peter and James and John. . . . And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's-cast, and kneeled down, and prayed." Now, if you knew to a certainty that your last agony was to come upon you this Sabbath night; if all your past sins were this very night to find you out, and to be laid of God and man upon you—before morning—how many of us would you take with you? Christ took his eleven disciples—but he soon saw that they were far too many. Till he selected three, and said to the rest, "Tarry ye here." Who of us, and how many of us would you send for to-night, if you knew to a certainty that the wine-cup of the wrath of God was to be put into your hands tonight? Would you take your minister and your elder, and who else to make up the three? John Knox took his wife and said to her, "Read to me that Scripture on which I first cast my anchor." Have you a wife, or a mother, or a brother, or a friend who sticketh closer to you than your brother, whom you could let come within a stone's-cast of your soul, when your agony was upon you? No. Not one. We should all have to stand back when the heaviness and the exceeding sorrow, and the amazement and the great agony came, and the bloody sweat.

Down to Gehenna, and up to the throne, He travels the fastest, who travels alone.

"And he began to be sorrowful, and very heavy," says Matthew. But the second of the four evangelists, with those wonderful eyes of his, says a still more startling thing. "He began to be sore amazed" is Mark's inexpressibly striking contribution to this awful, this absolutely unfathomable history. Our words, our very best words—even the words in which the Holy Ghost teaches us—all fail us here. The best and the most expressive of our words do not come near describing our Lord in anything he was, or in anything he did. When our Lord "began to be sore amazed and very heavy," it was not such a beginning as ours even is. He began: that is, he took a deliberate step: he performed a deliberate act: he, of his own accord, opened the doors of his soul: he poured in on his own soul, he let pour in, all the unutterable woe of that unutterably woeful night.

Sore Amazed

We set ourselves, with all our might, to see and to feel just what it was that our Lord both did, and endured, that dreadful night: but we give up the effort utterly baffled. "It is too high, and we cannot attain to it." We cannot wade out into all the waves of woe that went over his soul that night and that morning. We need not try it—for we cannot do it. He trod the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with him. We should need to be both God and man, as he was: we should need to be the Lamb of God, as he was: we should need to be "made sin," as he was—before we could possibly understand in what way "He began to be sorrowful and very heavy." The second evangelist far surpasses all the rest, and he far surpasses himself, in his extraordinarily bold and soul-piercing word—"He began to be sore amazed." Luther declared that, to him, these words of Mark about our Lord were the most astonishing words in the whole Bible. And that saying of Luther's is to me a sure measure of the greatness and the freshness of the reformer's mind and heart. Speaking for myself,—I have not come on any word in the Bible that has more both invited and then utterly baffled me to bottom than just this word "amazed." I cannot see my Lord's human soul as I here seem to be invited in to see it. I cannot picture to my mind his experience at that supreme moment. What was it that so "amazed" our Lord in the Garden of Gethsemane? What was there that could begin to so sorely amaze him to whom all things were naked and open? There was nothing that could so sorely amaze the Son of God, but only one thing. And that one thing was sin. It was sin laid upon himself" till he was made sin." Sin is so unspeakably vile, and so unspeakably awful in its vile, that it "sorely amazed," and struck down, as to death and hell, the very Son of God himself. He had been "amazed" enough at sin before now. He had seen sin making angels of heaven into devils of hell. And he had seen sin making men, made in the image of God, to be the prey and the spoil, and the dwelling-places, and the companions, of devils. He had seen and he had studied all his days the whole malice and wickedness of the heart of man. It had been amazement and horror enough to stand and see deceit and envy and pride, and all of that kind, as he describes it in terrible words, "coming out of the heart" of man. But it was a new thing to our Lord to have all that poured in upon himself.

to be made sin "amazed" our Lord; absolutely overwhelmed him,—cast him into "an agony": it loaded him and sickened him, and slew him, down to death and hell. A terror at once and a horror: a terror and a horror at himself—to absolute stupefaction—took possession of our Lord's soul when he was made sin. The only thing anywhere at all like his amazement and heaviness, and exceeding sorrow and anguish, is the amazement and the heaviness, and exceeding sorrow and utter anguish of God's saints; when, in their life of highest holiness and most heavenly service, they, at the same time, both see and feel that they are still made of sin," as Andrewes has it. Their utter stupefaction of soul as they see all hell opening and pouring its bottomless wickedness all over their soul,—that is to taste something of what is behind of the amazement" of Christ. That is to drink of his cup: that is to be baptized with his baptism. It was sin, and it was sin on and in himself,—it was pure and simple SIN that so amazed and agonized our Lord. Take away all its terrible wages: take away its sure and full discovery and exposure: take away its dreadful remorse: take away both the first and the second death: take away the day of judgment and the fire that is not quenched,—all which is the mere froth of the cup,—take away all that, and leave pure SIN: leave pure, es-

"When Israel Out of Egypt Came"

By HELEN PARRY EDEN

"Et creavit Dominus super omnem locum montis sion et ubi invocatus est, nubem per diem, et fumum et splendorem ignis flammantis in nocte, super omnem omnem gloriam protectionis."

("And the Lord will create upon every place of Mount Sion, and where he is called upon, a cloud by day, and a smoke and the brightness of a flaming fire in the night: for over all the glory shall be a protection.") Isaiah 4:5, Douay Version.

WHEN Israel out of Egypt came

Along a desert way,
God went before to give them light,
His grace was as a fire by night,
And as a cloud by day.
So blessed Jesus, thou shalt be,
To all who call thy name,
A shade by day, a light by night,
A covert and a flame.
Without thy help how faint I stay Captive in Egypt, tenuit me Defectio.
[Sin held me.]
O lead me forth, Immortal Lamb,
For mine thou art, as thine I am,
Et super omnem gloriam Protectionis.
[And over all the glory shall be a protection.]

When Israel out of Egypt came

Along a weary track,
King Pharaoh's chase was keen and hot,
With horse and man and chariot,
To bring his bondsmen back.
So, O my spirit, thou shalt see,
When thou shalt turn from ill,
A world of evils in thy wake
To make thee serve them still.
And I who am so faint a prey,
How shall I shun them? Tenuit me Defectio.
Take then my part, Victorious Lamb,
For mine thou art, as Thine I am,
Et super omnem gloriam Protectionis.

When Israel out of Egypt came,

Through the Red Sea, alone,
King Pharaoh and his fatal host Sank like a heavy stone.
So in the passion of my Lord
If all my guilt is drowned,
My unacquainted feet shall tread
His city's golden ground;
Where none shall faint nor fall away
But live secure, reliquit me Defectio.

Whose Sun and Moon are Christ the Lamb, sential, unadulterated SIN,—what the apostle so masterfully calls "the sinfulness of sin." Conceive that, if you have the imagination. Look at that, if your eyes have been sufficiently anointed. Taste that, if your tongue is sufficiently tender and strong. Carry about that, continually, in a broken, prayerful, holy heart—and you, of all men, are within a stone's-cast of Christ in the garden: you are too near, indeed, for mortal man to endure it long: if you remain long there you will need an angel from heaven to strengthen you.

It was not his approaching death. Death and all its terrors did not much move, did not much disconcert, did not much discompose our Lord. He went up to meet his death with a calmness and with a peacefulness of mind, with a stateliness and with a serenity of soul that confounded the Roman centurion, and almost converted the governor himself. No. It was not death: it was SIN. It was that in which our mother conceived us: it was that which we drink up like water. It was that which we are full of, from the sole of the foot even to the head. It was that which never cost us an hour's sleep. It was that which never caused us—it may be—a single moment of pain, or shame, or amazement of soul. It was SIN. It was hell-fire in his soul. It was the coals, and the oil, and the rosin, and the juniper, and the turpentine of the fire that is not quenched. "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold upon me. I found trouble and sorrow."

Who Shall Deliver Me?

"We know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. . . I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. . . Oh, wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? . . . For the flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other." That was not our Lord's amazement and agony: but that is as near our Lord's amazement and agony as any sinner can ever come. Are you able to drink of my cup, and to be baptized with my baptism?—Christ says to every true disciple of his, as he leads him down into the Gethsemane of his sanctification. Till, as his true sanctification—so very heavy, so exceedingly sorrowful, so sore amazing—goes on, that man of God enters into the "fellowship of the sufferings of Christ"; to a depth of pain and shame and tears and blood, that has to be hid away with Christ among the wine-presses and the crosses and the graves of the garden. For he—this elect soul—wrestles not any more with flesh and blood, but with principalities, and with powers, and with spiritual wickedness, in the high places of his own soul.

"Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? . . . Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?" The hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint as he wrestled with the angel. But with all that, there is one here greater than our father Jacob. Jacob halted on his thigh indeed, as he passed over Peniel. But our Lord's sweat with his agony was, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground. When the light of their lanterns shone on the dyed garments of the betrayed Man, who came to meet them, the Roman soldiers fell back. They had never before bound such a prisoner as that. There is no sword-stroke that they can see upon him; and yet his hands and his head and his beard are all full of blood. What a coat was that for which the soldiers cast their lots. It was without seam, but,—all the nitre and soap they could wash it with,—the blood of the garden and of the pillar was so marked upon it, that it would not come out of it. What became, I wonder, of that "dyed" garment? and all that "red apparel"?

If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember The first time Cæsar ever put it on; 'Twas on a summer evening, in his tent, That day he overcame the Nervii:— Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through:

See what a rent the envious Casca made: Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabbed;

And, as he plucked his cursed steel away,

Mark, how the blood of Cæsar followed it, . . .

Then burst his mighty heart: And, in his mantle muffling up his face,— Even at the base of Pompey's statue, Which all the while ran blood—great Cæsar fell.

O, what a fall was there, my countrymen! . . . Now let it work.

And as Peter preached on the day of Pentecost, he lifted up the seamless robe he knew so well: and, spreading it out in all its rents and all its blood-spots, he charged his hearers, and said: "Him ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. . . . Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

"O piteous spectacle! O noble Cæsar! O woeful day! O most bloody sight! Most noble Cæsar, we'll revenge his death! O royal Cæsar! Here was a Cæsar! When comes such another? Now let it work!"

And, one way it will surely work is this,—to teach us to pray, as he prayed. "And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place,"—most probably Gethsemane,— "when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray!"

1. Our blessed Lord had "a place" of prayer that he was wont to retire to, till even Judas knew the place. We should have said that the Son of God did not need retirement and seclusion and secrecy in order to seek and find his Father. We should have said that he did not need our aids, and instruments, and appliances, and means of grace. He was always "in the spirit." He was always collected, and disposed, and heavenly-minded. And yet, for reasons of his own our Lord had a closed-in place of his own,—an olive-tree, a wine-press, a stone's-cast out of sight where he sought and found his Father.

2. The wrestlers in the ancient lists went and practised themselves on the spot where they were to-morrow to close with their enemy. They went down into the arena alone. They looked around. They looked up at the seats where the spectators would sit. They looked up at the throne in which Cæsar would sit. They looked well at the iron door at which their enemy would come in. They felt their flesh. They exercised their joints. They threw and were thrown, in imagination. And the victory was won before the day of their agony came. Pray much beside and upon your bed, my brethren. You will die, as you hope, in your bed. Well, make it, and yourself, ready. "Forefancy" the last enemy. Have your harness in repair. Feel the edge of your sword. Aye; cross the Kedron sometimes, and stand beside your fast-opening grave, and read your name on the cold stone. For, The arrow seen beforehand slacks its flight.

3. And our last lesson is this: Non multa, sed multum, that is to say, "One thing is needful." The cup! the cup! the cup! Our Lord did not use many words: but he used his few words again and again, till, this cup! and thy will!—thy will be done, and this cup—was all his prayer. Cato the censor,—it did not matter what he was speaking about in the senate house, or what bill was upon the table—ended every speech of his with the same gesture, and with the same defiant exclamation. —Delenda est Carthago! "The cup!" "The cup!" "The cup!" cried Christ: first on his feet: and then on his knees: and then on his face. "Avenge me of mine adversary!" cried the widow. "Avenge me of mine adversary! Avenger me of mine adversary!" And, O God! this day, from this day forward, avenge us of ours. Our one and only enemy is sin. Delenda, avenge!

Lord, teach us to pray.
Now let it work!

How Much?

"The love of Christ constraineth us."

THE night lies dark upon the earth—
And we have light;
So many have to grope their way—
And we have sight.

One path is theirs and ours—
Of sin and care—
But we are borne along,
And they their burden bear.

Foot sore, heart-weary, they faint
Upon their way,
Mute in their sorrow, while
We kneel and pray.

Glad are they of a stone
On which to rest,
While we lie pillowed on
The Father's breast.

Individuality and the Social Ideal

Sermon delivered in the Old South Church, Boston, by the pastor, George A. Gordon

For each man shall bear his own burden. Galatians 6:5.

THE social ideal, as well it may, appears to our time with wondrous beauty and attractiveness. Never since Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God on the hillsides of Judea, by the River Jordan, by the sea of Tiberias and the fields of Galilee has the social ideal exercised more fascination over mankind than it does today. The whole of Palestine came out to hear Jesus, the prophet of a regenerated Israel and of a regenerated humanity. And if he were here today this part of his teaching would instantly inflame the mind of the better portion of the world. And all this is well. It is something for which we may and should give thanks,—the responsiveness of the higher mind of the world and the higher sentiment of the world to the glory of the social ideal. We may well give thanks over the selection which the devotees of the social ideal have made in claiming Jesus as their great prophet. "Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ"; so Paul renders the social ideal of Jesus.

We must add that men fail to take account of the presence in the teaching of Jesus of two programs, the social program and the personal program. The one is absolutely essential to the other, and it is this fact of individuality, so seldom emphasized today, that we find emphasized in the text. I believe that there is everywhere an over-emphasis upon the social ideal in our generation and an under-emphasis upon the personal, individual ideal.

Environment Never Almighty

1. In the first place, however mighty environment may be, it is never almighty, which the social gospel, exclusive of the individual gospel, always tends to assume. Environment is never almighty, either for good or for evil. If the social ideal is the only ideal, all I have to do is to put a man in a good environment and he will be made good. Goodness by its nature cannot be manufactured from without; we should be rogues at heart, however much under way, if we did not have personal insight, personal appreciation, personal love, personal devotion. This is fundamental. The gospel that what you and I need is to be in a good environment is one-sided; its onedness is disastrous to you and me. The gospel that all the evil we have in our lives is to be laid on the back of the environment is again one-sided, and is nothing short of a calamity to the wrongdoer. I admit at once the very great power of environment; that we all know. But I intend that environment is never able to make good those who want to be bad; it never able to make those bad who want to be good. I beseech you, look at this sinness. I have seen all sorts of young men in my life, I have been in all sorts of environments, and I have never yet seen an environment that compelled a man to be good who wanted to be bad, or that compelled a man to be bad who wanted to be good; never. I regard it as an insult to man's character, if he has any, to say that he owes it all to environment; that a fundamental lie. And again I regard as the comfort of a sneak to a sneak when men are excused for the evil that they have done because of their "circumstances." There is no meaner gospel preached than that anywhere in the world.

2. Turn to the next point. It is essential that the social ideal shall be complemented by the personal ideal.

Take our Lord's parable of the lost son. He was in a most excellent environment, his father's home; but he broke out into the wide world. Why did he? Because he wanted to. He thought the better good was out there. His home was stale, flat, unprofitable. He wanted to see the world, he was eager for a good time, he desired to manage his own life. You say that he was foolish. But when he started out he traditions of his race. No doubt. Then as a young man he had a great many wondrous thoughts about good and in revolt against evil. Again no doubt. And there was his belief in God and the contact between the Infinite and his spirit. No doubt. All that is true, but all that together does not explain the business that he kept his integrity sound and true through trial after trial and appeal after appeal of the wicked world. It was the will applying early training, youthful ideals, all helps of every sort from man and from God, from contemporary life and from history; his creative will was essential, and the issue was a personal issue.

No parent can make a son good against his will. He may be given the best early training, and be surrounded with the best books, and be provided with the best friends, and still there is something in that boy that is his, that is he. He can break out of it all, and all that you can say of the environment is that it reduces the probability of moral disaster. But we must say again, no father can make his son good; if he could, the goodness, it must be added, that is compulsion would not be good. Free choice, free devotion to the eternal good; otherwise there is no good. No teacher, no friend, can compel goodness, the one in his pupil, the other in his friend. No, no; there is a personal equation, there is a personal power; that deep accountability of the soul, the creative source of all character, lies within.

Looking back over life I should repudiate, and I should repudiate in the name of every struggler for an honest manhood I have ever known, the gospel that without personal initiative, sustained, often agonized, character can be won in this world. "Ye have not resisted unto blood striving against sin"; there is the heroic, the divine, appeal. Here are reality and life as we know them.

We Want a Useful Life

The social gospel gives you a great glamour. What we want is triumph over lust, dishonor and shame of every kind now; we want to win fairness, reasonableness, integrity, fidelity, a useful life now. Bring the universe to help, if you can, but do not cloud the issue. It is yours and it is mine, and our failure is finally a personal failure, our victory is a personal victory. Let no social "Glory hallelujah" cloud the solemn personal issue; society cannot do for me what I was made to do for myself. Let there be no substitution of a new heaven and a new earth a thousand years hence for the interior harmony, the honor and nobility that I, through personal exertion, aided by the universe, may win here and now.

Jesus unites both gospels with incomparable power. He is a supreme socialist; the kingdom of heaven is a redeemed society, with all its powers flung round the individual life. Then again, Jesus cries, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and you have to fight your way into it. It is the second side that I think needs the emphasis today. I sometimes listen to speakers who seem to think that if we only had a social apparatus which evened everything up, we should all be just, all love the right things, all be sweet-hearted brothers, and everything would be

A Hymn to God the Father

WILT thou forgive that sin where I begunne,
Which was my sin, though it were done before?
Wilt thou forgive that sinne; through which I runne?
And do run still: though still I do deplete?
When thou hast done, thou hast not done.

For, I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sinne which
I have wonne
Others to sinne? and, made my sin their doore?
Wilt thou forgive that sinne which
I did shunne
A year, or two: but wallowed in, a score?
When thou hast done, thou hast not done,

For, I have more.

I have a sinne of fear, that when I have spurne
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;
But swear by thy self, that at my death thy sonne Shall shine as he shines now, and heretofore;
And, having done that, Thou hast
done,

I fear no more.

—John Donne (1573-1631)

thought he was wise, and he followed what he regarded as his wisdom. The discipline of his life made him see in retrospect that he had been foolish. Very well; but he broke out from the good environment into what he later called the bad environment, and when his discipline had opened his eyes, what was the first thing that he said? "I will arise and go to my father." There was good environment waiting for him, hospitable, tender, sympathetic, with a welcome back; but it could not compel him to come back. It was the assertion of his own indestructible freedom that brought him back.

There is the temptation of Jesus. What preserved his integrity all through that great trial? You reply, his early education. He was brought up in the most beautiful way by his mother; he loved his mother, and she steeped him in the noblest lovely. I do not say that distribution is right as it is today; but I do say this, that you can never make character by machinery. Suppose that degrees were granted to college men, that summa cum laude were given to every one, no matter what his standing or his rank; how long would that kind of civilization stand in competition with another that encourages the winning of merit, of power of every variety, that endeavors to push development to the highest pitch?

3. Jesus said the way to the social gospel is through the individual. Redeemed men individually, working together, bring on the kingdom. If a man is faithful and serviceable, honest, efficient, clean within, true without, is he not the best kind of a social servant?

I hope I need not say that I am in profoundest sympathy with all efforts of a religious character to help the community, but there is one thing that I distinctly do not like to hear: I do not like to hear these efforts called "religious" at the expense of others. A good father, a good conductor, a good brakeman, a good sailor, a man in office of any kind, with a definite opportunity to do the world a service, and who does it like a man, puts character into it, and makes it elevate his soul in the doing of it, that man is to me an apostle of religion. Whoever standing at his task, man or woman, anywhere in the world, does it well, does it honorably, puts conscience into it, gets character from it, that individual is in my judgment a great social servant.

When I was in Athens I went, as all travelers do, to the Acropolis. I looked at the marvelous Parthenon, and saw a little temple nearby called the Erechtheum. The roof of that beautiful temple is supported by a line of Caryatids running round the temple, majestic female figures, draped, each standing solemnly under the burden placed upon her own head. Every Caryatid bears her own burden. There she stands, solemn, under the weight placed upon her head as her duty; on either side another is doing the same thing. Thus they run round the temple and the individual burden multiplied has for its result that the roof of the temple is sustained.

The way in which to support a Christian civilization is for each individual to stand under and bear up his own burden. Nothing can be done if we drop out of the place that is ours. Each individual in his own place, under his own burden, all together supporting the temple of God, every individual service a sure contribution to a social service; that is my social gospel. Any other way into light is hidden from me. I can see no other way of bringing on the kingdom of God than this: every individual must resolve to stand under evermore, in all solemnity, in silent majesty, and with sublime content, his own burden.

Where'er We Seek Him

By FLORENCE CRANNELL MEANS

"LET us lift up our eyes unto the hills," where God draws near to his creatures. These hills before me now: how serenely they sit enthroned, green robes drawn around them, and granite crowns upon their brows; unchanged in the lifetime of man; tranquil in sun and storm. Can a man live with them, look to them, and his soul fail to grow toward their stature?

We ask it, and we are answered by some of the mountain-dwellers we know. Strong souls there are among the hills, of course; but there are other bickering, loveless ones, dull of spirit, dull of eye: trudging through the glories of the very Throne Room with their gaze fixed on their own dusty feet. We are answered by some of the "summer folk," their ears attuned to jazz when God's own symphonies are whispering, sighing, thundering about them: their eyes keen for the summer styles when they might be seeing the hem of his garment.

Is there any truth, then, in the instinct that sends man to the mountain tops to worship God? Man has sought them, doubtless, from the shadow-times of history. A little hill near at hand is known as "Sun Dance Mountain." What pictures the name evokes, of red men performing their rites before the sun god, faces upflung to the sky in an abandon of fervor!—"Our fathers worshipped in this mountain," said the Samaritan woman. And it was on Mt. Moriah that the forebears of our faith set up the house of Jehovah. "Here nothing can stand between God and me!" man cries.

But he is wrong. Himself can stand between God and him, as well on the peak as in the valley. The loftiest mountain does not lift him nearer God than the depths of the deepest well—our God, who is not aloof in the skies. And surely he should see God's fatherhood no less in the throng of his human creation than in his creation of bird and beast and tree and flower.

Yet he is right. So long as man is affected by his environment; so long as he prays better in a quiet room than in the Union Station; so long will he have a keener sense of the nearness of God on the hilltop—if his heart is turned toward him there.

For here is none of the dust and grime that man has made; none of his ugly streets and ugly piles of brick and wood and stone; none, even, of the tragic faces that greet us at every corner and show us how he has defaced the image of God. Here, instead, we see God's handiwork, unspoiled, unmarred, fresh from the heart of the Almighty. How easy to enter into

the track
Whose sharp-set stones my strength had well-nigh spent;
I could not meet your eyes if I turned back,
So on I went.

Because you would not yield belief in me,
The threatening crags that rose my way to bar,
I conquered, inch by crumbling inch—to see
The goal afar.

And though I struggle toward it through hard years,
Or flinch, or falter blindly, yet within,
"You can," uncovering my spirit hears,
And I shall win.

ALDIS DUNBAR In The Century.

communion with him, where all is so clearly his own.

Last Sunday morning, early, we set out to attain the heights. The sun glittered on polished pine needles and awoke their spicy fragrance. A great jay flew on a spread of broad wings from the spruce by the cottage. A goldfinch poised brilliantly above a thistle.

The sun had conquered the hilltops, but the canyon was still shadowy, and cool with the breath of night. Shadowy, and cool, and filled with the myriad unceasing voice of the brook. The brook! it dashed itself in foam against jagged rocks; it slipped in glassy curves over rounded boulders; it slid softly beneath stony arches; it rushed down in a white cascade; it flowed into our very minds, and drove from them all memory of less lovely sound. We did not say: "This is God's handiwork, the work of his fingers." Perhaps we did not think it, in words: it sang itself to our souls.

God's Tapestry

Across the canyon, the opposite hillside rose in an unbroken tapestry of living green, evergreen above evergreen from base to summit—his tapestry. Nearer us we saw them as single trees; pines of various forms and habits; a spruce with weeping needles; a balsam with its gray leafage upturned like Christmas candles; a cone-shaped cedar—all his curious creation of conifers. And at the summit of a mighty rock stood a pine, clasping the barren stone in careless security: secure because God had taught the little seedling to send its roots down through the cleft—down, down to the earth and water it must have.

Now we pause on the margin of a mountain lake, where the tapestry is mirrored in the still green depths. And see the hand of the Master Artist. And marvel.

A little farther, and we dip into a thicket of aspens. Flowers are spread in a brilliant carpet among the slim silver boles: scarlet glia, tall blue larkspur, wild asters, purple and gold. Perhaps we do not quote the words:

"To see the world in a grain of sand,
And heaven in a wild flower:
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
Eternity in an hour," but the half-formed thought plucks our heart-strings to song.

Out upon the ascending path again! A rock squirrel freezes plumply against a boulder as we approach, and regards us over his shoulder with a bold, unblinking stare. A fairy chipmunk, small enough to sit in the palm of my hand, flashes across the path and darts up the swaying stem of a wayside weed. A bird floats on still wings from tree to tree. "And the great God who loveth us, he made and loveth all."

We stand in the sun upon our mountain top at last. Far, far plains stretch out to a misty blue skyline. Bits of lakes glint and glimmer. A free, sweet, piney breeze caresses us. The sky arches, blue and deep and tender, above us and around us. Who can doubt that this is the very temple of God, and that he is walking with us upon his hilltops?

And then we go down into the valley to worship him again in a little temple builded with wood and nails.

"Where'er we seek him he is found,
And every place is holy ground."

"No More Lonesome"

By JANIE PRICHARD DUGGAN

AT the time of the beginning of the mission for Mexicans in San Diego, Doña Vicenta was alone in the world except for an elderly nephew. She lived at that time with a Chilean friend, near the Mexican chapel. She had been ill and unable to walk to St. Joseph's Church—Roman Catholic. On invitation she topped in, instead, one morning at the Spanish Bible school in the chapel. In the almost nine years succeeding, it is safe to say that she was never absent from a mission service. From the small sums paid her from time to time as caretaker of an invalid or children, she always managed to have her penny for the Bible School offering. She was an old woman and could do little more than sit with the baby while the mother worked, potter about the house and kitchen or "run" errands on rheumatic feet, but faithful to the least care entrusted to her.

From the beginning of her reading of the New Testament (for Doña Vicenta read and wrote well, unlike many aged women among her people) she developed a voracious appetite for "the Truth." She sometimes spoke reverently of her mother as "in the far away and long ago" of old Mexico, and of her Bible, read but of clearly understood for want of a teacher, but for Doña Vicenta herself it was a new book. From the study of the gospels, she passed to the Acts of the apostles, from the Acts to the Epistles, absorbing in a truly marvelous way the undoubted truths of redemption and regeneration. Her interest and joy increased, from week to week. She never failed to come early to the missionary's "at home" on Wednesday afternoons in the little side-room of the chapel—not for a cake or coffee, as no one thought of such things there—but waiting patiently for the last Mexican visitor to leave. Then she would say: "Now let us have our talk and prayer!"

After weeks of study and of drinking of the missionary's teaching in open meetings—there was no pastor as yet for a new mission—it seemed that she was ready to respond to a call for coming out among others who had not yet answered God's inner call, so one Sunday evening at a quiet service of song and reading, an invitation was given for any one present who might wish to do so, to express openly a desire to "follow the Saviour all the days of his or her life." Vicenta's response was immediate. She had not been prepared beforehand in any way for making such a confession, nor had she learned from others a "gospel language" for expressing herself. So with childlike simplicity she only repeated in firm voice the leader's words: "I want to follow the Saviour all the days of my life."

From that day her progress was even more rapid. The mission was in its first age as yet. There had been no previous converts. She had not learned the mechanical steps necessary to be taken in becoming a member of a Protestant church. Gradually, in her own reading and through searching questions, she felt her way toward a great desire to become a member of the Lord's church—naturally a Baptist church in her case. "I wish to be baptized Jesus was," she said firmly, one day.

An interview was arranged with the pastor, Dr. Wm. H. Geistweil, and the deacons, of the First Church of San Diego, Calif. Already they had learned something of Doña Vicenta's spiritual history and they were quite ready to admit her to membership on the recommendation of the missionary, after a few questions had been asked and answered through her as interpreter. The pastor, however, suggested that as Mrs. Rivas spoke a little English, a few spontaneous words expressive of what her new hope and love had done for her would be gladly heard also. No one who saw the lighting up of the old face at this suggestion can ever forget the words that followed to this effect: "I very glad to speak. Long time ago I lonesome all 'e time. I no brother, I no sister. Now, no more lonesome! I sick, I sad all 'e time. Now, no more sick, I happy all 'e time!" This was all, but tears dimmed the eyes of several of her hearers at the triumphant tones of the quavering old voice in emphasizing her naive antitheses.

She was baptized that day, the bowed little figure in the white robe hardly visible above the baptismal rim. As she stood behind the partition before entering the water, and out of hearing, Dr. Geistweil spoke from the baptismal to his waiting congregation giving, in her own words, her testimony before the committee of deacons.

Doña Vicenta was the first Mexican woman immersed in San Diego. With the years, others have followed slowly. She was not often able to go to the Lord's (Continued on page 905)

Corrective Magnifying

By PETER C. LARSEN

"The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified." Acts 19:17.

MAGNIFYING the Lord, in worship and service—in testimony and life, has always been a vital and outstanding characteristic of God's people of all times, individually and corporately. The poetic superlatives of the Psalms abound in declarations of, and exhortations to magnify the Lord. "Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy salvation say continually, the Lord be magnified." Ps. 40:16. Many years after, Mary the mother of Jesus exclaimed, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." Luke 1:46, 47. We read of Cornelius and his household that they heard the gospel, believed it, the Holy Spirit fell on them, and visitors "heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God." Acts 10:46. The outstanding feature of the work of grace in Ephesus was that "the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified."

By magnifying the Lord, we mean to turn our thoughts, emotions and activities in the right direction. The soul, originally destined to magnify the Lord, in its unregenerate condition magnifies the creature in place of the Creator—self in place of Christ. Only by coming back to the Lord does the soul become able really to magnify—trustingly and joyfully—the Lord. Thus the life becomes divinely normal. And as with the individual, so with the church, when the Lord is magnified, the condition is normal—the work prospers.

This leads us to the thought of our subject, "Corrective Magnifying." Magnifying the Lord is primarily a result of believing and obeying "the word of God" (v. 20). The word is also a wonderful corrective. It was a corrective of many ills in Ephesus. It is a corrective of many ills today.

1. Magnifying the Lord will correct the tendency to magnify ourselves. "He must increase,"—was not an emotional outburst, but a life-principle of true devotion. Says one, "I am a lot more afraid of myself than of the devil." We have all experienced subtleties of selfishness, such as pride and vain glory, magnifying self in place of Christ. Let us put the conceited ego where it belongs—on the Cross! The elder brother said "I," "I," "I." If he had humbly, harmoniously and appreciatively rejoiced in the new turn of affairs, and magnified his father for his merciful attitude to and generous reception of his younger brother, whatever selfishness there was, would have been swept away as the darkness before the morning sun. It would have been a corrective.

2. Magnifying the Lord will also correct the tendency to magnify doctrinal differences. We believe in doctrine. We have our opinions and interpretations. We have no respect for a religious jellyfish. But on the other hand, we have no love either for a religious stone statue—for a hypercritical, narrow-minded, uncharitable denunciation of or underhanded undermining of brotherly love. A politician's son asked his father what a traitor was. "One who leaves our party and goes to another." "But if he joins our party?" "Then he is a convert." Mr. Gresham left the Republican party, and became Secretary of State in President Cleveland's cabinet. Members of the one party bitterly assailed him as a traitor, and members of the other party welcomed him as a convert. What bitter doctrinal controversies church history records! Shall the Baptist denomination record another doctrinal controversy with its sad results? Yes, if doctrine is magnified in place of the Lord. Magnifying the Lord is the corrective. The Indianapolis Northern Baptist Convention theme: "The Uplifted Christ," was a happy presidential inspiration. And that, I submit is our denominational corrective. Correcting on the one hand a spirit of carnal controversy, and on the other a drifting away from the essentials of the Gospel. If the Lord were to examine us, as to our knowledge, whether "conservative" or "liberal," what do we know? Standing in the presence of the glorified Christ what would we say? Said one of the most scholarly and consecrated of ministers in England, when dying, and soon to meet his Lord: "I am a poor sinner saved by grace." And, brethren, that is the best any of us can say.

Evangelistic Missions: Some Words of Warning

By A. E. GARVIE

WHEN Dr. Clifford proposed the campaign of personal evangelism, I welcomed it very heartily, and all over the country I have been speaking in support of it; and for three reasons: (1) The church of Christ should always be evangelizing—that is, winning souls for Christ; if that is not its constant purpose its worship, witness and work will lack the life of the Spirit of God. (2) This is a trust and task of the church which belongs not to the whole only, but to all the parts, to all the members, for all can, by speech, example, and influence, commend Christ to others as Saviour and Lord. (3) As Dr. Clifford explained his proposal, what he desired was that believers as disciples should seek to win others also as disciples; that means, in my judgment, a necessary and desirable return to a Christian type of experience and character, from lack of which the churches have been suffering, instead of belief in a plan of salvation. That means personal relationship to Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, in compassioning with Him, learning of Him, bearing His yoke, and taking up the cross to follow Him to the end. This is the kind of Christian needed today, and it is not the kind that evangelistic missions have usually produced.

To feel safe from hell and sure of heaven, and so happy all the day, is what has seemed to be the highest result reached in many of the converts. We have learned something about mob psychology; and in a crowded meeting, full of excitement and expectancy by use of this means to stir up the emotions, changes of feeling can be produced, which have little connection with true conviction or holy resolves. Emotional disturbances have been mistaken for personal conversions.

As a boy at school I came in contact with the results of Mr. Moody's first mission in Scotland, and was impressed with the reality of the movement. It did effect a very real change in the religious life of Scotland. As a youth I heard him once on his second visit, and was deeply impressed by the genuineness of the man, a great Christian. No other evangelist whom I have heard since has impressed me in the same way. I have no desire to depreciate the work of any good man; and I need hardly say that in writing this I am not attacking any particular person. I am simply stating why I consider it would be a misfortune if evangelistic missions on a big scale were substituted for this personal evangelism. (1) The atmosphere of such a mission is often artificial, and results produced in it are likely to be less stable than those wrought in the normal atmosphere of the church's worship, witness, and work. (2) The evangelist is expected to produce conversions, and his value as an evangelist is appraised by the number he produces. (3) He is himself in danger of measuring his own success not by the quality of religious experience and moral character which results from his message and method, but by the quantity of professions which can be recorded. (4) To be always doing the one kind of Christian work, arriving at the one kind of result, is likely to narrow his personality as well as his theology; the cares and interests of a pastorate are,

I am sure, necessary to fit a man to do even the best work as an evangelist. (5) There is a still more deadly danger—to be puffed up with pride in the number of converts won; to be always making a boast of one's success, and, worst of all, to use that success as a reason for higher payments for one's services—not all evangelists have escaped that peril. It is well for us to recognize the danger of relying on evangelistic missions instead of personal evangelism and the duty of us all to become ourselves personally evangelists. New College, July 10.

Witnessing Unto Blood In Nicaragua

By P. T. CHAPMAN

(Rev. and Mrs. P. T. Chapman, home missionaries, have taken charge of the work in the eastern part of the Republic of El Salvador.)

IT has been the privilege of the congregation in Guatajiagua to witness unto blood in the person of its recently baptized member Juan Aguirre. He is an Indian and lives on the outskirts of the above named Indian town. He is over sixty years of age and in some recent meetings had received great blessing. To see his eager face was an inspiration.

While tending his cow one day Juan was attacked by a young man with a machete. The fanatic evidently had been drinking. "So you are an evangelico, are you?" he asked and without more ado began chopping the old man with a machete, a large knife with a blade some two feet long which all the laboring class carry in Central America. After several minor wounds the thumb of the right hand was almost severed and then an awful gash in the left cheek almost severed the ear, cutting through the muscles of the jaw. At this point others interfered and the assailant, possibly somewhat sorry for what he had done, threw his machete to the ground telling Juan to take it and avenge himself. This Juan refused to do and when afterwards he saw the authorities he refused to accuse his assailant.

I was telegraphed for and when I arrived next day found that the wounds had been roughly sewed up with cotton. There were only two stitches where there should have been a dozen. It was evident that if Juan's life was to be saved he must be taken into San Miguel. It was a rough ride in a springless cart for twenty-four miles but was accomplished by Juan with Indian fortitude. We are glad to say that his wounds healed well and he has now gone back to his home without fear, ready to testify for what he knows is the truth of God.

The congregation has since suffered considerable persecution because the people, seeing that nothing was done by the authorities, and incited by the priests who tell them that the evangelicos are dogs and can be killed without consideration, have been emboldened. At the same time letters have come to hand telling of spiritual blessing and six more have identified themselves with our little congregation of Baptists.

These Indian towns are desirable trophies to bring to our Lord. Each town has its patrimony in some article of manufacture which has been handed down for many centuries. In Guatajiagua the inhabitants are dedicated to the making of all kinds of earthenware. The next town is occupied with the making of mats, the next with palm hats, and so each keeps to its own industry without infringing on that of its neighbors. Its industry has probably been decided by its location and by what happens to grow or may be found in the vicinity; for example, the clay in one place, the reeds in another and the palms in another.

It is generally a dangerous job when the gospel is taken to these towns for the first time. Recently preaching in a town for the first time, the missionary found upon his arrival that the priest had made all preparations for his reception. The town band was in attendance, but not to welcome him. The priest marched with it around the town halting at different points and led the town in shouting "Death to the Protestants! Long live our Lady of Peace!" Then a woman of the town was paid five pesos to take her family and do all that she could to disturb the meeting. In spite of this, however, a useful and well-attended meeting was held. After this the missionary and his party were stoned from the town. At this point we see the importance of our printing press, for it is manifestly impossible for our missionary to visit regularly the numerous towns of this class which contain his half million parishioners. Our press makes it possible to maintain a monthly visit of El Heraldo, the organ of our mission in El Salvador, which is sent by post to some thirty inhabitants of this town commencing with the priest himself and including the poor degraded woman who was his tool. Does it not seem necessary to our readers to send the gospel to a country where the religious leaders still employ such methods?

The Larger Evangelism

THE evangelism of our day is too small; sometimes it is superficial, spasmodic, emotional, professional, statistical, temporary and destructive of the highest values. There is a real need for a larger evangelism that will combine all the good suggestions made and eliminate all the objectionable features named.

This evangelism will be based upon the New Testament teachings and practice, plus the fundamental human needs as discovered by a thoroughly sympathetic study of human nature; it will be hospitable to the conclusions of the best psychology and pedagogy; it will be in all the programs of the churches all the year; it will seek to enlist all the membership in all the work of evangelism; it will be under the leadership of the pastor; it will be personal as well as congregational in its appeal; it will begin in religious education, pass through the evangelistic appeal and end in Christian or social service.

Such an evangelism as this will honor God and the Book and will enlist the active sympathies of educated people; it will mean a perennial revival and result in bringing the Kingdom of God into a community as well as in human hearts and lives.—J. E. DILLARD in Alabama Baptist.

In Relief of Doubt

"John summoned two of his disciples and sent them to ask the Lord, 'Are you the Coming One? Or are we to look out for some one else?' . . . Jesus at that moment was healing many people of diseases and complaints and evil spirits; he also bestowed sight on many blind folk. So he replied, 'Go, and report to John what you have seen and heard; that the blind see, the lame walk, lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and to the poor the gospel is preached. And blessed is he who is repelled by nothing in me!'"—(Luke 7:19-23, Moffatt's translation.)

"We must tell people that things happened in Christ, and through him are happening still, which nothing but God's boundless power can account for."—H. R. Mackintosh.

JESUS lives and works and saves here and now in this present world in which we live. Evangelism is a means whereby he achieves his saving purpose for sinners; and evangelism is an unsalable apologetic for our gospel, which herein reveals itself as the power of God into salvation.

The brief paragraphs which follow are gathered from the annals of current Christian activity and experience in the world, and remind us anew that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, yea and forever.

What Dr. Lerrigo Saw in the Congo

ON Sunday morning the services commenced at six o'clock, when a great group of the people repaired to the bottom of the hill for an early morning service. It behooved them to start early, for there were hundreds to be baptized. Rev. Thomas Moody had done his best to limit the number, desiring to be quite certain that each should be thoroughly instructed and should have given good proof of conversion before being taken into the church. He had repeatedly pointed out the danger of taking unconverted people into the church. The pastors assured him, however, that all these people had been under the influence of the gospel for five years, had received special instructions or three months, had been carefully examined by the deacons and the churches; that they had been living true lives and had been contributing regularly to the work of God. Name after name was added until there were 380 who were baptized at that early morning service. The pastors assured us that in every one of the churches they were keeping back twice the number accepted.

The Inasmuch Quartet

PHILADELPHIA lost one of its most valued and loved citizens a few years ago when George Long of the Inasmuch Mission went home to his Lord. His story is fully told in an article in the World's Work published some years after the founding of that mission on Feb. 1, 1911. Four men gathered in a little room in the Street, all of whom had been saved from lives of terrible sinning, prepared and signed the following covenant:

"We with all humility, being four men who have been to the very gates of hell, and who, only through the gracious love and saving power of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, have been redeemed, erewith this first day of February 1911 consecrate our lives to him and his work. Our object and endeavor shall be, by the love, grace, and power of God, through his Son, Jesus Christ, to redeem the fallen, giving aid, help, comfort, strength and sympathy, both material and spiritual, to the needy, and do his blessed will, as he reveals it to us at all times, and at all places, to hasten the coming of his kingdom.

"Say what you will, there is something in the Christian religion which is astonishing."

(Signed) Arthur Taylor, George Tyler, Randolph M. Lawrence, George Long."

For seven or eight years George Long fought a heroic and winning fight against sin in himself and in the world, and then received his emancipation and went home. The great building which was erected by his efforts remains a witness to the power of Christ in the life of a man who had been for twenty years a dope fiend, and who, as he said, had never fallen—he had never been high enough to fall!

Jesus Saves!

By E. H. JONES

I WAS travelling to Yokohama on a third-class car. As usual there was a great crowd, especially as we are near the great centers of population, Tokyo and Yokohama. Every seat was occupied by busy hurrying people. As we stop at a station two men carry in a helpless cripple. Some people kindly make a place for him on one of the seats, but it is found to be too narrow to be comfortable. Then the bearers prepare to seat him on the floor. He is very dirty. Every one here thinks the floor is the proper place for burned matches, cigarette stumps, and empty tobacco papers. Almost everybody in Japan, except the Christians, smokes. Banana and other fruit peelings, and nut shells are scattered around. Seeing what they are about to do with the poor fellow I offer to spread my travelling rug for the man to sit on. They accept reluctantly but gratefully.

When he is duly seated I get near and have a talk with him. He is an ex-soldier who was crippled by a fall when in the army, doing such injury to his spine that he became paralyzed from his hips down. He knew something of Christ and gladly received the words of instruction and encouragement which I gave him. When he reached his station I gave him some tracts, and bade him good-bye. He thanked me and asked my name. I pointed to the address on the books I had given him and we parted.

It was only a trivial act of kindness I had done him, but see the result. Some time after I found among some new tracts which I bought one entitled "Disabled In Body but Triumphant in Spirit," by Kogota Kangai. Upon reading it I found the man told the story of the kind act I had done him on the train, mentioning my name, and attributing his conversion to me. Others had talked to him, and had given him tracts, but God permitted me to be the last link in the chain of circumstances which brought him to surrender.

The man now sits in his little room in a farmer's house, five miles from Nakayama station, on the Hackioji R. R., translating, and composing tracts for our Interdenominational Christian Literature Society, and thus greatly helping to bring others of his countrymen to believe in Jesus, the sinner's Friend.

I find the personal touch is more effective in bringing people to Christ than any other method. I thank God for allowing me to be that "last link."

"Shorty"

PASTOR BEN COX of the Central Church, Memphis, sends us the following story out of the "mine run" of his work with broken lives:

"Shorty" came to us several years ago when very many men were out of work. He helped the janitor prepare the noon-day lunch, wash dishes and clean the church, receiving his meals therefor. Our faithful janitor, a colored man, Connie Anderson, has complete charge of these meals at the noon service, and has served a total of about 165,000 since the prayer meeting started, January 19, 1914. He has been used of God in leading to Jesus quite a number of these white men who have been helping him in the kitchen. One of these was Shorty. Shorty had been quite a drinker, but the first Christmas morning after he joined the church he came to me and said: "Dr. Cox, this is the first Christmas morning in twenty years that I have not had to face the judge." About four years ago he left for Houston, Texas, and has been doing fine work there in the rescue mission and also in the First Baptist Church. He is now in Memphis for a short visit. He brought with him several hundred dollars which he had saved up and he seems more zealous than ever in leading people to the same Jesus who is so precious to him.

Our Goals in Evangelism

By H. F. STILWELL

THE year closing with the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis recorded one of the greatest years, if not the greatest, in our history, in evangelistic results.

From the completest reports possible at the time of the convention upwards of 90,000 had been received into the fellowship of our churches. Grateful as we are for what was accomplished we are reminded that we were less than half way to the goal we had set for our task. Two hundred thousand converts during the convention year; this is not an unreasonable expectation. It means that there would be but one baptism for every seven of our enrolled church membership. Our goal ought not to be less than this. Every church should make this proportion the minimum in its efforts and expectation for the year.

The greatest wastage in our denominational life is the lack of a definite program in the local church. There are certain objectives that are never absent from the normal church activities. Evangelism, soul winning and life service, is primary among these objectives. Indeed so vital is it to all the interests of the church that, as the silken thread in the bank note tests its genuineness, so evangelism validates every effort of the church's life. Evangelism is not a hard and fast rule, nor a cut and dried method. It is a quest for the individual. It is fundamental as life, but in its approach and expression it is as varied as human experience. Therefore, to meet the variety of need God has called a variety of evangelists. Every Christian is called to be a witness to the great things the Lord hath done for him. Not every one will be a soul winner to the same extent or degree, but from a winning testimony no one is excused. Herein lies the power of the local church influencing its community. It is the Divine power in progressive Christianity, and is, therefore, the all-time task of the followers of Jesus.

Diversity of Talent

To realize the utmost efficiency it is desirable to effect in every church such organization as will utilize its diversity of talent. No body from without can impose such organization, but it may be helpful in suggestion. The General Board of Promotion has proposed and the convention adopted a program for the months ahead. So far as the churches will coordinate their plans with these suggestions by so far shall they create an emphasis of power. There is a very positive value in thinking and acting along similar lines at the same time. Unity in fact grows out of unity in purpose and effort. Nothing could be finer than for the churches throughout the convention field to plan and stress their work in accord with the suggested plan, viz.:

September—Facing the task: Rallying the forces. The goal is the presenting of Christ to every person for whom the church is spiritually responsible. The reaching the goal involves: 1. The selection of a pastor's council whose business is the evangelistic efforts of the entire church. No committee could be more important. The council ought to fix a regular definite time for meeting for prayer and study. 2. The dividing of the church

Evangelize!

GIVE us a watchword for the hour:

A thrilling word, a word of power,
A battle-cry, a flaming breath
That calls to conquest or to death,
A word to rouse the church from rest

To heed her Master's high behest.
The call is given: Ye hosts arise,
Our watchword is, Evangelize!

The glad evangel now proclaim
Through all the earth, in Jesus' name.

This word is ringing through the skies—

Evangelize, evangelize!

To dying men, a fallen race,
Make known the gift of gospel grace.
The world that now in darkness lies,
Evangelize, evangelize!

—Henry Crocker.

into working units; family groups of from five to ten families in each group. The pastor should appoint a leader for each group. Other group plans made to include special classes. Strive to have each member of the church in some group.

October—Stewardship of talents, time and treasure. Some definite part of these to be devoted to Kingdom service. Our goal in evangelism is that every believer shall be a "good steward of the gospel." There is an unquestioned value in the personal witnessing of the Gospel's saving power. The uplifted Christ is still the world's greatest attraction. Let us recover the witnessing church.

November—Evangelism and harvest ingathering. There ought to be two seasons for special soul winning effort. This is one. The Thanksgiving time lends itself to an effort to secure the widest enlistment into Kingdom service. Secure lists of unchurched people suggested by the church membership list, the Bible School membership lists, the young people, women's organization, etc. Compare these lists carefully that no one be overlooked. Distribute lists of the unchurched to members of the several groups for personal visitation. Near the Thanksgiving season have an ingathering day or week for which careful, intensive preparation has been made.

December—The Christ in the world. Our goal should be the evoking of our gifts

THE act of God in pardoning men is definitely supernatural in quality. Consciously to receive forgiveness is to know that a change has been effected in our relation to the Father which can be accounted for only by his direct interposition. If it be said, as doubtless it may be said with some point, that in the world of love forgiveness is a matter of course, this only throws us back on the marvelous character of a love such that to it forgiveness is natural.

for Him, white gifts to Him in the world, our supreme gift to Him in person. There is no time like this for decision hour in the Bible School and in the various church groups.

January—Prayer. Beginning the year with God. Studying the purpose and place and power of prayer in our own lives. Initiating the practice of prayer in all the church groups. Our goal to be the growing of an intense passion in our own soul for the unsaved and a willingness to go to them with loving persuasion. God wants them to be saved, but do we? Prayer brought the tongues of fire at Pentecost. Prayer brings the power still.

February—Our Bible, its origin and message. Whatever else it says, God, sin, and redemption are its great themes. Unless we have found salvation there we have failed to get its great message. To know how the Bible is shot through with it so that out of our personal experience of it we can tell it as glad, good news, ought to be the great goal of our Bible study. Bible study for soul winning.

A Crowning Day

March—Life service. Life surrendered to the good of the church, the community and the Kingdom, but no service will suffice unless it is the fruitage of a Christian soul. Christianizing the social unit, the individual, is the only way to make the community Christian. Here we come to close grips in our quest for the individual. This is the climactic period in the church's year. The whole Christian world is responding to the spirit of the Eastertide. Sermon, song, and story ought to be leading up to an ingathering period in which every department of the church should participate. Our goal should be to have in action "every disciple a discipler." Every service a service of decision until the dawning of the Easter morning. This could readily be made a crowning day when the new members would be received. Every service could include an effort to reach all who have not yet decided for Christ. The day ought to close with a triumphant spiritual service, praise, prayer, thanksgiving, and in many places, very appropriately, a communion service.

April-May—The forward look. A most important period of conservation of spiritual results attained. The education and organization of the new forces and resources into the wider Kingdom conquest. Education is the hand-maid of evangelism. It means much before the soul's supreme decision; it is absolutely essential afterward. Our goal here must be, by every effective method, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded."

Then comes the period of assemblies, associations and conventions, when the social and cooperative and continent-wide relations are to be considered.

There is no decadence for the church with such a program. It throbs with the spiritual impulses of the redemptive scheme of the Infinite. It has the joyous consciousness of a vital fellowship and partnership with Jesus Christ. His business and its business are one—catching men. One goal is uppermost and constant—"until the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord."

The New World Movement

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

An Announcement by the Chairman of the General Board of Promotion

By ALBERT L. SCOTT

IN sending out the report of the Committee on Organization and Program, the General Board of Promotion wishes to call the particular attention of the denomination to the following facts:

The work of the Board of Promotion is to be carried on during 1922-23 under the direction of the general director, Dr. John Y. Aitchison, as heretofore. The organization of the personnel has been simplified, expenses reduced and improvements in methods secured as a result of the experiences of the past two years.

The Board of Promotion has no administrative functions other than to promote the work of the denomination. It has nothing to do with the actual administration of any of the national societies and boards or of the state conventions or of the standard city mission societies. It is vitally interested in seeing that the work of all these societies is properly interpreted to the denomination and believes that as our people come better to understand the needs of our denominational work, they will feel more keenly their responsibility for it and will furnish the man power and money with which the work must be carried on.

The Board of Promotion, because of its very nature, cannot take sides in any theological controversy or in any question of policy regarding the administration of any of our denominational organizations. It has nothing to say regarding how the money which the denomination gives shall be spent except that part of the money which is assigned to the expenses of the Board of Promotion itself. The business of the Board of Promotion is to promote the program. Every measure which promotes the program, which arouses interest, which disseminates information, which brings our people closer in sympathy with our great enterprises, the Board of Promotion advocates.

The Board of Promotion has come into existence at the will of the convention in order to assume the special responsibilities outlined above, in the hope of thus making more effective the work of each organization included in the scope of the New World Movement. It cannot be antagonistic to any of these organizations; it is and must be cooperative and helpful.

The report of the Committee on Organization and Program has been prepared with this relationship of the Board of Promotion to the denomination clearly in mind. It includes a program of objectives for each church which it is hoped will lead to a deeper spiritual life and a greater realization of the opportunities which we all have of doing the Lord's work in the world together. It is the hope and prayer of the members of the Board of Promotion that the report of the committee will tend to promote the program and to advance the cause of Jesus Christ in the world.

Looking Over the Machinery

NORTHERN Baptist churches have before them a long non-stop run if the Ten Million Dollar Goal is to be attained by May 1, 1923.

August is a good time for the pastor and his fellow officers to take a look at the motor which is the driving heart of the church in its organized cooperation in the New World Movement.

Recent developments and modifications in the plan of campaign permit and call for readjustment here and there in order to bring the local church equipment up to date and unify all the cooperating interests.

The continuation campaign of the women and the revived layman's committee make opportune such readjustment in the interest of the highest efficiency and the finest fellowship in the work of the year.

The General Board of Promotion offers the following suggestions as to a simple and effective organization of the local church for the forthcoming campaign:

"1. On nomination of the woman's society or union, or in any other way deemed wise by the local body, a woman shall be appointed by the church to represent the women's work in connection with the continuation campaign of the New World Movement. Any pledges made or moneys secured in the local church shall be handled in accord with the practice of the local body but it is desirable that special contributions to the continuation campaign fund shall be kept track of by the appointee of the women's organization, remitted to the state office through the church treasurer or direct and reported by her to the associational woman's representative.

"2. On nomination of the men's brotherhood or laymen's committee in the local church or in any other way deemed wise a layman shall be appointed to represent the church in connection with the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council and in the promotion of a stewardship league.

"3. On nomination of the young people's society, or in any other way deemed wise by the local church, a member shall be appointed to represent that organization in the church in connection with the promotion of a stewardship league and other denominational interests.

"4. The pastor will meet with the woman's representative, the layman and young people's representative, thus making a committee of four in the local church to keep the organization in close touch with all the denominational program."

Under the Stair Closet

STAIR closets are fine places to hide in—as our boyhood memories testify. Just why churches have stair closets we do not know; but we do know what they are used for.

The big meat packers have established cold-storage plants in every town and city of importance throughout the country; and instead of storing all of their food products at Chicago or Kansas City they utilize the outlying plants for this purpose—and that is what the stair closet in the church is used for! It is the most capacious cold-storage plant for missionary literature you ever heard of. If all of the surveys, missionary tracts, leaflets on prayer and tithing, state convention reports, and other printed matter, could be hauled out of the stair closets of our churches and piled in one big heap, it would take a ball field to hold the pyramid thus built.

Food in cold storage feeds nobody. Promotion material under the stairs kindles no prayers, elicits no contributions, calls out no recruits, inspires no laggards, reveals no answers to prayer, brings no revival.

The very first objective in the new promotional program for this year is "that every member of a Baptist church shall be an informed member." That is to say, the resources hoarded in cold storage will be released and fed to hungry minds and hearts; and the new printed matter sent out from the Promotion Board and from the societies will be at once committed to a competent and energetic committee on information to be wisely and quickly distributed to all the church and congregation, to the local newspapers and library, and by mail to non-resident members and friends. We wonder where the New World Movement would be by this time—and where some of our detained missionaries would be also—if it had not been for that stair closet. Who killed Cock Robin? Too much cold storage for the Message! Pick your information committee, retrieve the printed matter, and nail up that closet!

The Chimney Corner

Who Only Stand and Wait

July 10.

Dear Little Mr. Flat-On-Your-Back,

The Lady-Who-Is-A-Waitress takes pen in hand to let you know what is happening to her in her new career. Today she told Ben Bolt about you, on this wise. He came in for breakfast so unusually early that I said to him, "You must be after the early worm!"

He looked at me as if he never dreamed waitresses could speak; probably he thought we were like one-way telephones, you could talk into the thing but nothing talked back. But when he found I was the two-way variety he brightened up considerably and I told him your favorite remark about—"of late you have been early, you used to be behind before, I'm glad to see you first at last!" Whereupon he said that it was a good guess about being an early bird, for he was going fishing, only he had gotten his worms the night before.

So then I said that I knew a boy named Peter who was a star fisherman, that he had caught a fish that weighed twenty pounds.

"What?" gasped Ben Bolt, bolting a poached egg straight down.

"Honest injun!" I said solemnly.

"Some fish!" sighed Ben Bolt. "Was it up here?"

"No-o," I said, hesitating to give away secrets, "it—it was in C-China."

"Oh, China!" he laughed, as if anything could happen in such a heathen place.

Colonel Cod-and-Beans came in then, also the Beautiful Deb. She had never once been down so early, so I knew she was "up" to something special, and sure enough a new He came to sit beside her, ushered in by the nice Harvard headwaiter. A fairly oldish He, at least he has gray hair on his temples in the romantic fashion. I thought to myself: "Now you nice young-old man, you're too good for this frivolous Deb!" And I decided to chaperone.

I'm simply deadly at it, too! Perhaps you remember on the ship coming over how I . . . however, I suppose you were fast asleep in your bunk, Peterkin, and I shouldn't resurrect the Foolish Couple. The past is past. But the Deb is terribly present. So am I!

Darling, a waitress can be a perfect nuisance.

"More bacon?" I leaned over to ask solicitously.

"No!" she glared at me out of her north eye, while the south eye continued melting at the Tall Brown He. (I am trying my best to get a better name for him, but I have no clue yet!)

Meanwhile I straightened all the knives and forks on the table, and refilled the water glasses. And she hated having me around. But I liked it! New men aren't safe with Debs, especially a Deb that can keep her left eye from knowing what her right eye does.

"Are you on for tennis with me this a.m.?" she said.

"Tennis?" he echoed, gravely buttering a muffin. "I'm afraid I have a lot of correspondence that needs quick attention."

"Oh pshaw!" she sighed, "you're never any good the first week, catching up with your past; and you're never any good the next week because you begin plunging into the future. I never knew such a dull man."

"Quite so," he agreed, and smiled.

Which made me chaperone harder than ever, realizing that tonight there will be the terrace and the moon-that-is-hired-to-shine-all-summer, so he needs what little protection I can give. She hath a cold gray eye!

Meanwhile the doctor tells me by mail that you are a brick and "doing as well as could be expected." Peterkin, I am really right beside you every minute, dear. I'm not carrying trays here, for every order gets so mixed up with thoughts of you that it's sheer luck that my Bostonians get proper nourishment.

Womanhood Christless— and Cheap

"I found that the native women everywhere in the South Sea Islands had a cruelly unhappy time. I strove to arouse them to a sense of their rights and wrongs. They become wives in exchange for pigs, shell bracelets or beads paid to their parents. Seven tiny pigs is considered good payment for a healthy young wife. If she proves unsatisfactory her husband beats her or even kills her. Very often the infuriated husband makes a meal of her dead body and nobody raises any objection."

"Strange to say, the girl is the one who makes the proposal of marriage. Usually when she is about thirteen years old the parents send her to offer herself to some man. If she is pretty and well built he generally accepts the offer. When he has got her in his power he makes her do all the hard work and treats her as a slave. Then, when she is dead or broken down, he accepts a new wife."

July 15.

Dear Sick-A-Bed Peter,

Miss Spill-the-Beans is no longer a friend of mine, all because I shoved into a shell comb that jutted out too much on the starboard side of her twist of hair. (Of course, you know which side that is, you nautical enthusiast.) And it would have fallen four fathoms deep had I not caught it on an empty dish. Nevertheless, she rebuked me in "round words," as the old English used to say. I do not know why "round": square would fit the situation better, as I felt all her points keenly. I wanted to cry, but unfortunately I gave a little chuckle. She eyed me very severely as she grabbed the comb and said it was a priceless heirloom, and started to claim that it had come over in the "Mayflower" when it dawned on her how painfully simple Priscilla had dressed, so she lopped off a century and made it date from Revolutionary ancestors. I kept saying to myself proudly: "Don't knuckle under, woman, you're the beginnings of an ancestor yourself," and wondered what I could hand down to your children.

Having harangued me to her heart's content she sailed majestically from the dining-room; then to my horror Colonel Cod-and-Beans lingered after every one else had gone, and slipped a bill into my hand as he stammered: "You stood that very well, my dear. Thank you!"

My dear!! Imagine Cods and Beans my-dearing such as me, a person from out of the kitchen. I walked on air all day, and at night the assistant-to-the-assistant-of-the-assistant-chef asked me to walk out in the forest primeval with him. It was a great honor as I plainly could see by his flourishes, but I politely said I couldn't, thank you, as this was my regular night for writing to my beau in New York.

"Oh!" says he.

"Uhhuh!" says I.

So he's the third person who knows about you now: Mabelle and Ben Bolt and this white-capped pomposity! You're all the world to me, Peterest, and I'm sending the Cod-and-Bean five dollar tip to your nurse so she can buy you all the extra little nourishing things that will make you fat and pompous yourself. Also, if you ever ache in any least little corner of your anatomy, won't you please groan over it uproariously? You hushed yourself up so many years for my sake that I never dreamed how bad things were; but now is your chance to groan it out and out and out. That's why they built the hospital walls so thick. And engaged internes and nurses and orderlies. And keep all the little labelled bottles sitting around on shelves, waiting . . . waiting to mend you up into a lovely walk-about youngster once more. So groan your groaniest! It's fashionable in hospitals, and if any one in this family is to be stylish these days it's got to be you, my dear, for I'm only a—black-robed

white-aproned tray-laden easy-forgetting waitress friend of yours!

Dear Miss Smith,
It is very kind of you to invite me to speak at the series of summer conferences you have scheduled, but at present I am engaged here at N— indefinitely. You may have heard that my young son is suffering from a severe spinal trouble, needing highly expensive treatment, and it was necessary for me to find an immediate source of revenue; a providential opening brought me here.

I need not tell you that the missionary work you name is nearest to my heart, and I am enclosing a very tiny contribution to it: an unexpected gift the other day makes this pleasure possible for me.

With cordial regard,

Very faithfully yours,

Magnhild Truex.

Winning Boy's Letter

(BY CLARENCE BAYLESS, 13; WILMINGTON, OHIO.)

Calcutta, India.

July 21, 1922.

Dear Clarence, I thought you would be interested to know why I was hungry and how the people of your church fed me.

One day I went home at mid-day from the rice field a sad down-hearted boy. Two of my boy friends who were now Christians had been telling me about the missionary and the mission school. They tried their best to have me promise I would go to the mission school. That was the reason I was so sad and down-hearted, for I had wanted to go for two years to this school and learn to love the one true God that they said would answer prayers and take care of you.

I was living in constant fear because I was afraid I would displease one of the gods and he would trouble me. The Christian people call these gods idols.

When I prayed to these gods I did not feel they really heard. I was longing, oh so much, for something real, something that I did not need always be afraid of.

My father did not believe in the Christians and would not let me go to the mission school. My father died a year ago, but as my mother was a non-Christian she would not let me go, either.

Since my father died we had very little to eat and now my mother was very sick and I was going home to a very small meal. As I entered the house I noticed some little bottles near my mother and asked her where they came from.

"My dear boy," she said, "the missionary daughter was here to see me. She heard I was ill and called to see if she could do anything for me. She asked about you and seemed to feel anxious about my condition. When she learned I had not had the doctor she said she would send him to me and this is the medicine he left."

My mother felt so much better and so thankful that she said I might go to the mission school. That afternoon as I sat in the front door the missionary's daughter came to see how my mother was feeling. As she was leaving the house she put her hand on my shoulder: "I am so glad you can go to school, and your mother wants to live a Christian life, too. I told my father about you and he said tomorrow he was going to have a feast for the hungry little boys and he wants you to come."

I could not speak I was so overjoyed. I went to the feast and the wonderful missionary told us about the great and loving Christ. I was no longer afraid of the idol gods. My soul was filled at this feast as well as my body. I want to thank all of you little boys and girls and the people of your church for saving your money and sending this missionary to us for I am hungry no more.

Yours,

Hungry-No-More.

The Young Reserves

The Winning India-Letter Contest

Dear Young Reserves,

Quite the best weeks in the year are the times when contest stories begin to pour in, and I am glad that so many of you have been turning yourselves into Hindus, or rather into Indians, for did you know that you cannot use the word Hindu in describing an Indian Christian? It would be like saying a Baptist Presbyterian! A Hindu is only a Hindu when he believes in Hinduism, and your splendid letters each and all showed that your correspondents had become Christians. These letters were very good, and I wish it were possible to give all of them. I was especially interested in the fact that four of those who entered the contest live in Nebraska, and three of the four live in Genoa, Neb.! I have painted a little picture about you in my mind's eye! I think you are probably members of the same Sunday-school class, and you talked it all over and decided to work on your letters and see what would come of it! Nina Anderson's prize from India is what comes of it! But great credit is also due to Hazel Young and Hertha Pope, also of Genoa, Neb., and to Dorothy Pearson of St. Edwards, Neb. Another good letter came from Dorothy Bayless of Wilmington, Ohio; probably it is her brother Clarence who wins the boy's prize. When our next contest comes, won't you all try again? It would be such fun to have prizes for everybody.

Winning Girl's Letter

By NINA ANDERSON, 12; GENOA, NEBRASKA.)

Vellore, India,

April 26, 1922.

Salaam, Oh Nina Anderson,
Thou hast been such a help to us even if we are far away from thee that I like thee for it and want to tell thee how it came about even if it is a long story, for we were hungry and you sent the dear Dr. Missionary to us and brought joy to us so I am thy devoted little slave Manorama (Heart's Joy) and beg thee to accept my love.

Thou wilt be wondering about me so I will tell thee. As thou wilt see from my letter I live in Vellore where we can but feel glad that your churches have built such a lovely missionary hospital and so many of us have learned about Jesus and are helping to keep this beautiful white building in which are many big whiteness on which the good Dr. Missionary put sick one until they well.

My family was a big one, many boys and girls—my parents were glad of boys my brothers but not so of my sisters for no one in India is glad where a girl is born. You must remember, mem sahib Nina Anderson, we were poor, not much money or much to eat when times were good even. Our house was only a mud hut, bad smell, no bed, no chair. We all slept in same room on floor in corners. It was so filthy and our food so poor that when a famine sickness was in our city my mother became sick and was sick with much sickness, mem sahib, for you must know that a woman in India cannot be seen by our own native doctors only through a hole in a curtain. The people all came out of mud huts and beat on drums to keep her awake and to drive away the spirits which our people think cause the sickness. Your Dr. Missionary came jolting down the street in her jolly cart and heard the noise and came into our house and how glad we were, it made us tremble with admiration for her when she came every day to take care of us here. She gave her nice clean bath, and medicine also my brothers and sisters, and cleaned our mud hut so we all got well. Then when we were able these missionaries invited us to the hospital and gave us such joyous eats, and again and again we went there and the kind nurses taught thy unfortunate Heart's Joy how to also care for a house and to cook food to take care of sickness. They tell us we must be clean always.

I have much joy to tell thee I have heard about Jesus and how he cares for us and now I am going to school here and the dear Dr. ladies say that when I am through here I may go to your own America and go to your own college so I may learn to be a good Dr. Missionary for I want to tell you I am all longing to be a help to my own people as your dear Missionary Ladies were to me and also to others for you must know that they gave food to others in our city and are always

BETTER GIVING

Acts 20:31-35. (Emphasize Tithing).
(CONSECRATION MEETING).

Special Note

The address of Miss Jessie L. Burrall on "The Dynamic of Stewardship" was delivered before the Thirty-first Anniversary Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, St. Paul, June 28-July 2, 1922.

October has been designated by The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention for stewardship activities. Miss Burrall's address as given below is presented as part of the advanced preparation for a great educational advance along tithing and stewardship lines.

THE DYNAMIC OF STEWARDSHIP By JESSIE L. BURRALL

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

"The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. Moreover, by them is thy servant warned and in keeping of them there is great reward."

We are the children of our heavenly Father. Just as kiddies here on earth are happiest when helping mother bake cookies and sweep and dust and sew, or helping father plant the garden, water the lawn or drive the car; so we as children of God are happiest when helping him at his great task of world evangelization. We will never begin to understand the law of stewardship, so beautifully explained and illustrated by Jesus, until we realize deep down in our minds, hearts and souls that the law of the Lord is perfect.

Joy, peace, happiness cannot flow into the human heart until love, helpfulness and service flow out.

This jazz wave that distresses thinking folks so seriously is merely the "outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual unrest." Jazz is only the noise of the flood of youth-power going recklessly to waste, sweeping the country with devastating force. Our girls and boys rush from one excitement to another to quiet an inward spiritual homesickness that only a vital touch with the spiritual side of life, with God in fact, can quiet.

Our Task

The great task of B. Y. P. U. in all America is to spread the news of the delight to be found in true Christian living.

We look on the law of the Lord as something to be dreaded—to be avoided as far as possible; to live up to only enough to get into the kingdom of heaven while our hearts sigh for green pastures outside the fence of God's law.

Our Supply

Let us think straight on this. Who supplies us with the earth and the fullness thereof? God.

"Exceedingly, abundantly, more than we can ask or think."

He floods us with material blessing.

The materials for food, shelter, transportation are all about us, enough and more than enough to make rich every human being. But—and this is a glorious and mighty but, he leaves the distribution of these blessings to us. We are to be the Ladies and Sirs Bountiful. We are the princes and princesses who are to pass out fresh from the hand of God himself these material blessings to the uttermost parts of the earth. To say that we Christians have so far not been a conspicuous success at this distribution is putting it mildly. Wherein have we failed?

Our Failure

We have failed to comprehend the principles of stewardship, as taught by Jesus. We haven't entered ourselves into the abundant life so freely offered by him.

Our Poverty

Frankly, we all feel poor now. When I was a child I knew I was poor. How did I know it? In a dozen ways. Our carriage did not have rubber tires and Deacon Smith's carriage did. Our two horses trotted or walked or galloped. Deacon Smith owned a smart span of pacers. We had only a few good books in our bookcases. Deacon Smith had a whole library. Our silverware was mostly plated. Deacon Smith's was mostly solid silver. I knew Deacon Smith was rich.

But one night in prayer meeting Deacon Smith arose and testified thanking the Lord that he was poor, that he had always been poor and never would be rich. My ten-year-old eyes stuck out of my head! Deacon Smith poor! When, driving home under the stars, I ventured to ask my father about it, he flicked the old horse carelessly with the whip and said, "Don't worry, daughter, Deacon Smith doesn't mean a word he says in prayer meeting."

It was later that I learned that Deacon Smith did mean it: that he, too, felt poor. He compared his pacers with Trustee Jones' Dodge; and Trustee Jones was comparing his Dodge with Banker Brown's Cadillac and so it went. Though now I constantly meet the owners of fine homes, Pierce Arrows and country estates, I have yet to find one that really feels rich.

Our Riches

Yet I feel rich—the lying mantle of a feeling of poverty no longer cramps my soul. I am rich. In the words of the old song that we may smile at as ancient, yet in words infinitely true:

*I'm the child of a King,
The child of a King,
With Jesus my Saviour,
I'm the child of a King."*

And what does a true child of a King do? He distributes abundant life and wealth joyously. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "Give and it shall be given unto you, pressed down, running over," is the promise.

A little Armenian girl, new to this country, sadly watched me give a left-over slice of bacon and a spoonful of gravy to a cat. Soon tears splashed—she said, quietly, "My mother is asleep now, it is very early morning in my country. Soon she will wake up to work." And not by any chance would that mother secure a piece of meat the size of what we ordinarily feed the cats and dogs or throw out with the garbage. Always in winter in Armenia the need is so great that women and men break the thick ice on streams, wading in to get the lily and weed roots at the bottom for food for their starving children. To over half the world today, meat is a luxury and a rarity: and bitter cold, torrid heat, hunger, thirst and disease make life a weary round. Yet we have the consummate nerve to feel poor, to excuse ourselves from the law of the tithe, saying "we can't afford it."

Our Responsibility

We can't afford not to do it. We can't afford not to act like our heavenly Father and thus learn to be his happy children.

"Freely ye have received, freely give."

In Washington, D. C., there is a Sunday-school class with an attendance of 400 girls every Sunday. They are business girls with only moderate salaries. The average probably is only $100 per month, yet through that class treasury flows this year alone about $14,000! Take those figures in! They are no mistake. These girls do not have a big rejoicing over paying a missionary's salary for a day or a week or a month: as an ordinary incident of class activities they pay the entire salary of a missionary to the Italians in Philadelphia. They give over $1,000 to the missionary activities of the church. Most of this goes through the church into the $175,000,000 campaign of Baptists for world-wide service.

They raised in ten minutes $4,200 for the church building fund. In addition they give liberally to their own churches. How do they do it? Two hundred and more of them are tithers and they pour that money into world-wide blessing. Two hundred tithers on $100 per month salary means $2,000 a month or $24,000 a year for Christ! Forward with Christ in giving! Let's stop this two for a cent and quarter method of doling out dutifully as little as we can.

A tither in Washington quoted:
"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse and prove me now" saith the Lord of Hosts; "If I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out such a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." She added: "I wonder at the patience of the Lord. You pray for a blessing when you have never tried his law. I wonder he doesn't send an angel down to tap you on the shoulder and ask: 'Well, what do you expect for twenty-five cents?'"

We must think in terms of stewardship as Christ taught it. We must go forward with him in a world program. How did Christ increase the five loaves and two small fishes? He blessed them and broke them. Oh, for the day when we his professed followers will take what we have—rejoice in it—and bless and break it.

Here's your pay envelope. It contains $25 per week. Do you figure how much you can pay here, how much there, who can wait, and how far you can stretch it? Or do you follow your Saviour's command, bringing the first fruits to him?

Do you bless it? Do you think of its magic power—$25 is the sign of the abundance of God. It can mean anything you wish it to mean. Do you consider its infinite possibilities of joy or misery, not to you alone but to countless thousands through whose hands it will pass not only this year, but, in sober truth, in years and years, even hundreds, yes thousands of years to come? It is the sign of God's great abundance since the dawn of creation, extending to the uttermost space of earth and time. Do you bless it thoughtfully, yet with deep joy?

Then do you break it? Jesus broke the loaves and passed them out. Do you gladly take the first two dollars and fifty cents for his work? Oh, I know the law of the tithe has been argued about, but are you going to let Jacob and Moses who had only a forward look and a faith in Christ, are you going to let them give more than you who have the gospel of the living Christ in your heart? Are you going to quibble over whether the so-called rich should give a larger per cent or are you going joyously to live up to and exceed the wonder prophets and leaders of the Old Testament?

Yes! You will set aside the first tenth for Christ. Then you will break the rest for your family, for others and yourself seems just to all—after the tithe will come free will offerings and gifts. Then you can never feel poor. And as your money flows into your church and into the great world program of your church, you will feel the currents of joy and brotherhood flowing back to you.

In far away India there is a boy; he has travelled alone six days through the jungle because he has heard of the mission school. His life without the school is wful beyond the power of our safe sheltered imagination to picture. Foot-sore and weary he comes to the building; a hundred have been turned away but today, he extra money you gave last year with that of many others has reached the school. There is food and a bed for one more. He enters. From his heart goes up a wonderful prayer to the God he is just beginning to know. He praises God daily and asks for an especial blessing on the life of the wonderful benefactor in far-away America who made abundant life possible for him. And a wave from the great surge of grateful hearts in India, China, Africa, and the Isles of the Sea, comes more swiftly and more surely than by radio, beating back into your life and heart. Do you live in those waves or are you a doubter? A quibbler? Do you argue learnedly the pros and cons of stewardship? Do you hide behind flimsy excuses that loom large as logical reasons to you and are really black clouds shutting off from you the light and life which is in Christ?

Or, have you stepped joyously into this great program to win the world for Christ? Do you bless and break? Is your money marching shoulder to shoulder with that of thousands of others to win the world for Christ?

The dynamic of stewardship is the fountain of living water given by Christ, springing up in us to health, wealth and happiness. Have you choked it at its source in your own heart or do you let it out through your voice speaking for him, through your smile cheering for him, through your pocket-book giving for him, through your heart loving with him? Are you a tither?

A happy tither?
Do you turn one-tenth back unto the Lord?
Well, you should be one,
Your duty's not done
Until you share your income with him:
For blessings without number he will shower on you,
Pressed down, running over, is his promise true.
Are you a tither? A happy tither?
Come, be a tither, too.

Religious Education

A New Thing Under the Sun

By E. WISLE.

NORTH DAKOTA is making a name for itself by trying experiments of various kinds. Not all of them are as successful as the one which we wish to report here. We feel that our experience will prove beneficial to other states which may have the same or similar problems to contend with which we must battle. Summer training institutes are as essential for the smaller and less developed state, as they are for the older and more highly privileged. The question is, how to hold such an institute successfully and profitably when the folks are few and the resources limited. It is in such times that inventiveness is exceedingly valuable.

A little over a year ago the state director of religious education suggested to the Presbyterian director, that it might be feasible to hold a cooperative summer institute. The Presbyterians have a college in the state and had been attempting to hold young people's training conferences for several years with but little success. The suggestion was considered seriously by both them and us. It was decided that it would be good to make the experiment. The representatives met at Fargo and prepared a plan of action which was submitted to and approved by our national director, Rev. T. B. Frizelle, after several changes had been suggested.

About 150 delegates and visitors met at Jamestown College to receive the instruction offered and to enjoy the fellowship of these days. The Baptists numbered approximately fifty. The national representatives on the faculty were Dr. W. H. Main, Rev. T. B. Frizelle, Rev. J. F. Ingram and Miss Naomi Fletcher. The local faculty members were Rev. F. E. Stockton, Rev. J. G. York and Rev. E. Wisle. There was the utmost freedom in the fellowship between the young people and faculty members of both camps. Any one not acquainted with the fact that this was an interdenominational assembly would not have guessed it from the attitude of those assembled toward one another. And but for an occasional mention of denominational names, even those who came with that knowledge would not have been aware of any difference. Both the faculty members and delegates expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with the arrangement and its results. The proof of this was evidenced by the action taken by representatives of both denominations looking toward a repetition of this cooperative effort next year.

All of the classes, except one, were open to young people of both communions. This exception was made in order that denominational problems might be discussed and the respective denominational programs presented. In the other classes it would have been impossible to have learned from the instruction given whether the instructor was Presbyterian or Baptist.

Another matter that should be mentioned is the entertainment at the college. Our own young people were admitted on the same terms as were the Presbyterian delegates. At the tables they would intermingle in a happy manner. In several instances young people of both denominations occupied the same rooms. There was no preference given the one, nor discrimination made against the other. We were all on a level. Our deepest gratitude is due our Presbyterian friends for their exceeding gracious treatment of us.

The purpose of this report is to show those from "Missouri" that it can be done. This will be the plan which some will be obliged to adopt, if they would begin or continue this necessary feature of our educational work. Rev. J. G. York, Grand Forks, N. D., will be glad to furnish any further information about details.

Children's Work

The children's work department of the American Baptist Publication Society is building through states and associations an organization which will carry the ideals and methods of Christian Education to the workers with children in every Baptist school however remote. Goals of organizations are set in each state and awards given yearly at the Northern Baptist Convention.

New York State won in 1921, but at Indianapolis Iowa bore away the "organization honors" under the leadership of Miss Hazel Boyd, director of children's work.

School of Religious Education

Dean Henry B. Robins has the schedule and faculty for the Rochester, N. Y. School of Religious Education practically arranged for. Ten credit courses will be offered. Besides this, the special training classes of the Protestant Episcopal Church will meet at the Y. W. C. A. the same evenings under their own special teachers, in order to take advantage of the extra-hour of the credit courses in the regular curriculum. Plans are under way for securing a greatly enlarged attendance this year. The first term opens Sept. 26 and closes Dec. 12. The second term opens Jan. 9 and closes March 27. The school is accredited by the international council of religious education, which issues all diplomas. Three years' study, twenty-four sessions of two periods each, per year.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 3

NEHEMIAH REBUILDS THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM

Lesson: Nehemiah 3:1 to 7:4. Golden Text: Nehemiah 4:20.

Setting

After studying the situation for several days, quietly and effectively Nehemiah went about putting into operation his plans for the rebuilding of the walls. Around the wall wherever it was broken down he distributed forty or more workers from Jerusalem and nearby cities. The Arabians, the Ammonites, Ashdodites, Samaritans, Edomites and Philistines, who inhabited the territory surrounding Jerusalem, were hostile to the rebuilding of the wall and did all in their power to stop it.

Lesson

Chapter 3—is given over in details of the work on the gates and the wall. "Even that which they build if a fox go up he shall break down their stone wall—" thus was the great task which Nehemiah had set the people to do ridiculed by the enemies who looked on. But Nehemiah believed in the work he had undertaken and ridicule could not deter him from its completion. It was more than a wall he was rebuilding—he was raising up a discouraged people and giving them a new outlook on life. The Arabians, the Ammonites and the Ashdodites conspired to go together to the workers on the wall and confuse and discourage them. But Nehemiah, who worked as hard as he prayed, posted sentinels "day and night," and also prayed, so that the desired confusion was not wrought. But some of this talk of the vainness and difficulty of trying to rebuild the wall was bound to creep into the ranks of workers when Jerusalem was so surrounded by enemies to the task. Also the first spurt of zeal having died down, the task of building in the midst of "much rubbish" and with the "strength of the bearers of burdens decayed" lost its glamour and there was weakening on the part of the laborers. Further precautions were taken against the enemy, every man was armed, Nehemiah and the men closest to him took no time for regular sleep—"None of us put off our clothes." "So the wall was finished in the twenty-fifth day of the month of Elul, in fifty and two days."

Leading Thoughts

1. When all "the people have a mind to work" the accomplishment of a big task becomes a simple matter. 2. "Pray and work" is a powerful slogan. 3. A big purpose cannot be touched by ridicule.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFESSION

Most students of Baptist history are aware that the statement that "the New Hampshire Confession" is the standard Baptist symbol, is much more frequently made by writers of other denominations than by Baptists themselves.

A straw that shows the direction of the wind in earlier days is a book notice of Dr. Hiscox's "The Baptist Directory," published in The Christian Review for April, 1859, page 316. At this time the late Dr. E. G. Robinson, who was then a professor in the Rochester Theological Seminary, and subsequently president of that seminary and afterward president of Brown University, was editor-in-chief of The Christian Review. Dr. Hiscox had published the New Hampshire Confession in "The Directory" as "containing the doctrines of our Baptist churches."

The notice of "The Directory" in The Christian Review has the ear-marks of having been written by Dr. Robinson himself. It says: "There are a great many ministers and churches throughout the country to whom these doctrines are by no means satisfactory. We have been unwilling that authors should refer to that confession as our symbol, and regret that a book by a Baptist, destined to so wide a circulation as this, should extend the impression that it contains the Baptist faith."

In the same volume of The Christian Review there is a leading article entitled, "Doctrine and Life" which puts the case for a rigidly defined creed more completely than I have seen it stated in any "fundamentalist" book or article. Indeed, it might well be republished in the interest of that propaganda. The author of this article says in a footnote: "There is a collection of articles commonly known as 'The New Hampshire Confession,' and frequently referred to by that denomination as 'The Baptist symbol.' This is an entire mistake. It is repudiated by a great many ministers and churches, even in the limited portion of our country where alone it has been adopted. It is a discredit to us; it is like the creed of Mr. Facing-both-ways. It is a Calvinistic formula, with an Arminian undertone of interpretation. The voice is Jacob's voice but the hands are the hands of Esau." Page 183.

At a time when the New Hampshire Confession is extolled as a satisfactory creed for modern Baptists we need a more careful study of its genesis, and of its bearing upon the currents of religious thought that prevailed when it was written. Especially we should consider its relation to the Free Baptists, for the New Hampshire Confession was much of the nature of a campaign document against them. What is the ethics of enacting such a document as the standard Baptist Confession now that the Free Baptists have united with the Regulars and ceased to exist as a denomination?

It is greatly to be hoped that the new interest in "The New Hampshire Confession," ninety years after it was framed to meet a special emergency, may lead to a new interest in Baptist history.

IT IS THE VOICE OF GOD

How often the human method prevails of taking one of our pet theories and baptizing it as the will of God. Such a practice satisfies the devotees and gives the weight of authority to doubters. Besides unflinching dogmatism is always impressive. To say, "It is written," or "Thus sayeth the Lord," always proves effective with many minds even though a John Alexander Dowie makes the declaration.

Baptists of the North have undertaken and carried along for a good distance a great program for the kingdom of God. They call it The New World Movement. For the writer various other names would have been satisfactory. For the great majority of our people who have ever had any world view or missionary enthusiasm this is the call of God.

But this great majority of enterprising missionary group of Baptists might be mistaken but for a fact or two. Jesus gave us the best possible test in the first and second commandments. The first is an unqualified love for God, while the second is an unqualified love for our fellows. When the finest young men and women from our homes and colleges come forth by the hundreds in response to this great motive and stand ready to be sent to obscure foreign lands or to the filthy and dark tenement sections of our great cities with no thought of reward except to do the will of God, that is God's voice.

When dedication of life seems almost to outrun the dedication of things, God must have said something. We can rest assured he will not trick the finest, best trained Christian young people of our churches. No intellectual argument ever compares with the personal argument. God has always achieved his purposes through the best people of every generation. Never was he more at work than through the fine young people of our day. It is the voice of God. CLARENCE W. KEMPER.

A TRAVELING TITHER

It takes all kinds of people to make a world, we have been told, and I am beginning to believe it. I have been asked for money many, many times, and whenever I come through the door into my study and find a man of a certain type sitting there to welcome me I have come to the place where I have the right to suppose that he is there for money.

I opened my door last week to find a working man, short, thick, heavy-set, with curly hair and a happy countenance, waiting for me. He claimed the name of Jones and professed to come from Missouri. "I am one of these traveling tithers," he said, "and I have come to leave some of the Lord's money." He showed me many receipts for money which he had paid to various churches as he came across the continent. He evidently goes into the logging camps, working for a time and accumulating a little and then pays a tithe to the nearest Baptist church. The latest receipts he exhibited were from Dillon, Montana, and Missoula, Montana. He pulled out a wallet and said "This time it's about eight dollars. Tell your secretary to give me a receipt for it."

I said "Come to church tomorrow." But he said "I'm afraid not. You people in your fine clothes here in this big city church don't want to see me in my clothes. At any rate I won't promise, I might oversleep."

My secretary wrote him a receipt and as he went out of the door he was whistling. My faith in human nature has been wonderfully renewed. I am willing to meet 100 beggars if I may have one such man as this in the line. All day long I kept repeating to myself "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Seattle, Wash. TAKE THE MINES AND RAILROADS

A Preamble and Resolution

In view of the facts that a struggle now in progress and frequently recurring between private groups of owners and workers for the control of the organized industries of coal mining and transportation prevents the regular and efficient operation of these industries, is inimical to the public welfare, produces disorder and violence, menaces government, occasions frequent loss of life, exposes the liberties of the people to the imposition or threat of martial law and inflicts privation and suffering upon the people generally; that Christianity is concerned for the public welfare as well as for personal piety, for good government as well as for good private behavior, and for right measures as well as for right motives; that from high quarters and with increasing urgency an appeal is sent forth to the churches, requesting them to use their influence to promote a just, peaceful and permanent settlement of industrial strife, and particularly in these two industries; that the government, as the organ of the whole community, for preserving peace, estab-

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Boston in August

In August the "Hub" is a little different from other months, or finds its difference exaggerated. By some tourists it is observed as a sort of antique. By others studied as a civic model having a modern development consistent with its history. The first class goes scurrying about with the swiftness of the world-famous American "sight-seer" known so well in all the cities of Europe. The second type goes slower that he may drink deeper. He knows what is in the cup, and how deep it is.

One of the humors of August is to watch the "hurried" tourists speeding about in the "sight-seeing autos," gobbling up the "points of interest" and their history, as they are shouted through a megaphone by the conductor. Sometimes he has the journalistic habit, and clothes his facts in fiction or in semi-romance. The writer saw one of them who had halted his load in front of Tremont Temple. With terse and graphic phrases he reeled off the Temple tale of origin, illustrious preachers, large congregations—"But," he added at the end, "through the week it is a high-class moving picture theater!"

A Noted Boston Corner

The sudden transformation of the corner of Beacon and Somerset streets from an old closed-up city mansion to a big hole in the ground, is attracting the attention of the passing crowd. They have torn down the solid old residence of Paran Stevens, and the adjoining one of C. F. Hovey, one of the best of our former merchant princes; and which later were the home of the City Club, that great social and civic organization. Both houses were centers of social welcome for most illustrious visitors and of high society. Now the great derricks are scooping and hoisting up the sand and broken foundation walls. Fundamentally, Beacon Hill is a sand hill, that is, down to the clay base of it.

As the work of destruction proceeds, we get a good view of the south wall of the old First Baptist Meeting-house on Somerset Street, where Rollin H. Neale was forty years a king. You can see the church windows. Upon the removal of the church to the Back Bay, Boston University took the property, built on a new front, named the building Sleeper Hall after its most generous donor, and used it for its classes until rapid growth forced the institution into larger quarters on the Back Bay. Now what was Sleeper Hall is the Boston home of the Elks. The City Club has occupied its impressive new building one block away on Somerset Street since 1905.

An Object Lesson

The wide open corner is now affording us all instruction in modern scientific construction. The energy and precision of it, and the quickness and skill of machinery and men, fascinate the passersby, and hold them perhaps all too long. Many now gazing into the gaping hole will soon look upon a sky-scraper of steel and stone standing there with "Offices to let." So passes some of the glory of Old Beacon Hill!

The Snare of Haste

Surely vacation ought to slow us down, and not speed us up. Sometimes when we get quantity we fail even of that. It is when we make our diversion a study, and find that it slackens our pace, gives us leisurely eyes, absorbing souls, and so impresses us with quality, that we have quantity as well.

Why should a sight-seer be blind to the sights? Making haste often degenerates into "making time." The writer came upon two fine Irish youths who were "doing" New Hampshire on their "bikes." They were right in the mountain country that, in summer time, more than doubles the population of the state. "Which route did you take through the mountains?" they were asked. "Well," they answered, "we took the straightest road—what mountains do you mean?" When they were told that they were eating their dinner in the heart of the wonderful "Crawford Notch," their reply was, "What's that?"

This is not a mood of which youth has a monopoly. The writer saw an elderly minister who in his galloping sight-seeing, stopped before Saint Gaudens' wonderful "Shaw Memorial" which stands in front of the State House, just long enough to exclaim to his companion—"Curious, isn't it!" O give it time—let the pathos of a downtrodden race, and the tragedy of a young patriot, fill your soul, as it did the soul of Saint Gaudens during the fifteen years when he was dreaming and achieving it!

Freak and Phenomenon

It is a singular thing—that in so serious a business as preaching the gospel, we take so many risks in the attractions that we welcome. The latest one "to make the judicious grieve" is a fourteen-year old girl evangelist! Think of it—fourteen years old, and with all the action and antics of Billy Sunday, we are told! And all the free and confident dogmatism about momentous things!

Could you imagine a judge on the bench fourteen years old; or a lawyer at that age pleading an important case; or a child doctor handling a physical crisis; or even a girl dentist wrestling with a rebellious tooth? What is wrong about our whole conception of sin, salvation, righteousness, and judgment, that makes us capable of hospitality to such crude sensationalism, and of such wrong to a girl, who as a woman, will judge us for our folly more than for her own?

An Associational Adventure

By J. F. ELWELL

The Los Angeles Baptist Association is one of the largest in the United States, with a membership of sixty-three churches, four of which have over 1,000 members each, and one 3,000.

The association is launching this year an experiment in program-making. At the annual meeting one year ago it was agreed that the old-fashioned platform convention for the association was of no practical value. We have one convention yearly, the state meeting, and it was the almost unanimous opinion that the association should partake more of the nature of a school of methods, or a place where we could have real instruction along with some inspiration. It was therefore voted to turn the annual meeting into a joint association-assembly plan.

The meeting is to be held at First Church, Long Beach, Aug. 21-26. Sessions will be held every morning and on Monday and Friday afternoons, also every evening. The provision of entertainment for delegates has been dispensed with. Southern California Baptists will be invited to spend their vacation at Long Beach and attend the assembly.

There will be two study periods every morning, with several classes each period. A general assembly for a Bible lecture follows at 11:15. The lecturers for this hour for the six days are Dr. James A. Francis, of Los Angeles, and Dr. Wm. H. Geistweit, of St. Louis. Dr. Francis will give expositions of Ephesians and Dr. Geistweit's topic is "Journeys in John."

The evening sessions provide popular programs, with addresses and music and pageantry. At a business session on Friday afternoon a roll call of the churches will take the place of the reading of church letters, each church responding through one of its delegates.

The program for the week includes some of the ablest Sunday-school and church leaders in our denomination, and it is expected that multitudes of California Baptists will again go on pilgrimage to Long Beach for their summer holiday and for spiritual renewal.

Russian Baptists in North Dakota

By RICHARD J. INKE
General Missionary to the Russians

About 10,000 of the 800,000 Russians of America are living in the State of North Dakota. It was my privilege to visit the Russian Baptists in North Dakota, representing the American Baptist Home Mission Society, to be present at their annual conference and to work among them for three weeks.

The farther the heavy Northern Pacific train carried me through the beautiful state of Minnesota, the more the country became like Argentine, S. A., and I began to feel like home. Finally we reached the city of Max, N. D. This is one of the most typical prairie cities in the whole state, and is the headquarters of the Russian Baptists. Here the annual Russian Conference was held, June 23-26. With a profound interest all Russian believers, friends and visitors had been looking forward to this great gathering. Twenty-four delegates from the six Russian churches came to represent the 219 Russian Baptists of this state. A great host of Baptists and their friends crowded the convention tent every time. There were over 1,200 people present on Sunday at each of the three services, and one hundred vehicles were lined up around the tent. Some of the guests of honor were the following: Rev. F. E. Stockton, general superintendent of the state missions; Dr. F. Lynch, missionary from Africa; Rev. E. Wiese, director of religious education of North Dakota; Rev. D. E. Beasley, state missionary among the Negroes, and three Russian missionaries—Rev. B. Bookin, Rev. J. Shokotko and Rev. J. Johnson. The predominant note of the whole convention was strictly devotional. Sermons were preached in three different languages to the seven different nationalities that were present, and the spirit of prayer characterized the program from beginning to end. The Russian choir sang well, and the brass band rendered excellent service. Only one day was given to business. Nineteen baptisms were reported. Rev. Nestor A. Nezdoly, the Russian state missionary and also the president of the conference, was reappointed for both positions for the coming year. This man of God has very little training of any kind but the experience of twenty-five long years, in Russia, Canada and now in the United States, has made him an earnest preacher of the gospel and a sturdy leader of his people. One must understand the Russian language in order to appreciate the deeply spiritual and powerful representation of the truth by these simple men of God.

On the whole I found the Russian work much better organized and cared for by the state mission than I expected. Brother Stockton, the general superintendent, has found out that genuine Christian love is the only means by which the foreigner can be captivated, and he applies it without reserve.

In spite of these difficulties the Lord has crowned the heroic efforts of the missionary and of his faithful helpers with great blessings. Since the conference at Max fourteen candidates have been received by the churches for baptism, and many others are expected to come in the near future. May this revival fire go on till hundreds of Russian friends in North Dakota are won for Christ.

The Russian Baptists of North Dakota are fairly well Americanized as to the language. They understand "American," as they prefer to call it here, better than our Russian friends in the East. I was greatly surprised to learn that almost three-fourths of the conference visitors understood preaching in English.

The Russian brethren here are also loyal Baptists. Generally they do not make much difference between Baptists and the Disciples of Christ, and when they use the term Baptist they usually add to it, "evangelical Christian." At this conference, however, the Russian pastors themselves undertook to inform their people about the Baptist denomination, explaining all about what they are and what they do.

There are some real difficulties in the work among the Russians. The spirit of dissension has greatly handicapped the progress of evangelization thus far. Then there is a great lack of workers, and especially of trained workers. There is but one missionary for six churches, that means that no new preaching stations can be opened, and that the work already established cannot be cared for adequately.

And what shall we say about the material condition of the Russian brethren. Due to the failure of crops for several years almost all of them are in debt. For this year, however, the outlook is brighter.

Laymen's Activities in Northern California

Some one described the relation of men to kingdom activities in the following lines: "In the world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, a man's religious effort is represented by his wife." This sentiment is rapidly becoming obsolete in this convention field, as the laymen are being mobilized around the "standard" covering the various church and denominational objectives and, through conferences and suggested reading courses, are being prepared for an intelligent and aggressive campaign during the coming year. During the last few months the work has been supervised by a consecrated layman, Mr. J. E. Neighbor. His experience in denominational affairs together with his sympathy with local church problems make him a helpful friend of the men in our churches. The field has been distracted according to geographical convenience and regional advisors appointed through whom arrangements can be made for local conferences and an indirect contact maintained with the local church.

A comprehensive standard of church objectives has been approved by the state convention and various associational gatherings and is suggested as a guide for the men in the churches.

To supplement the standard and assist the laymen in a study of its various parts, the following list of books has been selected: "Present Day Evangelism" by Chapman; "Building a Congregation" by Skeath; "Training World Christians" by Loveland; "Modern Money Methods in the Church" by Agar; "Manual of Church Methods" by Agar; "New Program of Religious Education" by Betts; "Handbook for Workers with Young People" by Thompson; "Help Those Women" by Agar, and "The Efficient Layman" by Cope.

This is not a new wheel in the denominational machinery but the lubricating can for machinery already in existence. It is an effort to increase the effectiveness of agencies already existing. A facetious salesman had the following printed on his business card: "Success comes in cans, failure comes in can't's! let us sell you a few cans."

That covers the idea of the laymen's movement. They want to sell the church a "few cans." It is hoped to accomplish this through the following regional advisors: W. Meisenheimer, of Hanford; R. L. Jolley, Fowler; L. B. Hickey, Turlock;

W. E. Spoon, Pacific Grove; Frank Isenberger, San Jose; L. Hillis, Sebastopol; L. I. Sweitzer, Vallejo; Guy W. Martin, Sacramento; and M. C. Steele of Chico.

All regional advisors as well as local leaders have been appointed in consultation with the pastors. These appointments only hold until such time as elections may be held and the offices filled by the choice and action of the various groups of laymen.

On Tour with a New Missionary

Sometimes an exceedingly vivid glimpse is received through young eyes of the daily experiences of missionary life. Miss Geneva Brunner is a young missionary of the South Pacific district on her first term in India. She is associated with Miss Margarita Moran of the New York district in the Bible Training School for Women, located in Vellore. In one of her letters home she writes as follows:

The last of November came the language examination. Each took the written examination in his or her station, but a week later all had to go to Guntur for the oral examination. This made it possible to meet new missionaries from all boards working in the Telugu country, and gave a social aspect to something that would otherwise have been rather disagreeable. The examinations were unusually hard, but I am glad to say that I passed. On the way home as I was changing trains about midnight, I was sitting all alone in the ladies' waiting room when a little Brahmin widow walked in. I knew she was a widow from her coarse pink sari with which she tried to cover her poor shaven head. Thinking this was a good chance to practice the Telugu I had been using at the examination I began the usual questions about family, etc. To be friendly I offered her a custard apple, putting it on the seat, for I knew she would not take it from my hand. To my surprise she took it and thanked me with a smile. Then I asked her if she had ever heard of Christ. "Yes, I have heard but I do not know well. My village is very small and no one comes to tell us," she said. So I told her as best I could in her own language the story of Jesus and his life on earth. I wanted to give her the written word also, as she said she could read, but all I had with me was a copy of the Gospel by Luke which I had studied for our examination and which was worn and marked. I took it out of my bag, explained why it was soiled and gave it to her. This time she took it from my hand (a most unusual thing for a Brahmin), assuring me she would read it and then she said with a winning smile, "This has been a very good day for me because I have met you." Just then the train came but I still pray for her and the seed sown in her heart.

In January I went out on tour with Miss Moran, the Bible women, and Bible students. Because of the coolness of the weather then, we take that month as an opportunity to give the students of the Bible school their practical training in "touring evangelism." Besides our big tent which was very comfortable, being especially made for a tropical climate, there were three tents for the Bible women and students, and a servants' tent—in all making quite a camp. We camped in two centers, pitching our tents in shady groves which seem to be placed here and there especially for our purpose, and from these centers tried to reach all the villages within a radius of ten miles.

This is one of the best ways of evangelizing the people for not only can we reach distant villages in this way, but the people's curiosity often leads them to walk miles just to see us and our camp. Every morning after prayers the students were divided into groups. Then each group, going with us or a Bible woman as chaperon, would go to the different villages to hold meetings. Those who went to the far villages took their food and stayed all day, but those who did not go so far, returned at noon and were ready to go to another place in the afternoon. Thus some one group was always out either morning, afternoon or evening. I was much pleased with the spirit of our students. Besides the motor car the only vehicle we had was our tonga and ponies, so the majority had to walk, but no matter if the village was six or more miles away, no matter if the road led through mud and water, no matter if the sun was scorching they never complained. After a night's rest they were eager and ready to go out again with the Gospel message. We usually went out twice a day, using the motor car when possible to reach the farthest places, but often the villages were quite inaccessible for any vehicle and we had to walk through the rice fields, be carried over canals, or wade through mud or sand. Yet we felt we must not turn back for we could not leave that district until each village in that vicinity had heard the gospel. It seemed always that whenever we went the farthest or had the most difficulty in reaching the place, God had especially prepared the hearts of the people for the message.

One morning in one of the inaccessible villages the people said they had never heard of Christ before. As our two students spoke they listened thoughtfully to the message, and afterwards several bought Gospels. One old man who was almost blind said to me, "I have no money and I can't read, but I want you to read me something out of God's Book. I want my ears to hear it." Of course we read a portion to him, taught him to say the name of Christ and told him how to pray in his name. What a privilege it is to teach these old grandfathers about the Saviour!

Another morning we started early in the tonga for a far village. The road led straight through the jungle and was so bad the ponies could hardly pull us. Two hours, three hours we rode without a sign of life appearing except the birds and animals. When we thought we must surely be lost, about noon we at last saw the village in the distance, but the road did not lead into it! Leaving the tonga there we walked along the narrow mud ledges between the rice fields until we came to a black, slimy pool. We could not walk around it because of the under brush, and there was no other way to enter that town, so I pulled off my shoes and stockings and waded in! The people crowded around to watch and some said, "They must love us very much to go through so many troubles to come here." The noon sun was scorching but we found good shade and began our meeting with nearly the entire village squatting around us. The head of the police and the chief of the town listened especially well and asked intelligent questions. Suddenly the police chief startled us by saying, "If I become a Christian my people will not give me a wife. Will you furnish a Christian wife for me?" It seemed ludicrous to us but it was a very serious matter to him. That is a problem looming before many a Hindu young man in India. We told him he must "seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness" and all this would take care of itself.

After our meeting the people crowded around us and begged us to stay. "We will give you food and a place in which to rest," they said. It was most unusual for caste people to offer us food, but we declined. "Are we such sinners you won't eat with us?" the police chief said. We explained that we had a camp of students waiting for us and we must get back, but not until we promised to try to come again for a night meeting, were they content to let us go. It was after four o'clock when we reached our tent and could break our fast, but how glad we were we had found that village! Surely God had prepared their hearts for us!

First Church, Auburn; and the Memorial Church, Columbus, Ohio, his former home city. Some of the outstanding features of the present pastorate are, the hearty co-operation of the church in the New World Movement, 3½ times as much being subscribed (and paid in full to date) as formerly contributed yearly to missions; the organization of a Storehouse Tithers' Association; and the evangelistic work of the Brotherhood, conducting about twenty meetings in nearby churches during the last two years, securing decisions for Christ, and inspiring the men of the church visited with a new appreciation of Christian service.

MASSACHUSETTS

IT WAS WITH DEEP REGRET that Bethany Church, Roxbury, accepted the resignation of Rev. Arthur S. Burrows as pastor on account of ill health. After serving the church as stated supply for six months he was unanimously called to the pastorate on May 1, 1921. During his ministry twenty-six have united with the church by baptism. Faithful in the preaching of the Word, active in the work of the Sunday-school, and giving of himself beyond his strength in his ministry in the homes, the loving prayers of his people ascend for him in his illness. Mr. and Mrs. Burrows are to retain their membership in Bethany.

REV. ELISHA M. LAKE, pastor of First Church, Springfield, accompanied by Mrs. Lake, left Montreal on Friday, Aug. 11, on the steamship "Montrose" for a trip abroad. On Sept. 17 they are due at Oberammergau. Cairo and Jerusalem are their objective for November and December.

RHODE ISLAND

AT THE COMMUNION SERVICE of August 6, was read the letter of acceptance by Dr. A. W. Cleaves of the invitation extended to him by the old First Church of Providence. He will enter upon his duties there early in September.

WEST VIRGINIA

BROADDUS DAY WILL be observed in the Baptist churches of the state, especially those north of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, on Sunday, August 20. Broaddus is the Baptist college of West Virginia. During recent years it has had a splendid growth, and is rapidly taking its place among the leading educational institutions of West Virginia, and of the entire country. The purpose of Broaddus Day is not the usual one of getting funds for the operation of the college, but to "take the college to the people."

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

PURSUANT TO A CALL ISSUED by the First Baptist Church of Bradford, to the churches of the Oil Creek Association, delegates convened at Bradford, on July 24, to consider the propriety of setting apart to the work of the gospel ministry, Miss Laverne Minnis of the Bradford Church. The council expressed itself as entirely satisfied with Miss Minnis' statement of her Christian experience, her call to the ministry and her views of Bible doctrine and unanimously approved her ordination. Because of the remoteness of Bradford from other parts of the association, the church desired that the service of ordination be held the evening of the same day. The following program was carried out: Statement of the results of the council's deliberations and the purpose of the evening meeting, Rev. S. J. Arthur, moderator; invocation, Rev. D. L. Woods;

THE FAIRVIEW BAPTIST COMMUNITY CHURCH was organized a few months ago and has enrolled ninety-seven members. Twenty-two of the membership have been baptized since the beginning of the year and the growth in all lines has been rapid under the leadership of Rev. Thomas N. Martin. In other fields where the work is new and not formally organized successes have crowned the efforts of the workers. Highland is under the leadership of Leonard Rutten of Crozer Seminary, and on May 28 eight were baptized from the mission in the Grace church. Four young women were baptized from the North Cramer Hill mission during the Easter season. Eight were baptized at the Hillcrest mission during April and May and progress has been made in reducing the debt on the property. At the large Italian community center eight were baptized during the Easter period and in work that is necessarily slow this victory was encouraging. The Italian vacation Bible school at the same center closed July 28; the attendance was the best on record, averaging 122 daily. Work is being done in Third Church for the Russians with the help of the Extension Society and with a total number of fifty baptisms in all the centers where the work is being promoted.

WISCONSIN
THE BIBLE AND CHRISTIAN LIFE Conference held by the Eau Claire Baptist Association, one year ago, is to be again convened at Eau Claire, Aug. 29-Sept. 3. Announcements have gone to the churches of the association, and those who attended the great meetings will be inviting their many friends to accompany them this year. Rev. J. E. Conant of Chicago, will be the principal Bible teacher. Brother Peter MacFarlane of St. Paul, will again be on the program with his unique addresses. It is hoped to have Mr. Elton Roth of Fort Wayne, Ind., as chorus leader and soloist. Other speakers will deliver addresses, among them Dr. LeGrand of Milwaukee, Rev. H. H. Savage, Rev. Paul MacKinney, Mr. McTavish, Superintendent of Union S. S. work in N. W. Wisconsin, and Pastor E. R. MacKinney. All who read are invited to attend. Expenses will be put at the lowest possible figure.

THE CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL of First Church of La Crosse, was the largest Baptist vacation school of Wisconsin this summer. The pastor, Rev. W. S. Stewart, was the principal. He teaches two classes this year at the Wisconsin Baptist Summer Assembly at Green Lake. During his absence the pulpit will be supplied by different laymen who are members of the church.

IOWA
REV. FRANKLIN W. SWIFT of Rochelle, Ill., evangelist, is now in the midst of a tent evangelistic campaign at McCausland.

MICHIGAN
LESLIE FIRST CHURCH, S. J. HALL, pastor, recently received its ninety-ninth member during the present pastorate, and the sixty-second this year. About $500, raised for the most part by the Ladies' Aid, has been spent in renovation and new equipment.

NEBRASKA
REV. GEO. L. SHARP, who for three years worked with the state convention in various capacities, recently resigned. Mr. Sharp is at present leading the Benson Church in a building enterprise where it is hoped soon to have a building that will meet the needs of this strategic point. Rev. E. M. Owings has also resigned after several months of service as convention pastor. He becomes pastor of the First Church of Wayne, where a large opportunity awaits him. Rev. Allan H. Bissell who has been with the convention for several months, has recently taken up work with Doane College, leading in a financial campaign for endowment. This leaves the Nebraska Convention with a small field over to face what ought to be an enlarging work for the kingdom.

MINNESOTA
REV. RANDALL A. KENYON, pastor of Temple Church, Minneapolis, left July 17 with his family, for a six weeks' visit with relatives and friends in New York. He was formerly pastor of the Hilton, N. Y., Church. Rev. Frank C. Rideout, chaplain of the U. S. Army at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., on his way to the western coast for a four weeks' visit, spent two Sundays in Minneapolis and supplied the Temple pulpit. The music committee has secured the services as choir director of Mr. Everett Williams, of Minneapolis, who for eight years has had charge of the choir of the Oliver Presbyterian Church where his chorus has consisted of from seventy-five to one hundred singers. Mr. Williams will take charge September 1 and commence the organizing of his chorus led by a paid quartet.

OHIO
MRS. H. G. BALDWIN, OF CLEVELAND, passed away suddenly on Thursday, July 20. She was a faithful member of First Church. Her husband, Mr. H. G. Baldwin, has been a lifelong friend of the B. Y. P. U. A. which organization expresses its deepest sympathy to Mr. Baldwin and the children.

AT GRANVILLE THINGS ARE back to normal since the closing of the Ohio Baptist Assembly which brought in 650 out-of-town Baptists. Pastor Horace T. Houf has returned to local duties after spending ten days as a Bible-group leader at Lake Geneva, Wis., and a week as young people's Bible lecturer and young men's life-problem group-leader in Ohio's assembly. Assistant pastor S. W. Hamblen is caring for the church's mission in Newark during the summer.

ILLINOIS

Two hundred and seventy-five young people from seventy-eight towns and cities of the state overflowed the buildings and campus of Old Shurtleff for a week's study and recreation at the 1922 assembly held at Alton, July 15-22. Practically all of these were young folks of the late high-school and college age. Most of them were Sunday-school teachers and B. Y. P. U. officers. They came to this week's period of training in a fine spirit, practically all taking full work and obtaining certificates for notes presented covering twenty or more lectures.

The solidarity and enthusiasm of the group was striking. The welding into a common unit of young Baptists from all over the state, from places as divergent geographically as Cairo and Johnston City in the South to Rockford in the North will do much for the future Baptist fellowship of the state.

The weather conditions were ideal and contributed mightily to the recreational jollification. Credit is due Rev. L. H. Koehler, dean of the assembly, for the regularity and smoothness of the administrative detail, and to Harold J. Howard, president of the state B. Y. P. U., who was director of social activities and athletics.

The morning hours from 8:30 to 12 were given over to four periods of lecture courses, during each of which four simultaneous courses were offered. These courses were intended to cover many departments of church activity and were calculated to give good training ideas and the need of further study and training for church leadership. In other words, the assembly was planned as a school, and was so accepted by those in attendance. Each course consisted of six lectures on its main theme. Following is the list of courses showing the scope of the training offered:

Dr. Warren P. Behan, "How We Got Our Bible" and "The Teaching Values of the Old Testament"; Miss Meme Brockway, "Story Telling" and "Human Behavior"; Ed Phelps, "Preparation for Leadership" and "B. Y. P. U. Organization"; Rev. Selden L. Roberts, "Principles of Teaching" and "Good Sunday-school Teaching"; Rev. Albert H. Gage, "Young People's Division" and "Church Vacation School"; Rev. Charles A. Boyd, "The Rural Church School" and "Adult Division"; Mr. Claude Tilton, "Church School Administration"; Mrs. R. B. Favorlight, "Children's Division"; Dr. Charles R. Durden, "Community Mission Service"; Dr. Herbert Hines, "Missionary Education in the Local Church."

Every evening at sunset the members of the Assembly gathered on the lawn to listen to a series of inspiring vesper talks by Dr. Durden. These were followed by an inspirational service in the college chapel, one of which, an address by Miss Brockway, is worthy of special notice. At the Friday evening session the Illinois Life Service League was organized, and promises to be a great factor in the development of leadership among our young people. Those in attendance were loud in their praises of the Assembly and its value to them personally, not only for its courses but for its inspiring atmosphere.

EVANGELIST JOHN HAZELWOOD recently closed three weeks of tent meetings at Plainville, Ray E. Foster, pastor. The entire community cooperated. Rev. M. Hall the Methodist pastor, conducted the singing and the local orchestra assisted in the musical features. There were fourteen conversions; seven converts united with the Baptist church.

AFTER BEING PASTORLESS FOR SOME months, since the resignation of Rev. G. A. Sheets, the Rockford Church has unanimously called for its pastor Rev. Ralph H. Rogers who supplied the church during July. Mr. Rogers is a Vermont man and a graduate of Yale. Immediately after his graduation from Yale, he spent two years teaching in an American college in Beirut, Syria. After returning to this country he became engaged in promotional work with the Vermont State Convention, acting as pastor at Windsor at the same time. At present he is working for his Ph.D. at the University of Chicago, and will continue his studies while carrying on the work at Rockford.

AN ORDINATION COUNCIL CONVENED at Urbana July 28 and examined Rev. Lester Boyd, new pastor of the Hoopeson Church and recent graduate of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Rev. C. W. Barber a graduate of Shurtleff and Newton. Both were recommended for ordination. Mr. Boyd was ordained at Hoopeson August 1, with Rev. J. C. Oranger of Hammond, Ind., preaching the sermon and Mr. Barber was ordained on July 30 at his home church, Mohamet, Ill., with Rev. C. C. Long preaching the sermon. Mr. Barber will become a pastor near Boston.

ABOUT TEN MILES from Mowaequa and nearly as far from any other town is the location of the meeting house of the Little Flock Baptist Church. This church has been at very low ebb until recently. Revival meetings have resulted in forty-six additions by baptism, an increase in the Sunday school from twenty-five to 100, the organization of a B. Y. P. U. with large attendance, full houses at each service with frequent conversions and an increased pastoral service for one-fourth time at a cost of $150 per year to full time at a cost of $1,300 per year. A recent visit by one of the state workers revealed one of the liveliest churches in the state. The revival is largely due to the present pastor, Rev. V. F. Oglesby, who before becoming pastor lead the service of song in the evangelistic campaign.

EAST WASHINGTON

IN MEMORY OF HIS WIFE, who passed away Oct. 22, 1919, Deacon W. I. Huxtable has had installed in the tower of First Church, Yakima, chimes consisting of ten tubular bells. They are of the sweetest tone and finest manufacture available, and are operated by an electrical mechanism from a small keyboard set adjacent to the organ console. This method of operation makes it possible for any reasonably skilled pianist to play the chimes and obviates the necessity of an expert operator as chimes of other manufacturers require. The bells are from the J. C. Deagan firm, of Chicago, and range in scale from F to G. They are set upon a heavy steel platform upon the top of the tower and unexpectedly add remarkably to the appearance of the church when viewed from the east. The formal dedication took place on Aug. 13.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THIRTY-SIX DELEGATES FROM FOURTEEN churches in the Los Angeles Association responded to the call for a recognition council at Atherton Villa, Burbank, Aug. 1. After due deliberation they unanimously voted their approval of the newly organized "First Baptist Church of Burbank." This new church comprises a devoted and substantial group of Baptists in a rapidly growing town and has from the first been self-supporting, and generous in its contributions for missions. Some months ago, by direction of Secretary W. F. Harper, a canvass of the community was made by Rev. D. P. Pope. Rev. R. G. Morgon of Glendale also gave his services for a time until the church had the good fortune of securing Rev. E. A. Main as its pastor. Beginning with thirty-eight charter members, this number has grown to fifty-six. The Sunday school organized under Superintendent R. E. Roscrum has eight classes and an attendance of seventy. The service closed with two very impressive and appropriate addresses by James B. Fox, city missionary, and Secretary Harper.

Imperialism versus World Peace

By WILLIAM I. HULL

(The address here reported in condensed form was delivered at Copenhagen, Aug. 9, at the International Conference of Churches held under the auspices of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. Prof. Hull of Swarthmore College, is a Quaker and reflects the consistent and passionate protest of the Friends as a Christian body against all war and preparation therefor. Prof. Hull attended the Washington Conference as observer for the Alliance.)

THE urgent necessity of organized and immediate action by the churches of the world to guard the world's peace is made all too plain by the economic plight and the moral slough of despond in which the world finds itself today, after four years of history's worst war and four years of armed and implacable "peace." On the one side we have economic ruin, and on the other we witness preposterous efforts to maintain enormous armaments. The so-called peace that has followed the war has been noteworthy chiefly for pestilence, famine, financial, industrial and political disorders and a snarling litter of wars and rebellions, the offspring of the world war and the Paris treaties.

Confronted by this state of affairs, it might be presumed that rational men in this twentieth century of Christian civilization would place peaceful industry and drastic economy in the forefront of their life. On the contrary, we find the shadow of Mars lying as black as ever athwart the earth and still dominating the minds of men. The thought of war is uppermost and preparations for war are paramount and universal. The experts of the league of nations have recently estimated (May, 1922) that there are 1,000,000 more men under arms in Europe today than just previous to the beginning of the war in 1914, and this in spite of the fact that the armies of Germany, Austria and Hungary have been greatly reduced.

What is the reason for this extraordinary and preposterous anomaly? Why does the world, staggering under its burden of debt, poverty and woe, continue to add to its burden by squandering unprecedented sums upon military preparedness and refuse to discuss even the lightning of it? Has it gone as mad as the proverbial March hare? Does unreason rule? Is the real bedlam outside the walls of insane asylums? Well, at least two of the elements of insanity are potent—and well nigh omnipotent—in the world today outside of asylum doors, namely, the element of fear and of that form of megalomania which is known as economic and nationalistic imperialism.

Lest I, an English-speaking participant in this conference, be discredited because of partiality or prejudice, let me hasten to say that I recognize and deplore the existence of the military virus among every people. England still stands in shining armor on sea and land; the United States retains an army of 132,000 men as against 90,000 before the war; a commission of British army experts has recently visited the United States for the purpose of investigating American methods of producing and using poisonous gases and of utilizing any improvements they may find for Great Britain's preparations for war while the army experts of the United States are striving to retain and develop to their utmost capacity the great gas establishments which our country already possesses. There is evidently no room in the international temple for either the Pharisee or the perfect man or nation; the prayer of each and all of us must be that of the publican: "Oh, God, be merciful unto me, a sinner."

The tar of the big stick of imperialism clings to us all; and we are nearly all afraid of one another. Thus, we are imprisoned in the vicious circle, transfixed by the same electric current. Modern industry demands raw materials of production and markets for finished products; other nations are acquiring these by force or fraud; we must do likewise, for necessity knows no law. Our neighbors are lishing justice and promoting the general welfare, finds itself under the necessity of intervening with increasing frequency in this private quarrel, without being able to reconcile the conflicting interests of the parties thereto or to secure an agreement between them in the interest of common justice and peace; that in order to secure their service within the limits even of extreme public necessity, the government has been forced repeatedly to take temporary control of these industries and to direct their operation; and that these two industries are in their nature public utilities upon whose regular and efficient operation depends the subsistence and comfort of the whole people:

It is hereby resolved that whenever, wherever and in so far as the government finds a necessity for it to intervene in these two industries in order to preserve peace, to protect life and property and to secure such measure of operation as will provide for the needs of the people, it ought to take the control of these industries, and the property employed in them, entirely out of private hands, and to operate the industries exclusively as public utilities for the common benefit of the people.

I move the adoption of the foregoing resolution.

remember. I thought that as mother and father were Christians I surely must be too.

Last fall when the new minister came I was aroused to the fact that I was not a true child of God just because my folks were Christians.

However I went on living an ungodly life, dancing, not loving Jesus, not reading the Bible or praying. I would even sometimes swear, not so that the folks could hear me but nevertheless swearing.

I went to church and Sunday school because I had to. I didn't take any interest in the lesson and even laughed at it and complained about it.

When the minister preached the sermon on "Saved" I realized that I was not saved and would not be until I really took Jesus as my Saviour and King.

Then at the meetings I found that the way to get Jesus was not to try to be good, which I had done many times, but to take him at once.

I went home from those meetings and every night I read some chapter from the Bible which I thought might help me. One of my favorite chapters is John 14.

One Sunday the evangelist gave me some tracts and other helpful things to read. I read them and then I prayed that my sins might be forgiven and that God would take me as his child. I don't believe I ever felt better or more confident of God than I did that day.

That night when I was praying before getting into bed it seemed like some presence was in the room. I believe that it was God. I just let myself go and Jesus took hold of me and now I belong to him.

(This letter is the personal story of a bright thirteen-year-old girl who was converted very recently in a meeting conducted by a state convention evangelist, who vouches for its validity. The letter was written at his request very soon after her conversion and with no thought on her part of its publication. It is printed exactly as written save for suppression of names.)

table as the distance was great from the mission chapel to the downtown church, and the hour conflicted with the ending of the loved Spanish Bible school. But when able to commune, her understanding enjoyment was a thing to thrill the conventional participant at her side. Later a communion service was arranged for at the chapel.

Doña Vicenta was the missionary's stay and delight in the midst of disheartening difficulties in the local work—seeking her own cheer in the quiet Wednesday afternoon hours in the chapel, but leaving more behind than she could have received. She grew better in health with a doctor's care and proper attention to nourishment, so when the missionary sickened with the long illness which finally ended her work in the "Land of the Sundown Sea," Doña Vicenta was faithful at her hospital bedside.

"But you must not grieve so at being laid aside," she said one day, "the knowledge of having been able to show some who did not know it the true Way to God, ought to be enough to make one woman happy all the days of her life!"

With the succeeding workers she was the same untiring comfort. Her faithful love never failed, and, until a short time before she left the earth, her letters came steadily, from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast, with their mission-news and words of personal affection. Once, she wrote of her pain at seeing the indifference of her own people in learning of the word of God—in the condition of those so earnestly warned of their danger by the Apostles in their writings. "My poor countrymen are just like those," she said once. "They do not wish to hear. That is the trouble with them."

In her last years Doña Vicenta occupied the little side-room of so many memories, in the chapel, and cared for the cleaning of the house for worship. "She was always faithful in this," writes the last worker in the mission, "and how I shall miss her letters, now that I too am away."

Her last illness was brief, and her death, on March 17, almost a surprise. There is no doubt, in thinking of our Mexican sister, that truly, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Our Book Shelf

Studies in Christian Stewardship, by Traverse Harrison. Cincinnati: Standard Publishing Co. 40 cents; per dozen $3.50.

A church efficiency text book based on the comprehensive conception now familiar of stewardship as including life, service, time and money.

The Son of Man Coming in His Kingdom, by Prin. Alfred Gandier, D. D., LL. D., Knox College, Toronto, New York: Doran Co. pp. 154. $1.25.

The author has severely limited the field of his discussion of the coming of Christ. "The aim of this book is not controversial. There is no attempt to prove any theory, post-millennial or pre-millennial, but to discover by an inductive study of the gospels what Jesus himself thought and taught with reference to his coming and kingdom." He accepts the traditional view of the Fourth Gospel, but confines his studies chiefly to the Synoptics. He defines the coming as both a process and a consummation; but "nowhere does Jesus make any reference to a thousand years of righteousness on earth preceding the final judgment." "We hear much of pre-millennialism and post-millennialism, but I doubt if there is any basis for either in the teaching of Jesus."

The book is a careful piece of work with an honest purpose to ascertain what Jesus himself really teaches. Its point of view is clearly indicated in the above citations.

Year Book of the Churches, 1921-1922, edited by E. O. Watson. New York: Federal Council of Churches. Cloth $1.50; paper $1.00.

A compendium of information covering the religious bodies in the United States, with a directory of their officers and institutions; a directory of the Federal Council and affiliated bodies; a directory of national interchurch organizations; a directory of chaplains in the army and navy; and detailed statistics for 1921. The book is indispensable to all workers having interdenominational contacts, and also to all interested in social institutions and agencies. Newspaper offices, libraries, and public offices will find it invaluable. We note some errors in proofreading; and a curious error in the address of Dr. Wm. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, which should be 5109 Waterman Ave., St. Louis, Mo., and not Asbury Park, N. J.

The Religion of Religious Psychology, by Charles C. Ellis, professor of religious education at Juniata College, Philadelphia: Sunday School Times Co. 25 cents.

Dr. Ellis has made a careful study of twenty books on the psychology of religion in order to discover their fundamental religious concepts. He found but five favorable to the Christian fundamentals. He quotes the statement in Prof. Leuba's work: "I cannot persuade myself that divine personal beings, be they primitive gods or the Christian Father, have more than a subjective existence." The writer commends the works of Warner, McComas, House, Stalker and Pym as "favorable to the fundamentals."

College Standard Dictionary, edited and abridged by Frank H. Vizetelly and others. New York: Funk and Wagnalls. 1325 pages. Thumb-notch indexed, cloth, $5.00; buckram, $6.00. Bible paper edition, full leather, gilt edged, boxed, $7.50.

One of the most distinguished families in the higher life of America, although not an old family, is the "Standard Dictionary Family" of which Funk and Wagnalls are the founders and custodians. Seven dictionaries, from the wee vest-pocket edition of 26,000 words to the unabridged with its 450,000 vocabulary terms, form this contribution to the study of the English language.

The latest addition to the family gives promise of becoming the most popular and useful member, especially in educational circles. Imagine an adequate dictionary for student or writer, which you can hold in one hand while you turn its pages and in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred find all that you are in need of! Imagine a work of reference weighing six pounds, and serving as lexicon, encyclopedia, biographical dictionary, gazetteer, grammar, and reference book of the World War, all in one, and alphabetically arranged!

The new work—and it is very new, for it includes events occurring in 1922—is based on the Unabridged Standard, and preserves practically all of that work which ordinary usage demands. There are 140,000 vocabulary terms dealt with, including the very latest of the new words. "Radio" has nearly a column; "buddy" and "fag" are here; Pershing and Harding; Geraldine Farrar but not Charley Chaplin; twenty-four lines under "Lord" are given to English court ceremonial—destined to become obsolete in time, no doubt—"Diaspora" is listed, but not "Parousia"; nor is "Fundamentalist" included in the new words.

The illustrations, 2,500 in number, and the numerous tables and charts, add to the comprehensiveness of this very choice book. If your young folks are in college they ought to have this work to help them through. School boards should place it in every schoolhouse in their districts. All who use language as a means of livelihood or service will find it a splendid accession.

In the Days of Poor Richard, by Irving Bacheller. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Company. $2.00.

If America is to endure and fulfill the dream and prayer of the fathers, a revival of interest in and appreciation of them and their work in founding the republic is urgently needed right now. Unless the generation now coming into control of the nation understands whence it came and through what noble sacrifices it was liberated and established, there is small hope of national survival in the prevailing world of turmoil.

Irving Bacheller has written a sweet story of life and love and hardship and tragedy in Revolutionary days, with two interesting young people at the center and with Ben Franklin and John Adams and George Washington passing across the stage now and then. Young folks ought to revel in it for its charm of style and for its interest; and they cannot read it without feeling a new desire to keep America strong and true to the ideals of the fathers. Nor is it a young folks' book merely. To older readers it will open new lines of reading for the winter in American biography and history.

"It Is to Laugh"

"How is it you have such a good memory, Norah?" her mistress inquired.

"Well, mum, I'll tell ye. Since me childhood never a lie have I told, and when ye don't have to be taxin' yer memory to be rememberin' what ye told this one or that, or how ye explained this or that, shure ye don't overwork it an' it lasts ye, good as new, till ye die."—Boston Transcript.

"I'm afraid, my friend," said the lecturer, interrupting his address to point an accusing finger at a little man who was yawning in a front seat, "that you are not following me closely." "I'm not a friend of yours," replied the little man, truculently, "and I'm not here to listen. I'm waiting to put out the lights and lock up the hall."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

IT MAY HAVE HAPPENED

By IRA B. WILSON

Time—Any Friday evening, 7:45 o'clock.
Place—Any church choir room.

Characters:
Mr. D. I. Rector (Choir Leader.)
Miss So. Prano.
Mrs. Con. T. Ralto.
Mr. High T. Enor.
Mr. B. Aritone.
Mr. Low V. Olce.
Miscellaneous assortment of sopranos, altos, tenors, and basses and one organist.
IN ONE ACT.

Act opens with the several singers standing listlessly around.

Mrs. Con. T. Ralto—Where in the world is Mr. D. I. Rector and the rest of the bunch? I thought choir practice was to be at 7:30 o'clock. Here it is almost 8 o'clock. I can't stay around here much longer. Mr. Ralto didn't like it because I came tonight anyhow. If this is the way they're going to run things they can count me out.

Mr. B. Aritone—I second the motion. What this outfit needs is a little more "pep."

Chorus of Voices—"More 'pep' is right." "I'll say we do." "Look who's here." (Mr. D. I. Rector and a few more singers appear, Mr. R. with his arms full of music.)

Mr. R.—Good evening, folks! Been here long? Say—do you know I forgot till just a few minutes ago that this was choir practice evening! Where's the rest of the choir? WHY CAN'T they get here on time? How does any one expect me to get results with such an indifferent crowd with which to work? All right, let's begin. We can be singing while the others come in. Take your places. (They line up.) I came off in such a hurry that I had to bring the first music I could get my hands on. I don't know what it is. Let's see. (Examines music.) Here's one we've never used. "Praise the Lord," in X-b, by Ira B. Lorenz.

Soprano—Aw, that's too high.

Altos—Yes, let's try it.

Mr. High T. Enor—Say, Ira B. Lorenz can't write music. Get something by Carrie B. Ashford.

Mr. Low V. Olce—Go ahead with this one. The bass looks good anyhow.

Mrs. So. Prano—I simply will NOT ruin my voice singing one of Ira B. Lorenz's anthems.

Mr. D. I. Rector—What shall I do? You don't seem to agree.

Basses—Sing it.

Sopranos—Find something else. (Organ in meanwhile has begun the introduction to the anthem in question, while a few late members come in and take their places.)

Chorus (Despairingly)—Oh, go ahead then. (They blunder through the anthem. It sounds awful.)

Sopranos—Say, Mr. Rector, how does this go?

Mr. R.—How should I know? I never saw it before. Will the organist please play the melody for the sopranos?

Mr. B. Aritone—I think we should sing this faster.

Mrs. Con T. Ralto—Yes, faster and with more vigor.

Mr. R.—All right, folks—faster and with more vigor.

Mrs. So. Prano—Let's have a ritard at the last.

Mr. Low V. Olce—And a little swell on the last note.

Mr. R.—Good idea. Retard at the close and swell on the last note. Let's sing it again. (They flounder through the anthem again, some better than before.)

Mrs. Con T. Ralto—Really, I must go. I promised Mr. Ralto that I would be home at 9 o'clock.

Mr. R.—All right. We'll sing this anthem Sunday morning. Remember, choir practice promptly at 7:30 next Friday evening. All be sure to come. I don't know just what's the matter with our choir. It sometimes seems to me that we're not doing as well as we might. But let's hang on. That's all. Goodnight. CURTAIN.

Note.—There may be a moral to this bit of nonsense. I wonder if I need explain it.—The Choir Leader.

maintaining large armies; we must do likewise, for self-defense is the first duty of statesmanship.

Well, it is time for some one to break through this vicious circle. Men fought the world war for this purpose. It was to be a war to end war and preparations for war; it was to put an end both to war and to the armed peace which breeds war; it was to make the world safe for democracy and rid of imperialism. It failed tragically to do any of these things. Some more effective, as well as more righteous, method must be tried.

What, then, is the conclusion of the whole matter? It is evident that there is something at stake far more fundamental than the mere reduction and limitation of the number and size of warships, guns, forts and armies, the curbing of submarine and aerial warfare, the formulation of rules for the use of bombs, machine guns, food blockades and poisonous gas. It is not a question of how large or how deadly shall armaments be, or by what methods shall nations kill one another off in retail or wholesale, by sudden death, slow poison or starvation.

There is involved nothing less than the realization in our day of the prophet's vision of a time when swords are converted into plowshares and nations learn war no more. It is not merely a reversion from modern war back to the primitive means and methods of killing men, any more than it was a reversion from human slavery back to serfdom; but an abolition of war itself through a rejection of the whole military system from the hands, the minds, and the hearts of men.

It is not even a conversion of national armaments into a so-called international police force; for this implies the military and economic coercion of whole nations, the innocent and the guilty alike, old men, women and children, as well as combatants in the trenches. It is, rather, the utter rejection of war as a method, the application of the capital and labor at present invested in preparations for it to the arts of peace, and a single-hearted reliance upon exclusively peaceful means of settling international disputes and of co-operating in international tasks.

"Blood Theology"

(From an editorial in "The Congregationalist")

WE should insist, however, that Love is not a matter of isolated acts or motives. In God, and in godly men, it is a character, and not merely an attribute. For Paul, as for us, Love is defined in its one source and in its supreme example. God is gracious; his attitude toward the sinner is not vindictive, but merciful. He yearns to win men to repentance. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself"—what sorry work that great text makes of the mechanisms, antagonisms, and literalisms of all crude and prosaic theories of the atonement, of the things so often called "the blood theology." True, there is a very real "blood" theology—a gospel of a loving God, a sacrificial Christ entering the divine life and the whole universe in tragedy, until man be redeemed. Paul understood and described in Romans 8, the sublimity of a groaning universe and a suffering God, seeking the triumphant goal of salvation for men, "the glorious liberty of the sons of God."

No Vacation in Foreign Missions

This is your vacation season. Perhaps you are reading this while enjoying the roar of the sea, or the murmurings of a brook in the woods, or some quiet shaded corner of your own porch at home. There is no vacation season in missionary effort. Seasons come and go, but the work of the Kingdom must go on irrespective of season or climate.

MISSIONARY SALARIES must be paid in August and September as well as in January and March. The proportion of total missionary salaries paid by the Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Society during the summer months amounts to approximately $104,000.00.

STEAMSHIP PASSAGES must be paid during the summer months, for this is the season of heaviest travel of missionaries back to their fields. Approximately 25 missionaries are scheduled to sail before October, and the steamship companies require cash for the tickets.

BANK INTEREST does not stop during the vacation season. Last year the Foreign Mission Society, because of its deficit and the fact that so large a proportion of gifts were received toward the end of the year, had to pay $23,254.73 in interest. Assuming a similar amount this year means that the August and September proportion will be approximately $4,000.00.

THE PATHOS OF HEATHENISM continues during summer and winter. Heathenism flourishes all the year round. At no time of year is Christ not needed. Multitudes are spiritually perishing for lack of the bread and water of life. There is no vacation in the ravages of sin; there must be none in the redeeming work of grace.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER? We offer three brief suggestions:

1. Pay promptly your pledge to the New World Movement.
2. Send a gift over and above your pledge if possible.
3. Make a special offering toward the debt of the Foreign Mission Society.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

We do not share with some liberals their squeamishness concerning a "blood" theology. Our demand is only that its symbolism shall be vitally expressive, and not a perversion, of the divine character. We do not feel the repugnance of some for Cowper's great hymn:

"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

It may be said that this hymn has the horrible symbolism of the shambles and the slaughter-house. Are we not in danger of forgetting that Calvary was precisely a place of slaughter? The gallows, the stake, the cross, the place where martyrs have died and saviors of men have paid the price of human sin, are all horrible. They are touched with glory, only because of the fact that the heroes of the faith eschewed the deeper error of moral guilt and spiritual ruin. The Love that saves, and the Love to which men are saved, is no vague and futile sentimentalism. It comes from the depths of the divine life and is defined by all that Calvary has meant for God and man. It suffers, it endures, it sacrifices, it is dominated by all the heroism of God and man.

IMMANUEL

GOD WITH US

THE day is long and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;
Tired of the sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through and of work to be done,
Tired of ourselves and of being alone:
Yet all the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company;
We fight, but 'tis he who nerves our arm;
He turns the arrows that else might harm,
And out of the storm he brings a calm;
And the work that we count so hard to do,
He makes it easy, for he works too;
And the days that seem long to live are his,
A bit of his bright eternities;
And close to our need his helping is.

—Susan Coolidge.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. J. W. Weddell supplied the South Bend, Ind., church Aug. 13, and revisited his former charge at Davenport, Aug. 20. He and Mrs. Weddell are now living at Morgan Park, Chicago.

The London "Daily Chronicle" says that Premier Lloyd George is to write his reminiscences, chiefly covering the period since August 1914, in which he has been so colossal a figure.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has made a gift of $60,000 for the founding of a Library of Industrial Relationships at Princeton University. Dr. Robert F. Foerster, former Harvard professor and eminent economist, will be in charge of the library and will give his time partly to research.

Singing evangelist Wm. S. Dixon, Wheaton, Ill., has had a full season, as a pastor's helper in evangelism with dates in Payson, Ill., Joliet, Ill., Duluth, Minn., Ottumwa, Iowa, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Sidney, Iowa, Ashtabula, Ohio, La Fayette, Ind., Brazil, Ind., Gallatin, Tenn., and Edgewood, Iowa. He will be available for dates with pastors from August 27 on. He is completing his ninth year in evangelistic service.

New discoveries at Stonehenge on Salisbury Plain have led J. E. Gurdon to put forward a new theory concerning those mysterious remains, now conceded to antedate the druids. Mr. Gurdon thinks that Stonehenge was "a sort of pre-historic Westminster Abbey, Royal Exchange and Race Course rolled into one." The August Scientific American has photographs and drawings of the latest findings and guesses.

Rev. E. H. Jones, one of our veteran missionaries to Japan, in a recent story of a Japanese convert, remarks incidentally, "Almost everybody in Japan except the Christians smoke." If it were America no exception would be needed, for in our Christian land smoking is well nigh universal among men. We wonder what our Japanese brethren will say when they read this; but if we are ashamed to have them know it, is not our Lord ashamed to have us do it?

The nation-wide battle is waxing hot for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Law. Many of the leading weekly and monthly journals are publishing notable articles pro and con. The June Forum has "An Anti Ode" which is a superb specimen of hysteria bordering on "D.T.," and is indicative of the desperate straits to which the liquor advocates have been driven. In the same journal, for the "dry" side, is an article on "The 'Right' to Get Drunk," written by Supt. William H. Anderson, of the N. Y. anti-saloon league. In his characteristic trenchant and unsparing way he riddles the specious arguments of the "wets." The same author has an article in Current History for July. In the World's Work, July, Miss Elizabeth Tilton, a Massachusetts social worker, has a very significant survey of what prohibition has done, supported by exact figures for her own state. The Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore published recently the results of a thorough poll of 1,500 leaders in American industry and public life,

Osaka Church Comes of Age

THE two items which follow are taken from the July Gleanings published by our missionaries in Japan.

First Baptist Church of Osaka Reaches Self-Support

In a musty volume of mission annuals you will find, "In the fall of 1888 Brother Thomson who had recently been appointed to the Kobe field visited Osaka and seeing the desirability of having a Baptist work in the city, opened a preaching-place in one of its needy parts."

On May 1, 1922, this Osaka Baptist Church assumed self-support. In other words it has taken thirty-one years to bring the church to itself. In this period the following missionaries have been connected with the church: Thomson, McCullum, Brunson, Wynd, Scott, Hill and Foote. . . . The church early passed through the period of anti-foreign sentiment. Persecution was the lot of the believers. No established home was provided until 1913. . . . The present pastor, Rev. Tatsu Ogawa came to the church in the fall of 1916, and almost from his installation the work has gathered momentum and unity. He is not a profound preacher nor a learned scholar, but he excels in those pastoral qualities which bind hearts to him and unite zealous souls to a cause. He has diligently sought not only the lost but has been vigilant in hunting up the group of stalwart Baptists who are constantly moving towards this great commercial center of Japan.

The missionary has attended many of the annual meetings of the church. He was electrified and thrilled by the last one. Item after item of business was disposed of in rapid manner, until the proposition was broached of breaking loose from mission funds. The writer looked for the usual members to bring up the usual obstacles, but what was his surprise to hear the old grumblers and kickers the first to urge the step!!!!!! It came down to being only a matter of when the step should be taken. Some said, "Wait a year." Others, "We can do it now if we decide to." So to make all happy they said, "At the end of six months." And May 1 was the day.—JOHN A. FOOTE.

Letter of Thanks

We, the members of the Osaka Baptist Church, a church founded by our long-beloved American brothers and sisters in the Lord, having received teaching and guidance through the instrumentality of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, are constrained to give expression to the gratitude that is in our hearts for the efforts you have put forth on our behalf, through many earnest missionaries, at great expense.

Now, having happily progressed, under the blessing of our heavenly Father, we have come to the point where we no longer need help from your society. From the present month we assume the full support of our work. We are still a small flock with meager resources, but with God-given faith we make our high resolve. We ask that you will approve this step, and we earnestly hope to enjoy your guidance and encouragement, your sympathetic cooperation in everything, in the future as in the past.

On the very first Sunday that we met for morning worship as a self-supporting church, we unanimously resolved to tender our thanks to the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. In pursuance thereof this letter is written, to give expression to our heartfelt thanks for the high favors we have had from you for many years. We also pray that your august society may enjoy ever increasing prosperity.

We shall count it a genuine favor if you will convey to our brothers and sisters in America our feelings on this matter.

May 5, 1922.

Representatives of the Osaka Baptist Church:

Deacons Teisho Horinaga, Norishige Yamamasu, Fusajiro Masuda, Tokuzo Kotani; Deaconess Mishiie Tomol; Pastor, Rev. T. Ogawa.

To Dr. Charles B. Tenny, Representative of the A. B. F. M. S. in Japan.

Drys Gaining in Congressional Primaries

THE personnel of the next congress in whose hands the fate of dry law enforcement legislation rests, is largely determined by the primary elections. In primary contests thus far prohibition enforcement has received most gratifying indorsement from the voters. They have not only successfully protected the majority of the dry congressmen and senators who are asking to be returned to Washington but have nominated a sufficient number of additional dry candidates to make it possible for the drys to make a net gain in both house and senate at the November elections.

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel and legislative superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, in an Associated Press dispatch carrying a date line of August 5, gives the following analysis of the results of these primary elections to date:—

"Seventeen states, not counting Kentucky, have held primary elections. Thirteen United States senators have been nominated in twelve states, two nominations being made in Pennsylvania. Nine senators have been renominated, seven of whom have stood for prohibition enforcement and two against it. Of the four new nominations, all stand for enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

"In the seventeen states 188 congressional districts have nominated candidates. One hundred and sixty-three congressmen have been renominated, of whom 128 have voted for prohibition enforcement legislation and twenty-five against it. Of the new nominations, about a third are considered wet or doubtful.

"In many of these states the dominant issue in the campaign was a beer and wine amendment to the national prohibition act. The wets have about held their own in the wet districts. Only one dry congressman has been defeated by a recognized wet candidate.

"On the other hand, the drys have made gains in both house and senate. In some districts the wets have not polled more than 5 per cent of the vote. In Missouri, with the dry vote divided among four candidates, Mr. Sacks, the beer and wine candidate, was defeated by a large majority by Mr. Brewster."

Since Mr. Wheeler's statement was issued, Ohio, Arkansas, Alabama and Kentucky have voted with results most gratifying to the drys.—From the American Issue.

You Can Serve In India

THE BAPTIST is in receipt of a fine letter from Rev. A. P. Veerasawmy, pastor of the church at Nellore, South India. We have found through inquiry that he is a true and faithful brother. He has from time to time had access to copies of THE BAPTIST and he is very anxious to receive it each week. He says: "It is of great help in guiding the Baptist pastors and churches." His pay is $16 a month and he has a family dependent upon him. Who will send this Baptist minister in Nellore THE BAPTIST for one year? The foreign postage will be $1.04, which should be added to the subscription price.

Killam's Kollum

Variety

Manuscripts come into editorial offices in an extraordinary number of sizes, shapes and designs. I have seen stories typed on white paper, yellow paper, pink paper, and blue paper. I don't at the moment recall any on red paper or green paper; but probably such things have been. Manuscripts have arrived typed on transparent paper, on tissue paper, on waxed paper, and on heavy linen paper.

Mystery

We did not write the above paragraph—Mr. R. C. Holliday wrote it for the July Bookman. He simply beat us to it, for we have them all right here on our desk! Which color was yours? Did you affect tissue or tablet—ink or hard pencil or decrepit typewriter? We have just finished (two of us working at it) a handwritten manuscript, too good to reject, and too poor to try on the printer until it was deciphered. Send 'em on; tissue, cardboard, Swedish craft, odd scraps,—anything that will take a mark. You know we specialize in the wholly impossible and you may get printed yet!

Lucidity

Mr. Holliday modestly goes on, "It has been continually stated by editors that to receive proper attention manuscripts should be typewritten on one side of the page only—black ink—white paper of medium weight—uniform size—and liberal margins. Double spacing should be used. Triple spacing is perhaps even better—"

Brevity

Be brief. Brevity is the soul of wit. It is also the soul of an inviting manuscript. Dress your own game before you ask us to cook it on our grill; and more of our readers will feast on the savory substance served.

A Strange Kink

We know a hard working minister. Like most ministers his salary is away below the requirements of his position. He sees poverty. He faces a hundred and one demands upon his pocket book. His heart is all right and he responds. We have found, however, that complaints are being made that this man does not pay his own current bills promptly and in some cases not at all. He told us of the satisfaction he had in ministering to the needy. He sidestepped the matter of his obligations to his denominational newspaper. From time to time he has requested that his name should not be dropped from our lists but we have finally been forced to discontinue his paper. He continues his work of mercy but justice is not done to his creditors. It is just a kink.

Dr. H. B. Benninghoff, of Waseda University, Tokyo, came home last month on the Empress of Japan.

Immanuel Church, Chicago, was visited by a body of 500 Ku Klux who interrupted the service last Sunday evening to make a contribution to the fund for the new building (described in THE BAPTIST for August 5) which amounted to $430.

Prof. Rollin D. Salisbury, Dean of the Ogden Graduate School of Science of the University of Chicago, died in a Chicago hospital August 15, from blood clot on the brain. Dean Salisbury was one of the most eminent geologists of his time, and had been with the University from its founding in 1892.

2,500 Baptist churches in the Southern Convention are open to the charge of heresy, if successful evangelism be a mark of the true church of Christ. According to official statements, although there were 250,000 baptisms in the Convention last year, more than 2,500 churches failed to report a single baptism, and in 7,000 churches no evangelistic meetings were held. In view of the general attitude of our Southern churches upon the yearly meeting as a chief occasion for evangelistic effort and revival, these figures indicate a regrettable lethargy and lack of passion to win souls for Christ. Plans are under way for the enlistment of these churches in the evangelistic program of the denomination during the current year.

Justice Wm. H. Taft, received from Cambridge University the degree LL. D. on July 6. The public orator of the occasion said of the candidate: "He is a man who will not set his party before his country, nor in his devotion to his country forget humanity. Today it is his hope to bring peace to a worn out and well-nigh desperate humanity. It is his desire to see the human race united in fellowship; to see it regain its health and sanity, lead a larger life and pursue the purposes of God."

The Gospel of Hate

By J. B. CRANFILL

THE BIBLE is a book of love. From the time that God created man and placed him in the Garden of Eden until the close of the last book of the Bible it is one long story of sin, suffering, forgiveness and grace. The one text in the Bible that conveys to the human heart both the germ and the genesis of salvation is that verse which says: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." The last commandment, which our Lord called a new commandment, was given to us in these words: "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another." Throughout the whole of scripture and of the history of God's dealings with men there is one insistent note and that note is love.

The apostles and prophets incarnated the love of which Paul so eloquently speaks in all their deeds, in all their words, and finally in the supreme sacrifice they made when countless legions of them did give their bodies to be burned, thus sealing their faith with their blood. Of all men in the world, our preachers should have a care for every man, woman and child, of every race, creed and color, in all the great suffering world. Each and every one of us should remember what Paul said in one of his immortal sermons, "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

For more than a hundred years the burden of song and story, of sermon and prayer, of editorial and epic in all our Christian annals has been foreign missions, home missions, all missions to all men throughout all the world, but we have now fallen upon strange times. The gospel of hate is supplanting the gospel of love. In the press, in the forum and, sad to say, sometimes in the pulpit men are inveighing against the foreigner, the Jew, the Negro and the alien of every class and creed and character. These men who sow these seeds of dissension and hate seem to forget the fact that every writer of the Bible except one was a Jew, and all of the writers of the Bible, if appraised in the new vernacular, were foreigners. In Old Testament times the man who saved the prophet, Jeremiah, when he was incarcerated in the dungeon and with his feet in the mire, was a man from Ethiopia. And when Jesus, struggling, and near unto fainting and to death, was slowly making his way to Golgotha, Simon, a man from Africa, helped him bear his cross.

For my part, I do not see how a preacher can find it in his heart to harbor this sense of hatred for any man, or any race, or any devotee of any faith. We are sending missionaries to Africa and to South America, where the papacy has a strangle hold upon that civilization. We are sending missionaries to China, Japan, the islands of the sea, and, indeed, we are belting the world with the story of the cross. Thank God that we are doing all of this, and yet, while this self-sacrificing service is in progress, there are many among us who are preaching the gospel of hate against the foreigner, against the Jew, against the Negro and against the Catholic.

In God's good province millions of Jews, foreigners, Negroes and Catholics are at our doors. In touch with every one of our lives are our Jewish friends. They are the children of God's love. Through Judah Jesus was born. He was the Lion of the tribe of Judah. These Jews, through pain and tears, have marched down the centuries without Christ. No people in the world need him so much as they. Surely we never shall be able to bring them to Christ if we ostracize them, boycott them, abuse them and anathematize them. The gospel approach is the approach of love, and not of hate. I long to see our Jewish friends coming into the church of Christ and accepting their Messiah, who long ago was accepted as our Messiah.

Then all around us are the foreigners who have come to our shores to find an asylum from tyranny, oppression and poverty. We touch elbows with them day by day, and if we show them a heart of love we shall be able to win them to the Christian religion and the Baptist faith. Surely we never shall win them by inveighing against them and by staging in this country a simulation of the Boxer uprising, which cost the lives of many foreigners in other years in heathen China.

Our attitude toward our Negro population should be one of kindness, tolerance, gentleness and Christian love. The Negro naturally becomes a Baptist when he finds Christ precious to his soul. The great majority of our Christian Negro population are already in Baptist churches, and those of us who have named the name of Christ and believe the Baptists have preserved the gospel in its purity should treat them as fellow Christians and give them of the best service within us, to the end that they may be better citizens and that their Christian lives will be ennobled, elevated and enlarged.

I plead for a recrudescence of the gospel of love and for the exorcism of hate. Love is heaven; hate is hell. Love wins men to Christ; hate delivers them to Satan. Let us re-enthroned in our lives, in our Christian work and in our civilization the gospel of love.—From the Baptist Standard.

Royal Haigh Fisher sailed with other missionaries, including his own family and Miss Evalyn Camp, for their field in Japan, on the Empress of Canada from Vancouver August 24. Miss Camp succeeds Miss Lavinia Mead at the Training School for Bible Women at Osaka. Miss Mead being at home on furlough. Mr. Fisher is on the faculty of the Mabie Memorial Academy at Yokohama, where we have 450 students. Mr. Fisher expects that for the new school year beginning next April, there will be 600 pupils enrolled.

Rev. Edwin S. Stucker is planning to do evangelistic work again the coming winter. Pastors may address him as usual at Ottawa, Kansas.

Miss Lavinia Mead of Osaka, Japan, has arrived home for her furlough. Her present address is 3021 Park Ave., Minneapolis, care Mrs. George Young.

President Rufus Weaver of Mercer University, one of the most cultured and lovable leaders among Southern Baptists, has been appointed to membership on the Georgia State Board of Education.

The American Issue

WE have not been unaware of the fact that the coal strike and the railroad strike have developed an extremely critical situation for the country and therefore for the world.

It is a fateful moment in human history, when every possible resource, material, intellectual and spiritual, should be consecrated and correlated and mutually augmented for the salvation of our race from complete cataclysm.

Sir Philip Gibbs, editor of the British Review of Reviews, in a press dispatch to an American daily last week said:

"It is becoming clear to many minds in Great Britain and elsewhere that nothing can save Europe from very grave catastrophe, including wide-spread revolution and new wars during the next ten or fifteen years, except a complete change of international relationship based not on acts of the old statesmen now in power, but upon the uprising and spiritual regeneration of the younger generation. Whether that is going to happen or not is still uncertain. There are no immediate signs of it. But if it does not happen quite soon, there is going to be a European upheaval which will shake the world to its foundation."

Mr. Lloyd George addressed four hundred Free Church ministers at a luncheon in London July 28, and in his remarks, "speaking, as he said, advisedly and with impressive solemnity, he declared that if there should be another war civilization was doomed. Looking round the audience, he repeated that tremendous word—'doomed!' 'doomed!'—in such a way as to leave no doubt in the minds of anyone that he was uttering the inmost thought of his heart."

The Premier went on, we are told—we are quoting from the Baptist Times and Freeman—to justify this warning:

"You have at this moment the strongest passions in the human heart—fear, revenge, hatred, yea love, love of country, love of home, love of kin, ranging themselves gradually on the side of war.

That is the peril of the future—the fear that something will happen to your country, the fear of the destruction of your homes, of your kindred. They say we must prepare for war to protect them. All those deep, dominant passions of the human heart gradually enlisting on the side of war. That is where the churches come in, and if the fear continues the great crash will inevitably come."

America's clear-visioned men and women also see the rapid accumulation of dire and dreadful factors which are to have their inescapable issue in another regime of Horror and Blood for the world. And America, we affirm, should be hoarding and administering and correlating every available resource, material and intellectual and spiritual, for the salvation of the race, which embraces and insures our own salvation as well. For America is most free of all peoples on earth today to lead and to plan and to serve mankind in this awful, fateful hour. America came off least plundered by the War God, least mutilated by shell and gas, least wasted in fortune and in person; and to whom much is given, of him shall much be required.

In this crisis not merely wage scales or dividends are in the balance: not merely falling or rising prices: not merely domestic and foreign markets: not even merely the security of our American democracy—but the life and social fabric and moral ideals and spiritual principles—yea, the very continuance, of our civilization. In four short years an European city, one of the proudest in the world, was reduced from a population of more than two millions to some eight hundred thousand—and these living in filth and beggary and despair.

What was wrought through social and moral collapse at the bank of the River Neva may just as surely and swiftly be wrought at the mouth of the Hudson or at the foot of Lake Michigan or at the Golden Gate. Cities and factories and railroads and universities and hospitals and churches and mansions and bungalows—all these are founded on a moral and social order in which law and love and truth and fidelity and forbearance and cooperation and faith are basic. When that foundation disintegrates the superstructure topples into ruin.

What is America doing in the face of the actual tumult and the prospective crash? America is marking time, standing idle in the market-place, angrily snatching at clubs and stones and firearms, wasting precious work-days, wrangling over scales and rules and methods and precedents: or playing and flapping and fagging and endlessly motoring and jollying, as who should say with shrug of shoulder, "I should worry!"—and all alike, all of us sowing the seed of a frightful harvest; a harvest of hunger and cold, of privation and misery, of bitterness and sullen resentments, of dangerous cleavages and of social disruption, of political chaos and national disintegration—with a dying world looking on and wondering at our insanity!

Pessimism? the croakings of a kill-joy? So did they say of those who warned the Bourbons of France near the end of the eighteenth century; so did they say of those who with prophetic vision and passion foretold our war over slavery; so did they say of those who have cried out to America to face her race problems and give herself to the task of winning the confidence and love of Negro and Indian, of Slav and Greek and Bohemian. Paris paid for the Bourbon blindness; and Lincoln died for America's sin; and Chicago's streets ran with blood of white and black when race passion flamed out. It might have been better to modify despotism, better to abandon slavery, better to deal humanely with ignorant and neglected blacks and foreigners.

To say that the present impasse is utterly contrary to the spirit and profession of a Christian civilization, is to be trite. To say that both parties directly involved in the coal and railroad controversies are in the wrong, is merely to give offense and irritation to both. To plead the paramount rights of the helpless public, of the millions of helpless poor who are the unwilling victims of the industrial imbroglio, is to suffer indictment for disregard of the "fundamental issues which must be fought to the finish." To protest against starving babies and half-crazed men and women cruelly abandoned in the Arizona deserts, to forecast farmers freezing to death next winter on the northern plains, to point out the armies of mechanics watching idly cold smokeless chimneys of factories where they might have earned their bread—all of this counts for little beside the breaking or the winning of the strike. The war psychology has fastened itself so completely on us all that we cannot escape the delusion that war is a solvent for every problem that may arise in the sphere of human relationships.

There is one issue in the present controversy, which is dominant and irrepressible: the principle of national welfare as against the profit or even the existence of the individual. It matters little that a strike be won or lost, if while it was being won or lost we drifted by the safety line and the crisis was resolved which dooms our nation and so the world. It matters little for labor to save its union if America loses hers. It matters little for capital to break the unions if both together they break down the nation.

Unless the whole is greater than any of its parts, unless the whole people have rights paramount to the alleged rights of individuals and economic or social groups, unless life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are still inalienable rights of man: then we are just now engaged chiefly in the business of collecting material for another Gibbon, who shall one day write of "The Decline and Fall of American Democracy."

Is It Nothing to You?

SURELY we Christians, at least, have not become immune to sympathy for human suffering, even though since August 1914 we have been schooled to discuss complacently stories of death losses running into millions.

Fifty thousand dead in a single community,—swept into eternity in two days of awful catastrophe: one hundred thousand living, some of them maimed, some of them in the hideous grip of cholera, all of them homeless: a city of sixty thousand laid level with the earth on which it stood: do none of these things move us to pity and to quick response?

We published a full account last week of the Swatow disaster, and follow it in this issue with an appeal from our veteran missionary Jacob Speicher. This is no time to balk at red tape or choke at rules, with a whole city dead or dying or in direst need. We urge that offerings be sent as soon as possible to Treasurer Huntington for relief through our Swatow missionaries on the field.

Look Up

JESUS was telling his disciples, shortly before his death, of the distress and disorder which was to befall the world before his kingdom should finally and completely prevail. "But," he added, "when these things begin to happen, look up and raise your heads, for your release is not far distant." (Luke 21:28, Moffatt).

Christian men and women, especially those who are personally involved in the present industrial conflict, are sorely tried and perplexed, in their efforts to reconcile their Christian faith and duty with their social and industrial connections.

Nevertheless, even though caught in this awful maelstrom of strife and misunderstanding, we may still hold to our faith in a righteous God, we may still exercise our privilege of prayer to the Father, we may still pray for the victory of love in our own hearts, we may urge fairness and reverence for law and a Christian concern for the rights of others, we may insist that the spirit of Jesus Christ is the only possible way out of a tangled situation.

Whatever the future has in store for the nation and for the race, the believer knows Jesus has him and his affairs in hand, and that our life is hid with Christ in God. The release will soon come, and if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. To lose him through our bitterness or despair in this crisis, would be infinitely worse than to lose the strike—no matter which side of it we are on.

The Defendants of Number Eighteen

ONE of the curious features of the pending movement on the part of the liquor crowd to break down the prohibition law and prevent its enforcement, is that many of the most stalwart and determined defendants of the Amendment are public men and women who did not originally favor national prohibition and who took no part in the fight for prohibition when the fighting was hard and the goal distant—unless indeed some of them were among the opponents of prohibition.

The eminent jurist who fills the office of Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court was not an advocate of national prohibition; but one of the most crushing blows dealt at the nullificationists after the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment was an editorial written by Mr. Taft for the "Philadelphia Ledger" in which he told the wets they had not a leg left to stand on and that the amendment could not be invalidated and must be obeyed.

The veteran Christian scholar and editor Lyman Abbott was not among those who labored for national prohibition in pre-war times; but Lyman Abbott's paper, "The Outlook", had this to say editorially last month:

"Any intelligent and fair-minded man who is accustomed to studying, comparing, and tabulating the sources and factors of historical progress must come to the conclusion, no matter how wet his sentiments may be, that the Prohibition Amendment was not a sudden and sporadic political move, planned in secret and enacted by surprise, but is the result of steady-going and concerted action by men and women who compose a majority, and perhaps a very large majority, of the qualified voters of the United States."

The Menace of Episcopacy

THE Michigan Christian Advocate (Methodist) is having an enjoyable time poking fun in a good-natured way at our Baptist pretensions to democracy as compared with Methodist episcopacy. The Advocate finds an article by Pastor Ben Cox of Memphis on "Baptist Independency" in the Baptist Record (Mississippi) which provides quite a ground for chuckling. The Advocate makes light of alleged Methodist fears of episcopacy alluded to by Mr. Cox.

We rise to inquire if the Advocate is so bold as to refer to the distinguished Bishop McConnell as "quasi-Methodist"? If he is authorized to voice orthodox Methodist fears we may call him to the witness stand for the defendant Cox.

In a feature article in the Christian Century on "The Outlook for the Baptists" the Bishop makes this candid admission:

"As a Methodist I freely admit that centralization in Methodism has gone too far, that we need to decentralize—that we should give the local congregation larger scope in doctrine, ritual and practice, that we should show more readiness to grant autonomy to Methodist bodies in foreign mission fields, that we should regard the control of Chinese churches from America as an absurdity, that we should turn pitiless publicity on all our officials. In other words, the Methodists will have to learn that the vital human values must prevail over any pride in a world-wide church organization." (Christian Century, May 11).

On this evidence we ask for a verdict in favor of the defendant Cox.

A Midsummer Night's Dream

A MISSIONARY of the Home Mission Society went into a destitute community and began to conduct services. He found a few Baptist families, all but one completely out of touch with their home churches far away, and not a single copy of THE BAPTIST coming to the town.

In a few weeks he began evangelistic meetings and by the blessing of God was able to organize a church. A month later he had the joy of seeing a pastor settled on the field, and moved on to his next place of missionary service.

The day after this missionary began work in that town he sent to THE BAPTIST a list of ten families who from that time received the paper every week for three months. The missionary had the privilege of using constantly these ten subscriptions as adjuncts to his personal work on mission fields. They were provided by his society as a necessary part of his equipment for efficient service.

From time to time, averaging three months' intervals, he sent in new lists and the subscriptions were shifted: the local pastors meantime seeking to secure the temporary readers as permanent subscribers.

The result of this method was to awaken old memories, kindle old fires, revive long-forgotten associations, tie up these derelict Baptists to their denomination, and also to illuminate new converts concerning our faith and our world-embracing enterprises.

Just as the editor finished reading the list—he awakened and found he had been dreaming! He remembering having read, the evening before, an editorial from the Universalist Leader, and decided to print it in THE BAPTIST, in the hope of making the dream come true. Perhaps it will come true, by the time we finish the New World Movement, for many of our devoted missionaries and for all of our missionary societies. But here is the editorial that provoked the dream:

Every missionary should have as an essential part of his equipment at least a dozen, far better two dozen, perpetual subscriptions to his church paper, which he can distribute through the proposed parish, not by hand, but sending them as regular subscriptions through the mail, and shifting them about as it seems wise. The people in the new parish are not conscious of the fact that they belong to a big family scattered all over the country; they have the sense of being a peculiar people, and live continually under a sense of suspicion. It requires courage to be connected with a small mission in a city of large churches. It shows that there is still in the heart of some people a spark of the heroic. Now it is much easier for these mission people if they become familiar with the members of their own church family, and especially if they know what the other members of the family are doing and how they are doing it. Therefore we are saying that in some way every missionary should have at his disposal a number of subscriptions to our church paper to place regularly in the homes of his people, until they get the habit. Here is where great missionary work can be done by our people everywhere by endowing subscriptions. With 50,000 of these subscriptions we could multiply our missionary efficiency many times. And there is not a church in our fellowship which could not with $50 perpetuate forever its missionary endeavor, and we have thousands of people who can if they will establish a perpetual missionary.

Chinese Christian Ideals

ONE of the conspicuous wall mottos of the Indianapolis Convention was a quotation from the remarkable address made by Dr. T. T. Liu at the Christian Conference recently held in Shanghai: "Agreed to differ, but resolved to love." In that address giving the ideals of the Chinese Christian church he said:

"First of all, the Chinese Christian church shall be a fearless fighter against sin.

"Second, the Chinese Christian church shall be a faithful interpreter of Jesus.

"Third, the Chinese Christian church shall stand as a flaming prophet of God.

"Fourth, the Chinese Christian church shall be an obedient disciple of the Holy Spirit.

"Fifth, the Chinese Christian church shall be a worthy teacher of the Bible.

"Sixth, the Chinese church shall be a genuine servant to the Chinese people.

"Seventh, the Chinese church shall be a defender of Christian unity and comprehensiveness. Christ is with it. His presence insures its safety. It shall teach its members to agree to differ but resolve to love."

What Shall the Churches Say about the Industrial Crisis?

"You know what this Crisis means, you know it is high time to waken up."—Romans 13:11 (Moffatt's translation.)

By U. M. MCGUIRE

MORE than a million miners and railroad men are on strike at the present time. Many of the industries on which people depend for their very lives are interrupted, leaving other millions of the people in peril of cold and hunger. Hundreds of thousands of other workmen are threatening to strike. Martial law is in force in some sections, and there have been official threats to extend it indefinitely. The president of the United States and the governors of many states are trying various methods to compose the strife between organized labor and organized capital so as to permit the resumption of the essential industries. The Associated Employers of Indianapolis reiterating a call that arises in many quarters have appealed repeatedly to the churches to declare their positions upon the moral issues involved in the present controversy. The annual Labor Sunday is at hand, with its call for a testing of the moral insight and courage of a hundred thousand preachers. What shall the church say at such a juncture? What do those who are appealing to them expect them to say? What will they be permitted to say?

In these days, when there is so much exhortation about the duty of obedience to law, it is disquieting to read in the papers frequent reports of purposes on the part of executive officers to strain the law in order to secure desirable settlements of strikes. If a careful observance of the law may be set aside by executives of the government, of whatever rank, for what they conceive to be public necessity, what consideration of loyalty may restrain the private citizen from following their example? Anarchy is the only logical outcome of such a course; and any officer of the government who expresses himself favorably towards such action ought to be impeached and deposed.

Two Vital Questions

Aside from some incontinent military bluster on the part of certain executives, it is hard to see how under existing laws they could have done much better than they have done. The industrial struggle has reached a stage beyond the foresight and capacity of our lawmakers, and consequently, no executive officer, assuming that he knew how to act effectively, has been free to do so without violating the laws.

Two vital questions have come up for settlement:

First, can the great organized industries be made to serve Christian ends under private ownership and operation? Unregulated private business in those industries has failed hopelessly. The government has been compelled to intervene in them to save the very life of society. It is doing everything that the most sympathetic and friendly administration can do to save private ownership and operation and to promote its success. The churches are holding a friendly attitude towards the experiment and wishing it well. If social evolution can proceed on the basis of private and competitive trading, why should it not do so? But if it cannot, then public ownership and operation will be the alternative. Most people still believe in the practicability of private property in the public utilities, but an adverse judgment is rapidly forming, and at almost any time it may become a tide.

Neither public nor private ownership is sacred in the eyes of the church; but human life and the public welfare are sacred; and the difficulty experienced in trying to humanize and moralize the private management of these industries has created in the churches a growing conviction of the necessity for taking that management out of the power of predatory private interests.

Secondly, can the existing labor organizations be made to serve the purposes of a fraternal and cooperative constitution for the community as a whole? The attitude of the church bodies, so far as they have expressed themselves in a large and deliberate way, has been distinctly friendly towards the unions; but their friendliness has been based upon sympathy and hope, rather than upon moral satisfaction. One of the greatest obstacles the church has met in her efforts to moralize ownership and management in business has grown out of the fact that she has not been able to secure the frank co-operation of the unions. Can anybody conceive a legitimate reason for the existence of an organization of wage-workers that does not envisage the whole industrial program of the Federal Council of Churches? Upon any basis short of that, how can society contemplate union labor domination without fear? The people know that they have been ruled and robbed most inordinately by private profiteers in the guise of "business", and would be glad to escape their clutches; but the only visible alternative alarms the public. Nobody but the unions can remove that fear; and the only way by which they can remove it is to demonstrate their fitness to function as constructive social agencies in the interest of humanity, liberty and democracy. For them also the day of judgment is near, and its test will be their competency to serve the common good.

Arbitration at the Polls

Particularly, the resort to the strike must give place to a peaceable and authoritative adjudication of rights. After nearly a century of experience in democratic government (I date from the extension of popular suffrage in the early part of the nineteenth century), a strange thing is that the mass of working people, the peculiar beneficiaries of democracy, appreciate neither its genius nor its opportunities. The very purpose of government by the people is to arbitrate their differences at the polls, and to enable the common man to obtain justice by peaceful methods; and nothing but political incompetency or neglect prevents the people who live by labor, and who are in the overwhelming majority, from securing by their votes all of the rights and benefits they now seek through the strike. To every legitimate aspiration of labor, this is the

The Critical Spirit

We have come upon an age when the very air seems to be charged with the spirit of criticism. It is easy to see the short-comings of others and to imagine that we could do better if in charge of certain departments of work, but let us try cooperation instead of criticism, and see if it will not work better. We know that constructive criticism, offered in the right spirit, is always helpful, but it is not constructive criticism to believe and circulate every report that may come to our ears. Livingston Johnson, in the Biblical Recorder.

short, constitutional, peaceful, safe and certain road of enlightened citizenship. Any group which cannot learn that road and which can pursue its ends only by way of the strike, will come presently to a point where both roads will be closed. The practice of government by the people is the only way to preserve either such government or the rights of the people. Ultimate despotism lies the other way. Can the unions learn this lesson?

One item of encouragement is that the course of the unions, whether consciously or unconsciously, is tending towards the organization of society as a whole on the basis of the collective negotiation of all questions presenting a conflict of interest. A great many errors can be endured so long as the general tendency is in that direction; and on that particular issue the attitude of the unions is far more encouraging than that of many of the employers. The employer's ordinary watchword is "competition", that of the unions is "co-operation"; and in those two watchwords two different civilizations are speaking. In fact, if one looks deeply into present tendencies, he discovers beneath the surface currents, the steady, swelling tide of a profound and vast social revolution gathering momentum in the organized labor movement. In the unions the working people are learning democracy, fraternity and solidarity.

The Union Bloc

They do not ordinarily strike for the love of the thing. But when the emergency arises they see no better way to serve an interest which presents to them the aspect of a great moral and human cause. And there is some ground for that view. When they contemplate political action, they discover that under the existing system of territorial and semi-feudal representation, political democracy functions so imperfectly as to bar them from securing a prompt and adequate consideration of their cause in legislative bodies. They are not a district; they are a group, a bloc; and the representatives of a district represents neither them nor any other definable interest of industrial society. They have found that even the policy of rewarding their friends and punishing their enemies at the ballot box is futile. Under the circumstances their "friends" and their "enemies" are as helpless as they are themselves; and both the rewards and the punishments, proposed with a loud flourish of trumpets, collapse like a punctured tire.

The only place where they can vote directly on the issues that vitally concern them is in the union.

In consequence, just as the capitalists, in spite of their theories of individualism and competition are building up for themselves a soviet system within the government and rivaling its power, so the unions, in spite of their theories of separate craft interest, are doing. With both groups and with the people at large the constitutions of the last century are obsolescent. Legislatures, executives and courts openly violate them; and there is little protest from the people. These facts indicate, not that civilization is breaking down, but that the new industrial society

The Coming Kingdom

Have been heavy with labor and sorrow:
I should faint if I did not see
The day that is after tomorrow."
—W. J. Dawson.

is seeking a more perfect political organ. The unions are working towards the elimination of strikes and towards a system of group representation whereby organized labor can make its political franchise effective through representatives of its own choosing. This is the meaning of the temporizing efforts of state and national executives, of the futile experiments with boards and commissions created by the civil power to deal with complex industrial conflicts, and of the half-hearted and fearful approach of the government towards the public ownership and operation of the great organized industries. Through alarms, and misunderstanding, and strife, and privation, and bloodshed, society is feeling its way towards a new and better organization of its life around the machine for the employment of the newly appropriated forces of nature.

But where the mass feels its way, the church ought to be able to see the way; and it is not without vision. If one wishes to know its attitude towards the larger issues involved in the present disturbances, he has only to scan the elaborate report of the Federal Council of Churches on "The Church and Industrial Reconstruction," published a year ago. It is representative, not merely in an official sense, but also in the larger sense of being the product of masterful leaders of thought and action. Consider who they are: President

W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University, President George W. Coleman of Babson Institute, Dean Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago, President Henry Churchill King of Oberlin College, Professor Harry Emerson Fosdick of Union Theological Seminary, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Rev. Samuel G. Inman, Professor Alva W. Taylor, and many other such men and women who collaborated with them. Does any man doubt that as a group they represent the most mature and advanced thinking, the widest acquaintance with human life and the highest capacity for constructive proposals to be found in this generation? And what is their message?

Christian Ideals in Industry

First, with respect to society, the task of the churches is to propagate social ideals: as that of the school is to create social capacity; of business, (including in its large sense the whole process of production, distribution and material service) to provide the economic basis for social living; and of politics, to organize social control. While these functions overlap to some extent, they are sufficiently distinct to constitute four great and definable fields of social service. Failure or weakness in any one of these four organs increases the burden and impairs the functioning of the others. The church, above all, must not fail as the organ of the socially ideal.

Secondly, to the tendency towards the creation of a more perfectly democratic organ of industrial expression and co-operation, the local churches ought to contribute goodwill, motive and guidance. They ought consciously, by a divine election so manifest that all men of goodwill can recognize it, to march with the vanguard, foreseeing far beyond the toilsomely moving mass, interpreting the tribulation, encouraging the laggard and despondent, and pointing to the Land of Promise. Shall we come to such a time as this, bound by the partisanships and the factional cries of a former generation, or of any generation; without a program, without comprehension, without vision, without courage and without faith; hesitating to act until a pagan world shall add its permission to the commission of our Lord? It is not enough that the Federal Council has formulated the Christian ideals for the new industrial order. They will remain mere literary formulas until the thousands of ministers in their local fields, and

Citizens of the World

By SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN

EVERY person is a member of the community and a citizen of the state. As such he is under obligation to serve his community and to carry the Christian spirit into his efforts as a citizen. But the Christian is much more than this, and other obligations press upon his heart and conscience.

The Christian is a member of the human race and so must practice a world citizenship. The central truth of the Gospel as revealed in Jesus Christ, is that of God as Father and men as brothers. He who taught us to look up and pray: "Our Father who art in heaven", taught us also to look over the world and say: "My brothers here on earth." According to Christ's teaching all people of all races are equally dear to the Father in heaven. All men are redeemed by Christ's sacrifice and are called to share the blessings of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom of God which sums up Christ's purpose for mankind is a world ideal. It rises above all barriers of class and nation. The Christ comes to bring men unto God, and to break down all walls of division between men. (Eph. 2:14-16) "They shall come from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God". (Matt. 8:11) "In Christ," says Paul, "there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman; but Christ is all and in all." (Col. 3:11)

Christianity is not opposed to nationality; but it always sees each nation as a part of humanity; and it insists that each nation shall serve all mankind.

The Chief Issues

In our time questions of race and nationality are among the chief issues before the world. The nineteenth century, it has been said, made the world a neighborhood. It is the special task of the twentieth century to make the world a brotherhood. If men are to live together on this crowded earth, the nations must live in justice and brotherhood. It is essential that young people especially should realize that they are citizens of the world and that they should practice a world citizenship.

The people of today determine what kind of a world we shall have to-morrow. By their outlook upon the world and by their attitude toward people of other races; by their faith in peoples of other nations and their loyalty to the ideal of human brotherhood; by their efforts in behalf of international justice and by their belief in a real federation of nations, they may make an end of war and ensure a better future for the human race. One of the supreme tasks of the coming generation is that of making an end of war. Related to this, in part as cause and in part as result, is that of creating such a federation of the nations as will establish justice throughout the world and promote the well-being of all peoples. World peace must be an ideal, a chivalry, a religion, before it will ever be a reality. It is worth while to live in this day and to have a part in making the better world that is to be.

Several things enter into the practice of a world citizenship:

1. Cultivate an International Mind. "The field is the world," says the Son of

"Men Must Be Free"

"The foremost thought in the constitution is the right of freedom and the pursuit of happiness. Men must be free to live and achieve. Liberty is gone in America when any man is denied by anybody the right to work and live by that work. It does not matter who denies."

"A free American has the right to labor without any other's leave. It would be no less an abridgment to deny men to bargain collectively. Governments cannot tolerate any class or group domination through force. It will be a sorry day when group domination is reflected in our laws."

"Government and the laws which government is charged with enforcing must be all for the people, ever aiming at the common good."

—President Harding, Marion Address, July 4, 1922.

Man. "God has made of one blood all nations of men," says the great apostle. The Christian by the very nature of his faith believes in all mankind as one family. He understands the sweep and meaning of Christ's purpose for mankind. He takes an interest in everything that concerns any people on earth. He cultivates a world outlook, a planetary consciousness. He respects the people of all other races; he learns to trust them; above all he wants each people to live its own life and to fulfil its own mission. The Christian is a citizen of the world. His vision overlaps town, class, church, national frontiers, and embraces humanity. He is a citizen of the world.

Loyalty to All Humanity

2. Cherish a World Patriotism. As the Christian loves his own nation and lives that it may prosper, so he loves mankind and seeks the good of all. He is loyal to his own nation, and he is loyal to all mankind. As his devotion to his own family circle expands into a loyalty to his own nation, so his loyalty to his own nation expands into a loyalty to all humanity. This world patriotism means addition and not subtraction. It is the exaltation of national love; it is its transfiguration into a complete love. No man truly understands the meaning of his own nation until he sees it in relation to all mankind. The more he loves mankind the more he will love his own nation for what it means to the world. He who sees nothing beyond his own nation neither understands the mind of Christ nor understands his own nation. This world-patriotism is thus not a competing and conflicting interest with a true national patriotism; it is rather the crowning of one's national citizenship and the harmonizing of all interests in the great purpose of God.

3. Practice a World Citizenship. It is essential that the Christian citizen should know what are the things that cause misunderstanding and war between nations. It is essential also that nations learn to test their national policies, both political and economic, by their relation to international justice and the welfare of all peoples. There is, there can be, no such thing as a hermit nation, an isolated state. Every nation is a part of humanity and must live in and for humanity. There can be no such thing as an isolated state or the absolute right of any nation. Each nation must think of itself as a part of humanity, and it must learn to read its mission and interpret its interests in the light of humanity's welfare. No policy can be good for a nation which works against humanity's good. Whatever is really good for humanity is good for every nation.

Christians believe that the same principles of morality are binding upon nations as upon persons. They must therefore be quick to protest against any measure that ignores or violates those principles. They must be ready to protest against any measure that is calculated to cause misunderstanding and friction in other nations. They must be active also in upholding all measures which make for world justice, for fair dealing among the nations, for disarmament, for the prevention of war and the promotion of world peace. They will encourage all measures which express the unity of mankind and make for a federation of nations. Since God has made of one blood all nations of men, the brotherhood of mankind is grounded in the very purpose of the Father. Since men of all nations are related as brothers, they must recognize this fact and must find some way of expressing their relationship.

The Federation of Mankind

The tasks of humanity can only be done by all of humanity. Progress is the co-operation of all in behalf of all. If the nations are ever to express their common unity and cooperate in world tasks, there must be some sort of appropriate world organization. If humanity is ever to fulfil its appointed task of establishing justice and building on earth a Kingdom of God, there must be organization of all peoples through which they can cooperate in common ends. The Christian with the world outlook will study this question of the federation of all mankind and he will encourage all efforts that make for this great ideal.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its meeting December 16, 1921, adopted the following statement of international ideals of the churches of Christ: "We believe that nations no less than individuals are subject to God's immutable moral laws; We believe that nations achieve true welfare, greatness and honor only through just dealing and unselfish service; We believe that nations that regard themselves as Christian have special international obligations; We believe that the spirit of Christian brotherliness can remove every unjust barrier of trade, color, creed and race; We believe that Christian patriotism demands the practice of good-will between nations; We believe that international policies should secure equal justice for all races; We believe that all nations should associate themselves permanently for world peace and good-will; We believe in international law, and in the universal use of international courts of justice and boards of arbitration; We believe in a sweeping re-

Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Baptist World Alliance

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

From July 31 to August 2 a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Baptist World Alliance was held at the Baptist Church House, 4 Southampton Row, London, with John Clifford presiding at all sessions. The special object of the meeting was to prepare the outlines of a program and make other arrangements for the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-27, 1923. Members of the committee were present from Australia, Holland, Sweden, Germany, Great Britain and America. The Americans present were R. H. Pitt, J. S. Dickerson, W. W. Landrum, E. Y. Mullins (proxy for E. W. Stephens), and J. H. Franklin (proxy for L. A. Crandall). Unfortunately, the president of the Alliance, Robert Stuart MacArthur, and George E. Horr, L. A. Crandall, E. C. Morris and R. H. Edmonds were unable to leave America at this time. W. O. Lewis and Everett Gill, special representatives in Europe of northern and southern Baptists respectively, were present. It was a disappointment to all that the delegates from Russia were not granted passports by the Soviet government.

There have been two meetings of the Baptist World Alliance—the first in London in 1906, the second in Philadelphia in 1911. A third meeting was to have been held in Berlin in 1916. It is high time that representatives of Baptist bodies in all parts of the world assemble once more and give expression again to the great historic principles which have been the strength and glory of our denomination wherever their fight has been made for soul freedom. Other denominations held their world-meetings in 1920 and 1921. On account of the special relation of the Baptist World Alliance to work in Europe, where conditions have been so seriously disturbed, it probably was wise not to attempt a meeting until now. But the meeting should be held in 1923, and Stockholm is the best city on the continent of Europe for such a gathering. The Baptists of America should send large delegations.

"Baptists Facing the Future"

It was agreed that the general theme for the meeting at Stockholm should be "Baptists Facing the Future." Around that theme will be built a program which will attempt to interpret our historic principles in the light of present-day needs. There was a strong feeling that a clear enunciation and application of such historic principles is demanded by the religious, social, industrial and political condition of the times. Therefore to make such a contribution to the thought and life of the world is the chief objective of the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance. In order to make such a contribution, Baptists of the world are asked to send many of their clearest minds, warmest hearts and most eloquent voices to Stockholm. It was realized that if our people are to be asked to come from the ends of the earth for a week of conference, there must be a great objective and a worthy program. What more inspiring than the theme adopted: "Baptists Facing the Future"!

The Orient and Africa to be Included

While conditions in Europe will require special attention, it is the purpose of the executive committee to make the general organization just what its name implies—a world-alliance of Baptists. India, China, Japan, Africa, Australia and other regions are expected to send representatives. Every effort will be made to develop denominational solidarity the world around and to form an alliance for the propagation of those principles which constitute our historic contribution. But special effort will be made to secure adequate representation from those sections of Europe where our brethren are fighting for soul freedom. It will strengthen their hands and their hearts to attend the meeting at Stockholm, and the Baptists of the world will be able, speaking with one voice, to hasten the day of their complete religious freedom.

"Atonement is what it cost God to forgive the sin of the world. It is the supreme point at which we encounter the vast recurrent paradox of religious thought—that the God who stands infinitely above human life is yet deeply involved in our experience, and that to see into the unchanging heart of things we must gaze upon the travail of a cross. The forgiveness of God rises up through the depths of a passion that sinners can never fathom."

—Prof. H. R. Mackintosh.

An International Baptist Exhibition

Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, Home Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society of England, is responsible for the suggestion that in some suitable building in Stockholm missionary, educational and general exhibits be assembled from Baptist organizations in various countries with a view to giving the delegates a conception of denominational strength and activity. This will be of special value to the small struggling groups of Baptists in several sections of Europe, who with the New Testament in their hands dare to be loyal to their convictions, not realizing fully that in England and America there are multitudes of their spiritual kinsmen engaged in large tasks. Mr. Fullerton, as chairman of the committee on exhibition, will probably visit America and several countries in Europe for conference with bodies which will cooperate in this feature of the meeting of the Alliance.

Marvellous Reports From Russia

Although the delegates who were expected from Russia could not secure permission to leave their country, letters were received reporting the most remarkable growth of Baptists in that land. No one seems able to give the exact number, but there must have been an increase of ten fold during the last few years, and a conservative estimate of the Baptist church membership is at least one million. Perhaps nothing like it has occurred before in Baptist history. One of the letters recently received by Commissioner Rushbrooke predicts a fifty-fold increase in the not distant future. It was reported to the committee that in one place in Russia on a single day more converts were baptized than on the day of Pentecost. While it is impossible to ascertain the actual facts, it is certain that Baptist principles are appealing to many in Russia. Commissioner Rushbrooke and Everett Gill spoke of the steps that have been taken by the two groups of baptized believers in Russia with a view to the unification of the two unions. Upon hearing the statements the executive committee adopted the following resolution:

"The Executive Committee of the Baptist World Alliance, assembled at the Baptist Church House, London, on Aug. 1, 1922, expresses its gratification and thankfulness in learning that the baptized believers of Russia, gathered hitherto under the names of the All Russian Union of Evangelical Christians and the All Russian Baptist Union are earnestly seeking to be united in one body, and,

"Whereas, the Executive Committee is convinced that these two bodies are one in belief and in polity, indeed in all save name,

"Resolved that this Executive Committee expresses the hope that the union of these two groups may be speedily consummated."

Following the meeting of the executive committee there was held a conference on Baptist relief and mission work in Europe. Several paragraphs from the report of that conference are of interest:

Baptist Relief Work and Outlook

Dr. Rushbrooke submitted a general statement regarding the relief effort for Europe initiated at the London Conference. The two American foreign mission boards had contributed for the two years at the rate of $166,666 per annum each. During the current (second) year Russia has received over $120,000 of American money and over $25,000 from British and other sources. The position in most European lands had generally improved, though minor exceptions were represented by Austria and Hungary and a major exception by Germany. He read a heart-stirring letter from the Rev. F. W. Simoleit describing the critical conditions of the work in Germany and appealing for enlarged relief.

As to Russia, Dr. Rushbrooke reported that the gravest anticipations of failure of this year's harvest had happily not been fulfilled. The yield had been disproportionately large and the harvest might prove to be about 50 per cent of the normal. A considerable amount of relief would probably be required during the coming year, and as the larger organizations, especially the American Relief Administration, intended to restrict their operations, it might prove the case that the call upon Baptists would be larger than during the current year. He hoped in September to visit Russia with Drs. Gill and Lewis, and would, after investigation on the spot, report to the contributing boards.

Baptist Mission Work: Collegiate Training

Reports presented by Drs. Rushbrooke and Gill dealt mainly with the establishment of new seminaries in Esthonia, Latvia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Roumania, and the purpose of opening a seminary in Spain. The experience had thus far been very encouraging.

In an impressive speech Dr. Mullins called attention to the vindication of the policy of founding seminaries provided by the growth and strength of Baptists in Sweden and Germany during the past two generations.

Dr. Shakespeare stressed the need of a knowledge of the Bible as the supreme desideratum in connection with preacher training; and advocated the provision of distinctive training for pastors and evangelists respectively.

Dr. Bystrom gave interesting details of proposals recently adopted for the opening of a preachers' school at Wasa, Finland.

Italy

The Rev. C. E. Wilson reported the distinct success of the cooperative effort in Italy between the Baptist Missionary Society and the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Convention. The administrative advantages had been accompanied by definite spiritual revival, and his society now awaited any proposals concerning the future which the Foreign Mission Board might put forward as a result of the experience gained.

Relations of Baptists to European Governments

Dr. Rushbrooke laid stress upon the importance of these years in which constitutions and fundamental laws are being shaped in so many countries. It was of critical importance that the Baptist view of the relations of church and state should be placed before those occupied in drafting constitutions and general laws. Especially was it necessary to secure in the public school system of Europe a training that should do justice to the religious convictions of all sections of the population. Particular reference was made to Rumania, where, as Baptist Commissioner for Europe, he had, in response to official request, placed carefully worded statements of the Baptist position in relation to the state and to public education in the hands of ministers of state. In Jugoslavia, Spain, and elsewhere action was called for, and no larger service could be rendered to our immature and inexperienced communities than timely assistance and counsel based on the larger experience of such countries as Britain and the United States of America.

Dr. Whitley called attention to the desirability of bringing to the notice of European statesmen the experience of the United States and the influence of Baptists in shaping the American contribution to religious freedom.

A Voice From Germany

Rev. F. W. Simoleit, of Germany, touched all hearts when, upon request, he told of how the collapse of the mark is proving disastrous to religious and philanthropic work in his country. As these lines are being written the German mark, which before the war was worth twenty-five cents in American money, is worth less than one-eighth of one cent. Prices of food and clothing have advanced greatly, but the incomes of the pastors and other workers are not correspondingly raised. Unless relief is furnished to the Baptists of Germany, their splendid work built up through the years, is threatened. Steps must be taken in the immediate future to furnish them a measure of relief.

[On August 18 the German mark was down to seven and one-half cents per hundred, or about 1-320 of par.—EDITOR.]

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, who for two years has served as Baptist Commissioner for Europe, took a most active and helpful part in the meeting of the executive committee. He has done much already to strengthen the Baptist forces all over Europe, and in regions where they do not yet enjoy complete religious freedom he has been a bold spokesman before governments, as he represented the Baptists of the world. On the day immediately after the meeting of the executive committee Dr. Rushbrooke, who had recently visited Rumania in the interest of the Baptists of that country, was the chief spokesman for the British and American representatives who called at the Rumanian Legation in London, and for more than an hour discussed with the Rumanian minister the plight of our brethren in his country. All who know his work feel that Baptists are to be congratulated on having Dr. Rushbrooke as their Commissioner to Europe. American Baptists are fortunate too in having as their special representatives in Europe at this time Everett Gill (Southern) and W. O. Lewis (Northern) who cooperate most heartily with Dr. Rushbrooke.

J. H. Shakespeare, as secretary of the Baptist World Alliance, served most usefully as secretary of the meetings in London, and the beloved John Clifford, eighty-six years young, presided at every session. The years are telling on the physical strength of this Grand Old Man of the Baptists of the World, but his mental and spiritual vision is unimpaired. Incidentally, he hopes to be at Stockholm. God grant it as a blessing to the forces who will gather there. His words near the close of the meeting of the executive committee furnished an appropriate conclusion for this report.

Much of the success of the conference was due to Dr. Clifford, Dr. Shakespeare and Dr. Rushbrooke, and we had not failed to tell them so. In response Dr. Clifford said:

"This has been one of the happiest weeks of my long life—one of the gladdest experiences I have had in Baptist history. I have always believed from my youth that we Baptist folk have been in God's way. This conviction has deepened this week. I believe the trend of the world is toward the adoption of those principles for which our fathers gave their lives. As we develop our denominational solidarity, so shall we affect the thought of the world."

The Baptism of John Clifford

COMMEMORATING the seventy-first anniversary of his baptismal confession, Dr. Clifford gave the address here reported, at the close of the Sunday evening service, June 18, at Westbourne Park Church, London, where he had been pastor for fifty years.

MY DEAR PEOPLE,—I have asked our pastor to permit me to say a few words this evening. You will be interested to hear of the day of my baptism, the anniversary of which occurred last Friday. It is 71 years ago that, in the words of the Apostle, I "put on Christ Jesus by baptism"; it is one of the sacred days of my life; it has been an inspiring influence year after year during the 71 years. The day began with a Prayer Meeting in the village Chapel at 7 o'clock in the morning, which was followed by school at 9 o'clock, and at 10.30 morning service. The Rev. R. J. Pike, son of Gregory Pike, was my pastor at that time, and he took for his text "Why baptizest thou then?" (from John v. 25). The baptism was close to the pulpit; it was raised up so that it could be seen by everybody in the church. The church held about 300 people, and on that morning it was crowded—a baptism was an event—attended by all who could get into it, and especially those belonging to the factory at which I was a worker, who knew me and were my companions, and many of them friends. There were eleven of us for baptism on that Sunday morning—seven women and four men—if I may class myself as a man, being only 14 years and 8 months, and the youngest of the eleven, and, so far as I know, I am the only one still living. Friend after friend has gone, gone to the reward and to the rest which remain for the people of God. The morning service was full of sacred emotion. It was one of the most solemn days of my life, and there seems to come over me as I think of it a new thrill of aspiration and joy when I recall the experiences of that day. In the afternoon there was the celebration of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, and a special address by the pastor to the eleven who were candidates for church membership as well as for baptism. It was not the beginning of my Christian life. In November, 1850 (the previous year), I had been led at a Sunday evening prayer meeting, to the joy of the forgiveness of sins, and the acceptance of Christ as my Saviour, Master and Leader. On the day that I was baptized, publicity was given to that fact of surrender to the authority of Jesus, for it was the fact of the act of baptism in the presence of so many who knew me that was so important. It made the day unforgettable, and I was committed to the Christian life, and consequently I feel exceedingly helped and sustained by the memory of that public act of baptism, and in times of strife it has power to strengthen me day after day. It has enabled me to bear my witness to the claims of Christ on the soul in the conflicts that I had to wage.

I have said many things on baptism, and I have written a little tract on "Need I be Baptized?" that has been circulated by the hundred thousand. I want you, who have publicly evaded it, to acknowledge Christ Jesus in the presence of others. Among the blessings which come from being a faithful soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ—a witness for Him and His Gospel—I commend it to those who have passed from death into life, and have entered into the enjoyment of peace with God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, as a source of increased spiritual power and of continuous perseverance in witnessing for him. To anyone who has not yet made Jesus Christ his Master, let an old man's testimony—coming as it does over all these years, be heeded by you tonight. Why not? I owe everything that I have worth getting, to this Saviour—everything! Wherever I have been of service, whatever I have been enabled to achieve during these years—all is due to Christ Jesus.—From Baptist Times and Freeman.

The Abolition of Child Labor

By OWEN R. LOVEJOY

Secretary National Child Labor Committee

FOR three years the federal child labor act solved the child labor problem in factories, canneries, mines and quarries. As it finally went into effect on April 25, 1919, it virtually prohibited by means of an excise tax of ten per cent the employment of children under sixteen in any mine or quarry and children under fourteen in any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States; on the same basis it provided for an eight-hour day and no night work for children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen. On May 15, 1922 the United States Supreme Court declared this act unconstitutional. A similar act attempting indirect legislation of child labor was declared unconstitutional in 1918.

The recent decision has obviously created a new situation. The first question that arises is: what will now become of the children formerly protected by this act for whom the states make no adequate provision? Fortunately, many states have already reached the standards of the invalidated federal act; others have even gone far in advance. But child labor is still allowed in factories and canneries, mines and quarries, in states where child exploitation is economically profitable and where public sentiment has not been aroused sufficiently to realize the great wrong to the children who are deprived of their right to normal child life and doomed to premature adulthood.

The laws of twenty-eight states, in one or more respects, fall below the moderate standards fixed by the two federal acts. In Georgia, for instance, children of twelve years may now be worked ten hours a day in woolen and cotton mills; and from sunrise to sunset in other factories. Children of fourteen and one-half may be worked all night. In North Carolina children of fourteen may be worked eleven hours a day in factories during the entire year and children of twelve may be worked that long day during vacations. In Minnesota and Michigan, two important mining states, children of fourteen may be worked in mines; and there is no age-limit for quarries. This is but a mere indication of the effect of the recent decision on child laborers in industries no longer under federal control.

Moreover, we must not forget that there are many industries which did not come under the federal jurisdiction. Children in agriculture, domestic service, street trades, stores, messenger and delivery service, restaurants, hotels, moving pictures—and this is not the complete list of omitted occupations—were left to state regulation. But practically all states specifically exempt agriculture and domestic service from child labor regulations; none gives real protection to children in these fields of exploitation and neglect. Other fields are overlooked in many states or are inadequately regulated. Results of recent investigations of street trading in large cities throughout the country indicate that this unregulated form of child labor carries with it the hazards of ill health, retardation in school, and a tendency toward delinquency. Another source of child labor upon which there is practically no check is tenement homework. Studies in Rhode Island have revealed that children as young as four years old were engaged in work at home prohibited to children under fourteen in factories. One half of the children did not earn as much as five cents an hour. Injuries, especially accidents from machines installed in the homes, in addition to eye strain and fatigue reacting upon school work, were frequent. Then, there are the hosts of children at astonishingly tender ages working in the beet fields, onion fields, cotton fields, truck gardens and other forms of back-breaking agricultural labor. Stunted by ill health, illiteracy and inadequate preparation for adjustment to the complex conditions of life, these child laborers help fill our institutions and swell the ranks of the army of blind-alley workers.

Since these neglected industries, with their attendant injuries to child life, constitute about eighty-five per cent of child labor in the United States, it is clear that neither federal regulation without constitutional authority nor the initiative action of the states could be depended upon to obliterate this national shame. Twice, the federal government, representing the will of the people, has attempted by indirect means to regulate part of child labor; twice it has failed because of constitutional limitations. We already know from their resistance to change that some of the states place economic need above the sacred rights of children. Employers in sections where child labor is profitable seem to think that there is an economic law, as inexorable as a divine law, which demands that children be exploited where their labor is profitable. Thus, we find some enlightened employers and editors deploring that the "economic law" should make it necessary for little children to be robbed of their childhood. It is indeed unworthy of Christians to place this imaginary economic law above the divine laws of justice which they as true Christians should emulate. The question of state's rights, which is totally irrelevant to the rights of children, is also causing considerable bickering among those who place age-worn political tradition above the wel-

A Penitential Prayer

By MAXWELL STRUTHERS BURT

MAY we know pain, O God, may we know pain,
And pave with blood and tears our way
Along the old forgotten path again
To find the sweet strength of a younger day.

Lo, Thou hast given us a land more dear
Than that Thou promised to him of old,
And we have made of it a drear
Parched place of tongues and bartering gold.

Yea, we are strong, full strong and great,
And in our hands we hold the sword of might,
But gone, O Lord, the dream to build our fate
A beacon flame and signal through the night.

Yea, gone are all the hopes that kept us young,
The visions, Thine, of unfulfilled desires,
And in decaying temples, far outling,
Thy priests watch lonely by the dying fires.

Oh God, may we know pain, may we know pain,
And find with tears and blood the path again!

Do we forget?
Forget so utterly?
Nay, it is not so!
Only, for moments does it seem
That we have lost the splendor of our dream.
We know, had we but time to heed, or hush the busy whisperings of greed,
That stirring, pulsing, throbbing, slow,
Implacable would rise the tread of the stern ever-marching army of the dead.
We—We are still the visioned great-souled breed!
Not like the older nations from decay,
Not wearily we sin,
But heedless, reckless, children at play,
Straying, we have a little lost our way,
Nor see as yet the darkness folding in:
Aye—for in the end—sore torn and bruised, we,
Like long-lost children, will return to Thee:
Like coast-born children weary for the sea.

Princeton Verse, 1916; Princeton University Press.

fare of the nation's children. And the destiny of these children is thus made the target of economic and political disputes.

In the light of the situation as it now exists, friends of America's children, who advocate unreservedly the total abolition of this national blight, realize that a child labor amendment giving the federal government power to deal directly with child labor as such, and not by roundabout, technical strategy, is the only effective means of obliterating this evil. As long as there is no uniform standard for the protection of children in all industries, irrespective of economic and geographic boundaries, children of America will be the victims of self-seeking employers and of ignorant and greedy parents. This does not mean that improvement in state legislation should not go on; on the contrary the state should seek to make federal action unnecessary. At any rate, Congress should be given the power to fix a minimum national standard below which no state shall be allowed to go.

The principle that children are essentially the concern of the nation must be incorporated into the constitution to show at home and abroad that the United States does not shirk the protection of its little citizens. The constitution guarantees protection to adult citizens by means of the vote. Since the children do not share this privilege, the least the people of the United States can do is assure them an equivalent guarantee of protection, by giving our federal government the power to act in their behalf.

Surely, a nation which was founded on the principle that each individual has a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, cannot afford to deny this right to its future citizens—for children are the future citizens of the nation. Nor can we conceive that the framers of our constitution, had they foreseen the industrialized United States of 1922, would have left these children a prey to economic exploitation and neglect. It is an insult to their sense of human justice to insinuate that they did not mean to include the protection of the nation's children in the constitution of the United States.

Equal Opportunities for Children

At the National Conference for Social Work, held at Providence June 27-29, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover gave an address in behalf of the prohibition of child labor. He expressed the hope that one more united effort might swing the delinquent states into line with the moral and legal attitude of the majority; failing that he favored an amendment to the Constitution.

"A majority of states have forward-looking laws and effective laws in child protection; some others have enacted legislation that at least goes part way. But there is a minority that are still in the middle ages in their attitude to childhood. Child labor in these backward states is competitively unfair to industry in the states that have responded to the moral and social ideals of our people. But far beyond this, the moral and economic results of debilitated, illiterate and untrained manhood and womanhood that must spring from these cess-pools where child-labor is encouraged and is legitimate infect the entire nation.....

"Waste of child life, whether viewed economically or in terms of common and universal betterment is a blight that in

"God Mend Thine Every Flaw"

IN our great cities, we have little Jerusalems, little Italys, little Hungarys, and little hell holes. We have people of foreign birth who are meeting only the type of American who gives them miserable places in which to live and exacts from them the last pound of flesh.

"There are thousands of these foreigners in the United States who have never come in real contact with the real Americans. They are judging Americans by the type of Americans they are meeting, and this is not fair to them or to the nation. When a higher level of humanity meets a lower level, it must either bring that lower level up to its own standards or it will be dragged down.

"It is a hard thing to talk the ideals of this nation to a group of people who know that WHILE THEIR SONS WERE FIGHTING OVERSEAS, OUR SUPREME COURTS REPEALED THE CHILD LABOR LAW. It is a fine thing to talk about teaching these people English, but it doesn't matter so much the perfection of a man's English as long as the things he says are right.

"We ought to stop immigration for a period in order to catch up. Our present policy of allowing more people to come in than we can absorb is like giving a man a seven-course dinner of highly indigestible food as a cure for dyspepsia.

"We must relieve this terrible congestion of the cities. We must overcome the bad housing and the overcrowding. We must get these people out on to the land. We must make the Gateway of Citizenship more attractive. We must more vigorously prosecute those who profiteer among these people and put in jail those who treat them with such utter lack of humanity. We must give these people the principles we have ourselves.

"The slums of this city are not American and one thing is dead certain, and that is that you cannot grow an American in the slums."

its measure is more deplorable than war.There is no equality of opportunity where children are allowed by law and compelled by parents to labor during the years they should receive instruction; there is no equality of opportunity unless this instruction is made compulsory by the state. There is no equality of opportunity for children whose parents are not restrained by law from exploiting them, and compelled to give them participation in the beneficial privileges that the state provides for them."

Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee in an address before the Conference, said:

"Federal protection must be restored to American children through amendment of the Constitution and the passage by Congress of another child labor law."

Mr. Lovejoy announced this as the policy officially adopted by the national committee, saying that any further attempt to secure federal legislation without a constitutional amendment would be folly now that the United States Supreme Court has successively found two federal child labor laws invalid on constitutional grounds.

Mr. Lovejoy said that the demand for an amendment comes from all over the country, including the south, where states' rights feeling is so strong. He quoted a telegram from Governor Thomas E. Kilby, of Alabama, favoring "an amendment empowering Congress to enact laws for the regulation of child labor."

The amendment suggested by the National Child Labor Committee, and read at the convention by Mr. Lovejoy, is as follows:

"Congress shall have power to regulate or forbid the labor of minors at an age, or under conditions deemed injurious to their health or morals. Such power shall be concurrent and not exclusive, and the exercise thereof by congress shall not prevent any State from adopting other or further regulations not inconsistent therewith."

Mr. Lovejoy said that this draft amendment protects the right of the states to go as far as they like, but enables congress to set a minimum standard of national decency. It is intended, before this amendment is introduced in Congress, to submit it for approval to the Permanent Conference for the Abolition of Child Labor formed in Washington recently by representatives of national civic organizations.

"The National Child Labor Committee," said Mr. Lovejoy, "though it has entered into an active campaign for a federal amendment, will not diminish in any way its present efforts to improve state laws and administration."

The American Federation of Labor has committed itself heartily to the movement for a federal amendment. Samuel Gompers, President of the Federation, said in a recent press statement:

"We propose to recommend the draft of a bill to be presented to Congress which will abolish child labor, which is left unprotected by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court. We hope that our legislation will be acceptable and will not be objectionable to the Supreme Court, for the working boys and girls of our country must be protected."

Anti-Vice Society Menaced

The New York Court of Appeals has affirmed a judgment for $2,500 damages for false arrest, against the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice. A New York bookseller was prosecuted by the society, for selling a notorious French "classic" and later the charge was dismissed. He then filed suit for damages and won his case in the highest court of the state. The New York Times states that it is the announced purpose of publishers and author who have been prosecuted by the society "to smother the society with damage suits."

The court laid down the principle that "whenever an organization like the Society for the Suppression of Vice starts prosecution which fails, the society is liable to be sued for damages for false arrest, and it is for the jury to decide whether the society or its agents acted on reasonable grounds in bringing the prosecution."

The application of this principle will greatly increase the difficulty of suppressing the sale of bad books.

The New World Movement

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

Suggested Stewardship Topics for October, 1922

Prepared by the General Board of Promotion, for use in connection with "Suggested Stewardship Program for Local Churches"

These suggestions are made after careful thought by a group of persons familiar with local church programs. The impossibility of uniform programs is recognized, but the numerous requests for definite, specific helps have led to the preparation of this list of topics for local church organizations. It will be noted that in general the topics suggested for each week are based upon some one of the stewardship principles adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention. Copies of the "Suggested Stewardship Program for Local Churches" and of all material needed in connection with the following topics may be secured from the office of any Baptist State Convention.

First Week, October 1-7

General Topic: "Possessions."
Sunday morning sermon. Topic: "Money Making."
Sunday-school. Topic: "The Purpose of Life." Eph. 2:8-10; 2 Tim. 3:14-17; Titus 2:11-14.
Young People's meeting. Topic: "God, the Owner."
Sunday Evening service. Debate: "Resolved, That the acquisition and use of possessions in behalf of others is a more useful ministry than the rendering of personal service."
Mid-week meeting. Topic: "Acquiring."
Family Group meetings. Topic: "What We Owe and Why We Owe It."
Special Literature. Distribute "Stewardship of Possessions."

Second Week, October 8-14

General Topic: "God's Ownership."
Sunday morning sermon. Topic: "Ye Are Not Your Own."
Sunday-school. Topic: "The Meaning of Stewardship." Acts 20:24; 1 Cor. 9:16-27.
Young People's Meeting. Topic: "Youth the Steward."
Sunday evening service. Stewardship play, "Starting Right."
Mid-week meeting. Topic: "Spending."
Family Group meetings. Topic: "What We Owe and How to Pay It."
Special Literature. Distribute "Stewardship of the Unspeakable Gift."

Third Week, October 15-21

General Topic: "Man's Stewardship."
Sunday morning sermon. Topic: "My Lord's Estate."
Sunday-school. Topic: "The Basis of Stewardship." Luke 19:1-10; Romans 15:2; 1 Cor. 10:31-33.

The Northern California Convention Board has officially voted to accept the trenchment program of the General Board of Promotion, and also accepts the allotment for the $10,000,000 to be raised this year. Secretary Brinstad writes: "We have had to discontinue several of our field workers, reduce several appropriations and reduce our prospects of new work to almost nothing. However we are hoping and praying that good will come of our sacrifice and that this will be the last year it will be necessary."

The Nebraska Convention Board has voted "to endorse the $10,000,000 objective of the Northern Baptist Convention this year and to cooperate in every possible way to make the Movement an even greater success."

If you want a missionary leaflet which will grip school boys, send to the Promotion Board for V. G. Krause's "Balsore Industrial School" (8 pp., 5 cents). On the cover is a fine picture of a boat in process of building, and other illustrations follow to illuminate the fascinating story of industrial work among the Christian boys of the Bengal-Orissa mission.

Hitting on Three

NON-EFFECTIVE cylinders are liabilities, not assets, when it comes to indulging in the favorite outdoor sport of Americans. A four-cylinder engine is expected to hit on all four. If one cylinder misses chronically the loss of power is constant.

Or, since there are still a few who have not bowed the knee to Ford and therefore do not know about sparks and carburetors, let us note the tinkling piano with a few mute keys, and consider how sadly the melody is mutilated when those sullen strings fail to vibrate in tune with the rest.

Who can say in what tragic measure the church of Christ is slowed down by the coldness of prayerless hearts which will not kindle from the spark of God's grace? Who can ignore the loss of rhythm and power to the Body of our Lord when some of its members will not respond to the call to united intercession?

One of the Objectives for the New World Movement Campaign this year is: "Every member of every church praying." This objective assumes that a life of prayer is normal for every believer, and essential to the attainment of personal holiness and to world evangelism alike. The searching message of Mr. Gilkey printed in the Baptist for August 12 points the way to victory for the individual and for the church. Let each of us, members of Christ's church and so sharers in his great task of world evangelization, ask ourselves the questions: Am I a mute string, or vocal, in the harmony of the united intercession of his people? Am I a dead weight, carried along on the prayers of my fellow-Christians, cold and impotent; or am I obeying the divine impulse to seek God's face and plead his promises and claim his blessing? "Every member of every church praying." Lord, teach us to pray!

The Repeater

You may have missed some of the most vital things in the last issue: therefore we set them out here before you,—some of them—detached and ready for your use in sermon or article, in the prayer meeting or the Sunday-school class, or the family prayer service. Look up the whole story to get the setting of the item.

A MAN'S WORLD (page 894): The native women in the South Sea Islands become wives in exchange for pigs, shell bracelets or beads paid to their parents. Seven tiny pigs is considered good payment for a healthy young wife. If she proves unsatisfactory her husband beats her or even kills her. Very often the infuriated husband makes a meal of her dead body and nobody raises any objection.

NICARAUGUA'S BLIGHT (page 890): Recently preaching in a town for the first time, the missionary found upon his arrival that the priest had made all preparations for his reception. The town band was in attendance but not to welcome him. The priest marched with it around the town halting at different points and led the people in shouting "Death to the Protestants! Long live our Lady of Peace!" Then a woman of the town was paid five pesos to take her family and do all that she could to disturb the meeting. In spite of this, however, a useful and well-attended meeting was held. After this the missionary and his party were stoned from the town.

A MEXICAN WOMAN'S JOY (page 889): "I very glad to speak. Long time ago I lonesome all 'e time. I no brother, I no sister. Now no more lonesome! I sick, I sad all 'e time. Now, no more sick, I happy all 'e time!" This was all, but tears dimmed the eyes of several of her hearers at the triumphant tones of the quavering old voice in emphasizing her naive antitheses.

She was baptized that day, the bowed little figure in the white robe hardly visible above the baptismal rim.

WAR MADNESS (page 904): We find the shadow of Mars lying as black as ever athwart the earth and still dominating the minds of men. The thought of war is uppermost and preparations for war are paramount and universal. The experts of the league of nations have recently estimated (May, 1922) that there are 1,000,000 more men under arms in Europe today than just previous to the beginning of the war in 1914, and this in spite of the fact that the armies of Germany, Austria and Hungary have been greatly reduced.

WAITING FOR HIM IN INDIA (page 902): One morning in one of the inaccessible villages the people said they had never heard of Christ before. As our two students spoke they listened thoughtfully to the message, and afterwards several bought gospels. One old man who was almost blind said to me, "I have no money and I can't read, but I want you to read me something out of God's Book. I want my ears to hear it." Of course we read a portion to him, taught him to say the name of Christ and told him how to pray in his name.

WORLD PROBLEMS (cover page): The problem before the world is how we can live side by side and at peace, not with those with whom we have a natural affinity, but with those whom naturally we dislike and by whom we are repelled; there are class antagonisms, race antagonisms, color antagonisms, and these constitute the problems of the modern world.

PROTESTANTISM A MIGHTY SPIRITUAL FORCE

A few years ago a man came into Anti-Saloon League Headquarters, Chicago, and put out his hand, saying, "I am B. Fay Mills." I replied, "Mr. Mills, I am glad to meet you. Years ago when I was a student pastor at Sandwich, I dropped off the train one Friday night at Aurora and heard you preach at a revival, and it made such an impression on me I can quote the text and an illustration used," which I proceeded to do. He said, "You certainly heard me for I remember that sermon." As I looked into his face I recalled what Moody once said, "B. Fay Mills is one of the greatest evangelists in America and my mantle will fall on him when I pass on."

Mr. Mills said, "McGinnis, I have wandered far afield and while I was off on those barren wastes, you Christian men have been putting across the greatest moral reform of the ages and I have had no part in it. Now I want to get into the fight and I'll go anywhere and speak against the saloon if you will date me." Then he added, "I became dissatisfied with Christianity and thought it had many imperfections but I have reached the conclusion that Protestant Christianity with all its blemishes is the mightiest spiritual force in the universe today and I am coming back to the fold."

A few days later he appeared before the Presbyterian Ministers Association and joined the Presbytery. He spoke at the National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League that summer at Atlantic City and other big gatherings in an effort to do his bit in the great reform which had missed his presence in other years. He was a man after God's own heart for like David of old, when he saw his error, he confessed it in manly manner.

GROUND FOR REAL JOY

The Northern Baptist Convention was a time of great meaning to our denomination. The convention put itself on record by a large majority vote on the motion, "The Northern Baptist Convention affirms the New Testament as all sufficient ground of our faith and practice, and we need no other statement." The fundamentalists presented the New Hampshire Confession for approval by the convention. The substitute motion exalting the New Testament of course won hundreds of fundamentalists who felt they would not vote against the long standing Baptist principle of "The Bible and the Bible alone our rule of faith and practice." The press, unfortunately, magnified it as a modernistic victory. The real test is the report on "Gifts with Attached Doctrinal Tests." The foreign and home societies and the Women's Home Missionary Society had approved of a statement of what they consider themselves called to proclaim. The report was referred back because the four other societies had not officially voted on the confession. The action of the first three named societies is ground for real joy. Should the remaining four follow the others' example, the thing for which we have long fought will have been won. The way for real unity is opening, despite the foolish reports in the papers and the unwillingness of extreme radicals to sanction the adoption of such a confession by all the societies. Thank God, the agitation and prayers of the past years are bearing fruit!

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFESSION OF FAITH

So many inquiries have come to me regarding my article published under this heading several weeks ago that I am constrained to ask the editors for a word more. Even my beloved friend, Rev. D. S. Jenks, present secretary of the New Hampshire Convention takes exception to my conclusions, but confirms the accuracy of my quotations.

Admitting my quotations from the records to be correct I do not see how any one can possibly escape my conclusions. I fear that the usually clear-thinking mind of Secretary Jenks has tripped over the word "accepted." For in the same breath where he contends that this Confession of Faith was never adopted by either the Convention or its Board of Trustees, he admits that the report of the committee "was accepted." It is one thing to "receive" a report and quite another thing to "adopt" it. But there is no difference at all between "accepting" a report and adopting it. See Roberts Rules of Order, p. 88, sec. 31, where it is expressly said that for the adoption of a report which "contains a statement of opinion or facts, the best form of the motion is to accept the report." Now that is exactly the form in which the Board of Trustees to whom the assembly of delegates to the Convention had referred this matter, put itself on record at Deerfield, Oct. 11, 1832, in the following words, to wit: "Resolved, That the report of the committee appointed to prepare the Declaration of Faith be accepted and the committee discharged." If that was not adopting the Declaration of Faith, then Robert's Rules of Order ought not any longer be the standard of authority in the Northern Baptist Convention.

Moreover, we ought not to forget that a corporation chartered by the Legislature of New Hampshire as the New Hampshire Baptist Convention, is not the annual meeting of delegates temporarily appointed for an annual convocation. The Board of Trustees is the Convention. The annual convocation however originally appointed this committee to draw up these articles. That was in 1830. At the next annual meeting, in 1831, this committee had only partially done its work and asked to be excused. At their own request they were discharged and the Rev. Ira Person was appointed to finish the task and report to the Board. This he did and his report to the Board was accepted by the Board, June 26, 1832. The Board then, having adopted the articles, appointed an additional committee called "a select committee" to put on any finishing touches that might seem to them wise and report the improved edition to the assembly in annual meeting. This they did two days later and "with some slight alterations" "reported in favor of adopting them."

It does not appear that the two days were sufficient time for this "select committee" to make sure that all the minor changes needed had been discovered. There were some questions as to how these articles should be distributed among the churches and in what style they ought to be printed. One of the biggest questions was whether they should call it "Articles" of faith or "Declaration" of faith. It was then moved to refer the whole thing "to the disposal of the Board."

Of course a motion to refer is not a motion to adopt. But under these circumstances it could have no other meaning since the assembly knew that the Board had already adopted it and that it was therefore the report of the Board itself that they were considering. So for the second time they referred it back to the Board with full power to "dispose" of it. But as if to make it still more regular and emphatic, after all the amendments were in, and the thing was ready to be printed, the Board once more, about four months later, Oct. 11, 1832 "accepted" it again, (which is the same thing as adoption) and discharged the committee. Of course the Board never again reported it back to the assembly in annual meeting. It would have been "out of order" to have done so. The Confession of Faith was therefore printed and distributed long before the next annual meeting of the convention.

The facts in the case as here given are not disputed. The quotations are correct. How then can any one draw any other conclusion than that the matter was most emphatically and impressively adopted by the New Hampshire Baptist Convention whether you consider that convention as a corporation or as an annual assembly of Baptists?

Who Only Stand and Wait

Precious Peterkin,

July 26.

Life is made up of people, people are made up of meals, meals are made up of little dishes on trays, and trays are made up of memories. And I have no memory! I still make sad mistakes; the Cod-and-Beans liver is going to have a dreadful attack some evening owing to my bringing the wrong little dishes on trays. But that is nothing compared to what is going to happen to the New Man who is being systematically vamped by the Beautiful Deb. It is pathetic to see so nice a man beguiled so obviously. Do you remember when I used to chuckle over the Anthony Trollope novels where every son and every daughter was earnestly urged to "marry money"? The B. D. has been brought up on that motto, too. For it seems the New Man is wealthy; moreover he is in the diplomatic service, and is just home from some interesting service abroad. I eavesdrop all I can, which is the reason the little-dishes-on-trays reach all the wrong parties.

But I am determined to mend my ways, for the money I get is doing such magic to you and surely it is only honorable I should give value received. And really, it is a delicious experience your mummy is having; Mabelle is an experience unforgettable. The other night she said to me: "Kiddo, you're a wise gal to adopt that haughty line! At first I couldn't get your number, but it's one grand little pose, all right, all right! The Cods-and-Beans are telling it all over the hotel what a beaut you are! Real lady, and all that stuff. Even the head waiter has fallen for you."

Peterkin, what could be more flattering? I am forever and ever your handsome Lady Mother.

July 30.

Dear Peter, The Great:

The strangest most upsetting thing has happened. You will remember the Li family in China? Well, their youngest son is here. Here at this hotel! Any minute he may see me; I have changed the way I do my hair and try to look as totally different as I can, but I cannot run out of the dining-room when he comes in, and I dread what will happen when he sees me. Who could have guessed that out of the entire world of summer hotels he should have chosen this one?

Your agitated
Waitress friend.

July 31.

Peter Piper Picked a Peck of Troubles! And sent them to his mother to pickle. Which job she is busily doing in the kitchen of this hotel, darling. For "It" has happened. And happened with a vengeance!

A Prayer Echo from the Lone Star Mission

O H, Father,
Forgive the churches.
To rob God's treasury
Is not to distress missionaries primarily,
But it is robbery of souls—
A shutting away the gift of eternal life.
The missionary must part with what he loves
Far more than any earthly boon,
Yet Christians at home refuse the help
They could so easily give.
The very idea of retrenchment is Hostile to everything
That deserves the name of missionary.
Satan says, "Stop giving."
Jesus says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."
—Dr. Lyman Jewett.

For I was standing by my tray as dear old Horatius once stood by his bridge, and my mind was miles away (in New York City, in a certain hospital room, belovedest!) when a voice from the blue said, with unbelievable joy: "Gracious lady! Is it indeed you?" And there stood Li Wing bowing with the most ceremonious politeness. Then with his old-time humor he put out his hand: "But I make a remembrance, madame! It is to shake the hand in American style that you prefer, is it not?" So, to the entertainment of half the dining-room, we shook hands, while he smiled as if he still could not credit his good fortune.

"Mrs. Truex, would you think it impolite if I requested the management to place me beside you at your table? My time is so short here; and between meals

I am so much with my secretary getting off dispatches, but while we eat—what talking we can do! Does it meet with your approval?"

Peterkin, was there ever such a situation? I blushed like seven Alpine glows turned on at once, and explained as best I could that I was not present in the hotel as a guest. But he simply could not grasp it . . . and meanwhile the Cods-and-Beans had come in, with their Bostonian eyebrows raised to the Nth power, and their Bostonian tummies craving nourishment. I simply had to break away, but Mr. Li stood—turned to stone. Unbudge-able! Unbelieving! I certainly heard the Cod's and Bean's orders, but they went in one ear and out the other, so dreadful was my confusion and embarrassment.

Meanwhile Li Wing "came to." So that by the time I had reached the kitchen he had hurried from the dining-room.

I found out afterwards exactly what he had done: he had sought the manager and demanded an explanation of the hideous indignity placed on the shoulders of the heroine of Green Jade Hill! Needless to say the manager had never heard of Green Jade Hill, but he had heard of the fabulously rich Li family and it must have been a curious conversation—with the usually quiet courteous Li Wing waxing ever more excited, and the usually calm superior manager melting into human interest.

At seven-fifty-seven o'clock that evening I was summoned to his office; and invited to be seated. (A waitress!)

"Mrs. Truex," he said, "Mr. Li has told me your rather remarkable story. He is so excited he almost demands an apology from me for daring to engage you in such a menial capacity, but of course I do not feel—"

"Of course not!" I interrupted, "he doubtless exaggerates the whole affair. I came here a stranger. I have a right to my secrets. I needed the money, and your offer was really heaven-sent. That is all there is to it! Mr. Li is so proud, his family is so important and high up . . ."

"Exactly!" said the manager, kindly, "but I am inclined to think there must be other openings for a woman as remarkable as you, Mrs. Truex. This is sure to leak out among our guests, and I imagine it will be an embarrassment all around for you to continue as a waitress."

Oh Peter, I was never more alarmed in my life. Not even the night when the Chinese burned the house. "But I do not wish to be dismissed!" I cried, "I need the money. I need it so badly that if I lose even one day's wages, what will happen to my son I cannot think."

"We will find another position for you to fill, Mrs. Truex," he said gently; "I think you will find that that little boy will not suffer any on account of this dis-

Peterkin, I felt you slipping away! "He is my own child!" I gasped, and if you ever knew a more exciting thing happen to your mother then I'd like to know what it was. That old attack by soldiers was nothing!

The only definite thing that has happened tonight is that the management has given me a room by myself. So that I have no fear of Mabelle's curiosity as I sit behind locked doors writing to the dearest boy on earth. I am so happy, darling, that your pain is eased and that the prospect is so assuring. This little fiasco is very interesting and I will write you about tomorrow's outcome. Onliest Mother, (and I am that!)

The Young Reserves

Seven Little Yellow Jackets

I think their Chinese mother must have bought yards and yards of yellow cotton cloth, for every single one of her seven children had little yellow jackets—indeed, both the jackets and the children looked so exactly alike that it is a wonder she could tell any of them apart. But she could, in that dear, loving way that mothers have, no matter whether they are yellow or black or white.

Mrs. Missionary thought the children inside those yellow jackets had the most peculiar names of any set of children she had ever known. There was, first of all, the oldest son, named Glorious Beauty, and another son named Heavenly Virtue, then a little girl named Number Three, and another girl named Not Wanted, then a son called Precious Sweetness, and two more daughters, called Ugly Toad and Trifling Nuisance. You can see for yourself that the sons had all the attractive names, while the daughters seemed to have been given any old name that popped into their father's mind. Which is what happens in China, where daughters are of no account at all. At least, in heathen families.

Mrs. Missionary couldn't help but notice the Yellow Jackets because when she and Mr. Missionary came to town they moved next door, little dreaming what a commotion it caused their neighbors.

Grandmother Wong wagged her poor old head forlornly. "Alas! Alas!" she cried, "how very unlucky that Christians should have moved next door to us. I hope no grandchild of mine will be so bold as to speak to that dreadful white woman and to her equally dreadful husband, for I warn you that she will surely pinch off your noses, or tweak your ears, or bewitch you so that you will always be stupid!"

The Seven Little Yellow Jackets stared out of seven pairs of startled slant eyes. Oh me, oh my, what a terrible, terrible neighbor to have!

And Grandfather Wong was exactly as serious about it. "If ever I see one of you speaking to that woman I will surely spank you with ten thousand spankings," he roared, whereupon the Seven Little Yellow Jackets shivered excitedly.

Moreover, one day Grandfather Wong bought a little toy gun and placed it on his roof facing the one side-window in the house next door where the missionaries lived. He whispered to his frightened family that if these new neighbors should send any evil spirits out of their windows over toward his house, then those evil spirits would surely stop instantly when they saw such a fierce gun pointing at them, so instead of flying straight into the Wong house they would scoot off somewhere else as quickly as possible. All of which seems perfect nonsense to you and me, but the dear Wong family were heathen people, and had never heard how God takes care of his children without silly toy guns on the roof.

Mr. Missionary saw the gun and sighed. But Mrs. Missionary saw the gun and cried. You know yourself how sad it would seem to be loving people who were so very afraid of you. Every day she tried to be friends with the Seven Little Yellow Jackets, but it was comical to see how they clung to each other's hands and simply rushed back toward their own gateposts, the four little girls bringing up the rear, because their feet were bound into such tiny, tiny shoes that they had to hobble clumsily along.

But there were other children who were not so timid, and they came to the little mission school which Mrs. Missionary opened, and thought it was the nicest thing in the world that this dear lady had come to town. And one day one of these friendly children made a call at Mrs. Missionary's house. Just as she was leaving, Grandfather Wong happened to be walking past, and could hardly believe his astonished eyes. For Mrs. Missionary was giving this child a book, and the child was bowing again and again. But the thing that amazed old Grandfather Wong was the fact that this child was wearing a yellow jacket.

"Aha!" said he to himself, and stalked inside his gate. He sat down in his big carved chair and looked unusually solemn as he called for his seven grandchildren. One by one they came into the room. Very sternly he ordered them to stand in a row.

"Not Wanted," he thundered, "bring me the black book I saw the white woman next door giving you."

Not Wanted couldn't have looked more surprised if she had tried. She shook her head, saying: "But I've never once spoken to that lady. Never once. I—I—wouldn't—dare!"

"Then it was you I saw, Number Three," roared Grandfather Wong. "Get that book and bring it here while I give you ten thousand spankings."

"No, no, honorable grandparent, I never, never went near that lady."

"Well, then, it must have been you, Ugly Toad!" he shouted.

"Not I!" trembled that poor wee maiden. I've been in the house all day because my feet hurt me so."

"Then of course it was you, Trifling Nuisance," he cried angrily. "Bring me that book so I can burn it, then I will punish you, you disobedient little wretch."

But Trifling Nuisance said no, no, she had never once spoken to the white lady; so Grandfather Wong was at his wits' end, for surely he had seen a little girl in a yellow jacket receiving a book. Or could it be that one of his three grandsons had taken off his cap and pretended to be a girl, for it is a fact that boys and girls were dressed nearly alike, and all wore pig-tails, too.

But Glorious Beauty insisted that he had never seen such a book nor been near the white neighbor; Heavenly Virtue said the same thing, and also Precious Sweetness. Poor Grandfather Wong had about made up his mind to spank every single one of them when a strange little girl came in the door wearing a yellow jacket, and carrying a black book under one arm. Evidently she was hiding something behind her back.

The seven small Wongs still stood in a row staring at her with all their eyes.

"Most Venerable Old Gentleman," she said, bowing very politely, "I have done a miserably rude thing. I—I have been up on your roof to remove the toy gun. See, here it is!" And she actually waved it before him.

Grandfather Wong was perfectly speechless with surprise. Of all things! So the new Yellow Jacket said: "The missionary lady next door suggested this, sir, and she promises faithfully not to do a single thing to hurt your household all this week while the gun is off your roof. Indeed, she isn't the kind that could hurt any one; but she wants to send you this stronger protection, see, a little black book straight from God who loves us. She begs you to read the gentle, friendly words which God has written here for you, and at the end of a week she thinks you may be more willing to trust the great God than to trust a cheap toy gun."

Grandfather Wong could hardly get breath to say more than a startled "Tut! Tut! You talk like a tea-pot." Whereupon the new Yellow Jacket smiled at everybody, laid the Bible on the old gentleman's knees, and bowed herself out of the room.

"Well! Well! Well!" he cried, and opened the Bible timidly. The very first words he happened to read were: "God is love." He never knew there was a God of love, so he read and read and read. All day long the Seven Little Yellow Jackets saw him reading that book, staring through his big horn glasses, and nodding his head quite often.

"He likes it," whispered Precious Sweetness.

And he did. He liked the Bible so much that he never put the toy gun back on his roof. He invited Mr. Missionary to visit him instead, and to-day Grandfather Wong is a deacon in our Chinese church in that town—all because a certain little Yellow Jacket dared to give him a Bible!

Young People's Work

Topic for September 10

THE BAPTIST PRINCIPLE: THE SUPREME LORDSHIP OF JESUS.

John 13:13; Rom. 10:8-15; Phil. 2:5-11.

Baptists have always held this doctrine of Christ's supreme headship as one of their most precious spiritual possessions. It lies at the basis of their polity, and furnishes the keynote to their history. Side by side with its correlative, the individual relationship of the soul to God, it constitutes the prime factor in their religious life. This, more than any other tenet, gives them their distinctive character. As the harvest is determined by the seed, as the oak is enfolded in the acorn, so what Baptists are depends on this that they believe. It is that which affixes to them their label in the ecclesiastical catalogue. It is not the form of an ordinance; it is not their view of the relation one ordinance bears to another which makes them what they are, but this recognition on their part of Christ as king. Grant this to them, and all else follows as the stream from the fountain in which it has its birth. So completely is it an integral part of their constitutional being that they alone, of all the Christian sects, may be said to hold it in its completeness. All claim to hold it, but by the direct and indirect authority they center elsewhere they so diminish and detract from it that their claim is not a valid one. The Romanist has his pope and his conclave; the Anglican his bishop and his convention; the Presbyterian his presbytery and his general assembly; and the Methodist his conference, and these in so many respects have so traversed the commands of Christ that they have rendered null his direct headship. This is said in no narrow spirit, but as an indisputable historic fact. The mutilation of the baptismal sign, the fabricating of oppressive and complicated machinery, the transformation of what should be a spiritual body into a mixed multitude, and the blending of the two distinct spheres of church and state, all have resulted directly or indirectly from the disregard of the instructions Jesus gave. So tenacious are Baptists in their view that this is so that they would surrender the doctrine of the lordship of Christ only with the surrender of their denominational life.

In two ways this lordship makes its operative. One is by means of the written word. In the Gospels and Epistles Jesus has embodied his perpetual will. No sophistry as to the lack of an adequate interpreter has driven Baptists from this position. As the father speaks to the son in the will he leaves behind, so Jesus speaks to his people by his word. When he says "Do this," the command is taken at face value. His word is still, as it has been, regarded as making wise unto salvation, and as laying down for those who will be teachable and obedient a sufficient guide in faith and practice.

But there is another way in which Baptists have always believed that this lordship, this leadership of Christ, will and does make itself known. It is by direct communication of his will to the soul. In the secret recesses of the spirit's life the divine speaks to it. "The secret (or friendship) of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant." (Ps. 25:14) Literally, he will "uncover the ear" and will whisper into it his thoughts. Call it what one may, the inner light, the mystical sense, the influence of the Spirit, it is a fact the true spiritual adherent of Jesus Christ will not surrender. Leading as it sometimes has to absurdities and excess, he will still cling to it. The soul's individual relationship demands it, human experience has again and again confirmed it, and he can do no other than hold to it.—Jones "Restatements of Baptist Principles."

For Life Service

The twentieth century has been called irreligious. Certainly it is predominantly materialist. Never were men more occupied with the exploitation of the earth's natural resources, the attainment of wealth and position, and making the most of "this worldliness." To say, on the other hand, that they never were less occupied with "other worldliness" would be an overstatement, and yet there is a specious justification for the concern which is frequently expressed whether the hustle of modern life is not submerging formal religion. There is no need for doubt. The religious spirit is a force which no amount of materialism will ever be able to subdue. One feels it everywhere even in modern life; it asserts itself at the very moment when the materialist is most certain it is dead.

We in St. Paul have had within the last few days a splendid example of this spirit in the Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union. In its closing session 448 of these young men and women pledged themselves to life service for their church. They will become ministers, enter the missionary service, or otherwise spend their lives in religious activity. The world needs them. It needs their spirit and the evangelism they will carry into the many contacts of life.

At the same time, it is folly to permit this enthusiasm to mask the magnitude of their task. They must not underestimate their problem. Rev. Carl D. Case of Oak Park, who addressed these young people, came very close to doing so. "All over the country," he said, "has come a new conception of business." It is easy thus to look on events and read there what one desires to find, but wisdom counsels a more analytical method. These young people must recognize that their battle is not, as Dr. Case seems to believe, already half won. He was, in fact, far nearer the truth when he said that "The world's greatest need is religion. Other professions are running over with recruits, but for religious work the ranks are never full." The truth of this statement is double-edged. Religion is today undermined in proportion to the duty it must perform. In a sense, furthermore, it will always be undermined as long as there are men on earth, for no matter how many dedicate their lives to it, the work to be done is infinite and cannot possibly ever be concluded until the last day.—From the St. Paul Dispatch.

The Meaning of My Membership

By THOMAS J. VILLERS

My church is not a club, organized for the welfare of the members only. It is a body of baptized believers, banded together for the extension of Christ's kingdom. Its spirit is unselfish, and its purpose spiritual. My church being founded by the Son of God and purchased with his own blood, I regard the humblest place in it as the highest honor and privilege. My membership, I firmly hold, involves the following points:

1. It means praying. Jesus prayed habitually. "God soon fades out of the life of the man who ceases to pray." The early church was a powerful church because it was a prayerful church. "Humanity plus prayer equals mighty achievements." I will pray daily.

2. It means paying. God gave his only begotten Son. Christ gave his life. My church needs my gifts. I need to give. It is one of the Christian graces in which I should grow (2 Cor. 8:7). It being more blessed to give than to receive, I want to know the greater blessedness (Acts 20:35). My church covenant binds me to help spread the gospel. Therefore my giving shall be cheerful, regular and proportionate to my ability (2 Cor. 9:7; 1 Cor. 16:2). I will pay.

3. It means plodding. William Carey, my Baptist forefather and the father of modern missions, said: "I can plod; to this I owe everything." He plodded his way to immortality. I do not ask an easy or conspicuous place. I am willing to toll wherever my Lord may need me. I may not have unusual talent, but I do possess the kind of genius that plods, and that counts. I will plod in my study of the scriptures, learning a little each day. I will plod to the house of God, and in the house of God. I will labor with unrelenting industry and with the enthusiasm of patience. I will plod.

4. It means persevering. I will hold fast and keep sweet. I will not take offense, climb the miff-tree, and quit. I will not imitate Bunyan's character, Mr. Shortwind, who began earnestly, but quickly ran out of breath. I have enlisted for life. I recall my Lord's solemn words: "He that endureth to the end shall be saved" (Matt. 10:22). Through his grace I will persevere.

Convention Impressions

This convention has been a wonderful affair. The Sunday afternoon address was especially good.—Ruth Dixon.

A vision of Christian service.—H. A. Darling.

This convention has meant a new consecration of my life to Christ.—Bessie Preston.

To have seen, and to have been with such an enthusiastic crowd of young people will make it easier to lead a Christian life.—Rose Maceon.

This is the first international convention I ever attended. It has been a great inspiration to me and one that will never be forgotten.—Alpha L. Powell.

The 1922 convention at St. Paul gave me a new light on B. Y. P. U. work and taught me the blessedness of Christian fellowship. I am going to carry home with me to my local the motto "Forward with Christ."—Margaret Patterson.

Only under the guidance of God could such a convention have been possible.—Ruby Powell.

I have found a lasting enthusiasm for Him that has steadied my faith.—Signe Ouse.

It has been an inspiration to move forward with Christ.—Georgia T. First.

This convention has meant new pep and interest in me to help "put the kingdom over" in my B. Y. P. U.—Violet Pascoe.

The convention has given me a new realization of the responsibility and opportunity of the individual in the service of the Master.—Erna Tiele.

The convention has given me a greater view of young people's work within our churches.—H. G. Jorgenson.

This great convention, the third largest on record, has given me a greater faith in the ability of young people to make an impression on this old wicked world.—F. J. McCaw.

The St. Paul convention has drawn me closer to God and to my fellowmen. It has given me new visions and a greater determination to live so close to my Master that all those I come in contact with will know I am his and thus inspire them to follow him, too. It has filled me to overflowing with wonderful happiness and peace.—Helen D. Rood.

This convention has given me a larger vision and greater determination to serve my God.—Ethel Runyan.

The convention has put pep into my religion.—M. Woodsun.

Deeply impressed with number of states represented and the spiritual attitude of all.—Mary D. Stewart.

This is the first B. Y. P. U. of A. convention that I have ever attended. I have received many great inspirations and hope to go to Boston next year.—Marie Meeker.

The convention has enlarged my ideals and pushed my goal much farther into the future. I am going to work harder to reach it and I will do it.—Alta Worden.

This convention has pointed the way for my life work: a foreign medical missionary.—Ida Hyden.

This convention has been an inspiration that shall always be remembered, and will make me a better worker than ever for the B. Y. P. U.—Hilda Johnson.

This convention has certainly done me a lot of good. Words cannot tell how much I appreciate it.—Esther Bickford.

The meetings were wonderful and gave me inspiration.—Florence Wilson.

This convention has given me a great deal of inspiration and I know I am spiritually blessed by it.—Olive Nelson.

The convention has meant a great deal to me and I am going back to Illinois determined to live a bigger life for Christ, with "forward with Christ" as my motto.—Ethel Boberg.

I wish to thank God for the privilege of attending the greatest convention that ever gathered.—Dorothy Murbach.

I can never voice my deep appreciation to God for the privilege of attending this my second convention. The real meaning of prayer and the realization of the service I owe my Saviour has been brought closer to me than ever before and my earnest desire is to try to bring the message of this convention—Forward with Christ—to the B. Y. P. U. at home.—Mary C. Robb.

Rev. Clausen's address on "Religion at 21."—B. E. Ruppel.

To one, a lifetime Baptist whose years of expectation are comparatively few, the convention is a hopeful prophecy.—T. E. Hughes, Minneapolis.

I think it the most effective convention ever held by the B. Y. P. U.—George B. Martin.

It is a great thing to be connected with such a great organization.—Emma Carlson.

This convention has meant more for me than any meeting I ever attended before. I made me see that all I am or ever can be I owe to God.—Dorothy Burtch.

Religious Education

Katherine House Vacation School

By STOCKWELL SIMMS

We have had a very successful and profitable daily vacation Bible school at Katherine House of Christian Fellowship, Indiana Harbor, Ind., showing a decided gain in numbers as well as in interest and response. A comparison with last year shows: Enrolment 1921—204; 1922—253. Average attendance 1921—142; 1922—177. Highest attendance 1921—162; 1922—200. Races 1921—17; 1922—17.

We graded our school completely according to the new international Sunday-school grading system and used the textbooks published by the American Baptist Publication Society for church vacation schools and found them very well received. This lesson period feature, which is new here, we found to be fully as attractive to the children as the handwork period.

A union picnic which was held in Gary at which five of the neighborhood houses in the Calumet district were represented was a high spot in the school term. Katherine House carried honors by winning the tug-of-war. Two large trucks were donated by interested citizens and we took down 117 children, the largest number present from any one house. Affairs like this give the children a pride in, and loyalty toward the house which makes it so much easier for us to form Christian character.

Our closing this year was marked by the large number of parents present. Increasing interest in our work is being shown by the parents. At least 100 of the 250 present at our closing were adults. A dramatization of the story of Isaac and Rebekah was the feature of our program, which was of the usual type.

A pleasing result of our various activities is the growth of our Sunday school, which ran an average attendance of about 150 all winter and is still hovering around 100. We think we are justly proud of our Sunday school which is completely graded and we expect to graduate young men and women in the near future with as fine Christian ideals as any in the land.

"Foreign Missions at Home"

That is what Rev. John Newton Garst, minister of the Twenty-third Avenue Baptist Church of Oakland, Cal., and his workers call their church vacation school which has just ended. Their reason is found in and justified by, the nature of their school, which was one of, if indeed not the largest, in the San Francisco Bay region. There were seventeen nationalities as follows, and in the order from the largest number of each down to the smallest: American, Portuguese, Negro, German, Italian, English, Irish, Spanish, Swedish, Austrian, Scotch, Danish, Swiss, Japanese, French, Syrian, Bulgarian.

There were fourteen denominations as follows: Catholic, Baptist, Methodist, Brethren, Episcopalian, Christian Science, Presbyterian, Seventh Day Adventist, Nazarene, Mormon, Campbellite, Congregational, Russellite, Jewish.

32 per cent had no church affiliation.

27 per cent of the whole enrolment were Catholics.

25 per cent of the whole enrolment were Baptist.

24 per cent of the children enrolled attended no Sunday school.

The Sunday-School Cabinet has already had two special meetings to put into operation the unique plan of conservation which was a year ago worked out by Dr. J. N. Garst, and used so successfully by the church Sunday school.

It is realized that N. F. Turner, principal, and other faithful workers did even better work than they did in the school last year.

The Hand-Work Exhibit

Many who attended the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis became interested in the very fine exhibit of Sunday-school hand-work. It represented a contest in which the children of eight states participated.

West Virginia again carried off the beautiful silver loving cup, offered by the children's work department of the American Baptist Publication Society for the most original and best executed display. The cup must be won a third time before it becomes a permanent possession. Miss Erna Wells is children's work director of West Virginia.

Wisconsin obtained second place. Mrs. O. B. Winne is director of children's work in that state.

The judges considered it an unusually creditable exhibit and found it difficult to determine honors.

Mrs. Antoinette Abernethy Lamoreaux, of Illinois, was chairman of the committee on awards. Miss Matilda Utecht, of Maine, and Rev. W. G. Towart, of Vermont, were the other members.

The electric map and large plasticine model of the temple attracted much attention.

The twenty best pieces were taken to Philadelphia and will be shown in institutes and conventions from coast to coast.

The harbors of Haifa and Jaffa (the Joppa of Jonah and of Simon the Tanner) are to be extensively improved by the Palestine Government.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 10

TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD

Lesson: Nehemiah 8:1-18. Golden Text: Psalm 119:33.

Setting

Nehemiah had been first of all concerned with the rebuilding of the walls of the city. Now that the walls had been completely joined together attention was turned to the spiritual needs of the people. The work of construction had been completed on the twenty-sixth day of the sixth month and the law was read on the first day of the seventh month—the month of the Feast of Trumpets, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles. The multitude assembled in a kind of public square near one of the gates of the city.

Lesson

The assembled multitudes called upon Ezra to bring the Law which Jehovah had commanded Moses. Nehemiah the governor, Ezra the scribe and the Levites read the law and explained its meaning so that even the children could understand. Portions of the Pentateuch, especially the legislative sections, were delivered to the people. It was a great Bible school. The congregation listened intently from early morning until mid-day. God's word was the foundation upon which they were to build God's work. As Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people they sprang to their feet, joined in prayer and worship which prepared them to hear God's law. It was a day of rejoicing. The leaders exhorted their hearers to eat and drink and remember their less fortunate brethren. And the people obeyed with great joy for they understood the words that were declared unto them.

Leading Thoughts

Permanent success depends more upon the readiness to hear and obey God's word than upon material equipment. Nehemiah recognized the necessity of restoring the walls of the city but with this task finished he brought the people face to face with Jehovah, their great protector. 2. God's word has an appeal to all types and ages. Where it is understood and obeyed there is rejoicing.

Prof. David Smith of Londonderry, in an article published in the British Weekly last January, says: "The longer I live, busying myself daily with the immortal and inexhaustible Scriptures of the New Testament and the relative literature, the more I am assured (1) that the Fourth Gospel was indeed written by John the son of Zebedee, the disciple whom Jesus loved, and (2) that it is the most precious and most truly historical record we possess of our Blessed Saviour's earthly ministry."

Our Own Folks

Oregon Baptist Young People's Assembly

By GEORGE H. YOUNG

On the south bank of the majestic Columbia river thirty miles below Portland 300 Oregon Baptist young people gathered July 28-August 7 for their Assembly. The attendance during the week-ends ran up to 700. A diversified program of recreation, instruction, and inspiration had been prepared, and with the joyous religious atmosphere that prevailed, as well as the fun and fine fellowship, it was successfully carried out. There was a more general representation from the churches than last year. The Assembly idea is fast fring the imagination of the young people throughout the state.

Only a few of the many attractive features can be mentioned. The devotional sessions led by Mrs. Daniel Bryant and Rev. W. L. Riley were especially helpful this year and prepared the young people for faithful attendance at the classes all of which did splendid study work. Our teachers were a fine corps and rendered interesting instruction. They were Rev. Sumner Vinton, Rev. S. L. Roberts, Rev. W. L. Van Nuys, Dr. W. T. Milliken, Mrs. Jessie McCallam, Miss Louise Hunderup, and Mrs. Daniel Bryant.

At the forum hour general topics of interest were discussed by Rev. Charles Rutherford of India, Mrs. O. C. Wright and Chaplain Bronson. Recreation was in charge of Mr. Harold Proppe, who kept the young people engaged in many kinds of sports, as tennis, volley ball, hiking and bathing. The inspirational addresses were a great blessing to the young people. Among the speakers were Dr. A. M. Petty, Dr. S. J. Reid, Rev. Sumner Vinton with his beautiful pictures, Rev. Seldon Roberts, Rev. E. S. Burket, Rev. E. Buerman, Pres. J. L. Peacock, Dr. James Asa White and Dr. W. B. Hinson.

The evening sessions, consisting of a combination of entertainment and devotional address, were attractive and inspiring. Groups of Baptist young people from the German and Swedish churches were present and gave beautiful sacred entertainments; and Mr. Buerman told the fascinating story of God's leading in his life. Mr. Henry Dirksen conducted the music in an able manner. The Assembly music period and the general singing under his direction added much to the spirit and success of the Assembly. To the hostesses Mrs. W. L. Riley, Mrs. O. C. Wright, Mrs. V. Vincent and Mrs. Daniel Bryant, should be given that meed of praise which is their due, for their supervision was both gracious and effective. Mrs. Riley's kindly influence and oversight over the more intimate social relations was a great blessing to all. An interesting and attractive glimpse of college life was given by a group of Linfield Collegians led by Prof. L. S. Shumaker, and the famous Waldo Davis and son regaled the assembly with entrancing religious concerts on their Triple Golden Chimes.

But stunt night excelled in enthusiasm. It was the occasion for the delegates to manifest their histrionic and dramatic ability and they did it without hesitation to the laughter and applause of the crowd. This year the commissary department was most efficient under the direction of Rev. G. L. Hall. Everybody had their almost ravenous appetites satisfied with clean and tasty food. Miss Lydia Pliter, our delegate to the B. Y. P. U. convention, and Dr. James Asa White reported the items of main interest of that great gathering.

An outstanding feature of the assembly was the campfire. Every night the logs blazed by the shore and stimulated the imagination. Language can hardly portray the deep religious emotions that were engendered. Mr. A. D. Bosserman in charge kept the spiritual tone of these campfire gatherings on a high plane. The beautiful spirit, joyous stories and devotional singing will remain a blessing throughout the lives of many, for a real sense of God's personal presence was felt. The crowning service came on the last Sunday night when Dr. Hinson after a heart searching sermon made his irresistible appeal for Christ. Sixty young people immediately, with full realization of their act, responded in definite self-dedication. It was an intense moment of intelligent and purposeful consecration. Many expressions of gratitude from the young people who attended have been received. They say they are going back to interest others for next year. Without doubt the Oregon Baptist Young People's Assembly has already become a power in the lives of large numbers.

The officers for the year are: President, A. D. Bosserman, Portland; district presidents, Geo. Mason, Pendleton, John Hatfield, Roseburg, and Allan Kafury, Salem; secretary, Inez Peterson, Portland; treasurer, Paul Billeter, Portland.

Assembly Committee, Lydia Pliter, Portland, Curtis Beach, Portland, Helen Everest, Newberg, and Uriel Burt, Corvallis.

The State Convention

With clearness of vision and love of the kingdom the Oregon State Convention has marked out a new path of unity of service. At their 54th annual session, held at Columbia City Assembly grounds, July 24-27, Oregon Baptists went on record as advocating loyalty to the historic Baptist position in matters of faith and practice. Unhesitatingly and unitedly, they adopted a definite statement of faith and projected a program of cooperative service. They believe no human suppositional philosophy is needed to reach a correct understanding of the revelation of Jesus Christ and of Scripture.

It is planned to hold in mid-winter a great conference in Portland on the "Essentials of Baptist Faith, Practice and Service," to further develop and weld the spirit of unity and love.

The definite financial goal for mission benevolence this year is $100,000.

President Jeff Irish of Eugene was re-elected. He has served the convention many years with intelligent devotion. Dr. W. B. Hinson, as in former years, brought several great spiritual messages creating a spirit of devout worship and consecration.

Because of the advance steps taken in defining Oregon's position and because of the intense spiritual loyalty to Christ there was a feeling that this session held a saliency which would become historic. Entirely void of the controversial spirit, the chief mark of the Convention was spirituality coupled with an intense desire to advance the will of Christ on earth.

Missionary Education at Lake Geneva

By FRANCIS C. STIFLER

Light was thrown on the problem of the Sunday evening meeting when the two hundred delegates at the Missionary Education Conference at Lake Geneva assembled for their closing session on Sunday, August 6 at half past seven. Everyone was there and many friends beside. They had been together for ten days. No speaker was chosen for this closing evening. What a loss! What a wonderful opportunity for a ringing challenging address in which all that had been said and done should be brought to clear focus for every delegate! But there was no speaker. In fact the one presiding at the meeting did little more than a machine might have done. He announced no hymns, read no Scripture, offered no set prayer, called on none to pray or testify, yet every moment was filled with rich spiritual experience. The first hymn called for was the choice of a sixteen year old girl. It was "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord." A little later we learned that these words voiced their sponsor's decision made that day that she would give her life for full-time service for her Master. After the hymns came verses and chapters of Scripture from a score of hearts and lips; then prayers, then testimony. The conference was made up of two classes of church leaders. Three fourths of the delegates were mature people charged with the missionary leadership of the Sunday-schools and woman's societies. The rest were young people under twenty whose life plans were yet in the making. During the testimonies that covered the last half hour of this wonderful Sunday evening service, six of these young people declared their intention to serve in the home or foreign fields. One, a young Baptist high school senior, found her heart too full for utterance but the leaders of the conference had learned of her plans, all carefully and prayerfully laid to complete her thorough preparation for the foreign field in the next nine years. The meeting closed with the entire congregation hand in hand forming a circle around the floor of the great outdoor auditorium singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds." The line that impressed itself most upon the hearts of the delegates was the one, "The fellowship of kindred minds is like to that above." They were all of one mind and heart and nothing could have been more like heaven.

They had been for ten days reading about missionaries and listening to missionaries and interviewing missionaries and playing with missionaries. For ten days their lives had been immersed in the high things of faith and the deep things of the Spirit. Everyone of them knew that his life would never be quite the same again because of the fellowship of those sacred days.

The Lake Geneva Conference is one of our Baptist conferences. It is the only conference for the Middle Western section of our territory where graduate methods with normal training are offered to the promotional leaders in the local church. Together with Silver Bay, Seabeck, Ocean Park, Estes Park and Asilomar it offers the strongest leadership in the country in launching the approved Mission Study books for the coming year. Already plans are under way for next year's conference which will open about August 1. The best minds in the whole realm of missionary education in the various denominations are at work on the books to be used, the curriculum to be offered and the leaders to be secured for the instruction, inspiration and counsel. Harry S. Myers of the Stewardship Department of the General Board of Promotion, who was one of the founders of the Missionary Education Movement and who very ably led our Baptist delegates at both Silver Bay and Lake Geneva this summer, is busy with the plans for next year. The long hard pull of the next two years in our Promotion program can be no better strengthened than by heeding his call that every church prepare now to send its missionary leader to Lake Geneva or one of the other points. This year the office of the Lake Geneva Territorial Committee will be kept open throughout the entire year. The address is familiar to all loyal Baptists—125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Address Charles C. Light, Executive Secretary.

Great Days at Kansas Assembly

By CHARLES DURDEN

Heartily acclaiming it the best of six, a large company of young people brought the sixth Kansas Assembly to a close at Ottawa University last Thursday.

For ten days this company of young people had been together, ten days of fine, earnest class-room work, of warm fellowship together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; of laughing, happy, and sometimes hilarious fun.

The great days of the assembly were climaxes that gave expression to the spiritual power manifest throughout. The services of Sunday amply fulfilled the text of the assembly sermon: "We would see Jesus," and in the overflowing congregation of Sunday morning, addressed by the writer, and the echo meeting of the afternoon where, under the spell of a heartfelt message by Gage of Chicago, consecration of life seemed the only natural thing, and at the campus vesper service addressed by Camp Leader Herriott, it seemed as if we looked the Master in the face, and knew him for our King.

What a coronation night we had on Wednesday! Those present have lived under the spell of it ever since. In a beautiful way Dean Behan had unfolded the call of life service in the vesper services under the trees. Then the ministry, the mission fields, and the work of religious education had been successively presented. Quietly decisions were made. It could not be otherwise. God's voice was plainly heard. The climax came as a great company of young people marched from the chapel singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers." There, at ten o'clock, with the white moonlight filtering through the trees, Dr. Behan earnestly gave the call, and forty-five young men and women gave themselves to the Lord for whatever service he may require, forming the first Life Service League of Kansas.

It was a wonderful hour. If there were nothing else the assembly was well repaid. There can be no question about the spiritual power of the young people's movement after such times. Perhaps for the sake of brevity the story of the assembly should be summarized.

1. The Attendance. Larger than in previous years. 392 accredited delegates taking class-work, and 141 visitors. Total registered 533.

2. The Class-Work. Good, solid work was the order of the day. At no point was there a let-down. Dean Behan knows how to combine scholarship, spirituality and pleasure.

3. The Prayer-Life. Led successively by Showalter, Searcy, Cole and President Price, morning prayers gave tone to the day's activities and lifted the work above mere instruction in methods.

4. The World Field. Horizons were pushed back to the ends of the earth by instructors and speakers. Burning words of past triumphs and present needs were brought. Every last delegate was confronted with the world opportunity. No wonder they responded so heartily.

5. The Fun and Recreation. Spiritual fervor needs a safety valve, and assembly life was finely balanced. What screaming hilarity on stunt night! Led by the faculty, these young people gave over Saturday night to bubbling merriment, always within bounds.

6. The Camps. Camp Taub Jones, where forty-six boys were in tents, was a great attraction. The fifty-three W. W. G. girls were encamped in the Science Hall. These camps will overflow next year.

7. Administration. It would be difficult to tell the story of the assembly without saying something of the quiet and effective work of Dean Behan and Miss Umstott. No one heard the wheels of organization turning. Arrangements were perfect. No one complained. It was easy to see that master hands had completed arrangements, and anticipated wants.

8. The University. Perhaps no single factor contributed as much as the university. The atmosphere was there. Quietly President Price moved among the delegates, always happy, always helpful, a fine, loyal Christian leader. The writer had heard of Ottawa, but had never seen it. Those quiet hours of fellowship with President Price make it easy to say; "Ottawa University is a good place for the young people of Kansas." If a man's prayers are an index, this cultured man knows his Lord intimately, and loves him supremely.

Next year? The Assembly will overflow. It ought to.

Michigan State Normal

By C. S. BURNS

Education, devoid of the spirit and ideals of Christianity, is a dangerous thing, as is illustrated in the recent propaganda of "Kultur" and "The Superman" enthusiasts of Germany.

America's educational institutions were given us by the church. Even though they have been so largely taken over by the government for control, if they are to remain the splendid forces for righteousness they have thus far been, Christianity must continue to influence and direct their trend.

One of every 212 of our population in the United States is in some sort of college, and as Baptists we have a fair showing both in educational institutions and in students.

In over thirty universities and colleges we now have special work carried on by Baptist workers and must continue these and enlarge their programmes, but we have neglected the state normal colleges altogether too long, and must be at the task as soon as possible.

From the normal college go the teachers who touch the plastic minds of the grade students, who are far more susceptible to religious suggestion than in the later school life, in college and university.

These normal colleges are left to the ministry of the local Baptist church, often a church small in numbers and with inadequate equipment for work for students and young people generally.

The Michigan State Normal College at Ypsilanti, the oldest State normal school in America, had last year in its student body seventy-two students from fifty Baptist churches in the state. During the present year eighty-eight students were enrolled from fifty-five churches. The responsibility for ministry to these Baptist students is properly a state convention work, rather than the work of the local church. The plan of the State Convention working with the pastor at Ypsilanti includes a young woman student secretary, who will give her entire time to serving the Baptist students of the school, and relating them in their social, religious and fraternal interests to the Baptist church or Baptist students.

The accompanying cut presents the Baptist Students' Association of 1921-22, together with Mr. Floyd Smith, the teacher of the Bible Class, Mrs. C. S. Burns, students' adviser, and pastor C. S. Burns. This group takes in about half the active workers for the year.

We are seeking the right kind of young woman for this work to begin late in September and will be glad to correspond with anyone interested.

Nebraska Baptist Young People's Assembly

By R. R. Coon

At Grand Island, Nebr., July 30 to August 6 was held the first Baptist Young People's Assembly. Rev. J. D. Collins, state Sunday-school secretary is chiefly responsible for this gathering. From the opening day to the very close it was a marked success in attendance, interest and efficiency. Mr. Collins was fortunate in having the presence of all announced speakers on the program except Dr. W. E. Chalmers, of Philadelphia, who on his way West was called home by telegram. President J. M. Wells took his place and gave an able interpretation of five books of the Bible on five successive days, expositions both critical and orthodox. Other speakers and instructors were: Dr. M. D. Eubank, Wilson Mills, D. D., Rev. A. C. Hanna of Burma, Miss Hazel Boyd, Mrs. Jeff Yelton, Sunday-school secretary Bayles, Prof. R. B. Stevens, Dr. W. I. Fowle and Dr. W. B. Lippard. Rev. H. B. Ward of Superior, led the services of song at every session, a very interesting feature of the meetings. Young people's work, the Sunday-school, Bible study, missions, evangelism, the preacher in the pulpit, these were the topics presented and discussed. We wish that sixty ministers of Nebraska—instead of twenty-five could have attended Pres. Wells' study class of the minister preaching; or Dr. Mills' class on evangelism; and that two or three hundred young people—instead of one hundred could have filled the rooms where methods of Sunday-school and young people's work and Bible study were presented; or we could wish—but all of the study exercises were worthy of largest participation. As it was some of the classes had to be taken to the chapel; a room holding fifty was not large enough.

The problem for Mr. Collins to solve is: How can we accommodate the four or five hundred that will probably attend next year? The two hundred or more of registered attendants this year will "tell the tiding round" of what a satisfactory meeting that was at Grand Island. For over twenty years the writer has attended gatherings of Baptists in Nebraska—every state convention—and the conviction is that this Assembly, of eight full days, will mean more in real benefit than any meeting of Baptists with the possible exception of the national B. Y. P. U. convention in Omaha fifteen years ago. Recreation, instruction, inspiration, devotion, each of these was prominent and in variety was offered "as every man had need."

Each evening a young people's society, from Gibbon or Polk or Hastings or Grand Island, gave a musical or other entertainment, followed by an inspirational address. These latter were given by Missionary Hanna, Rev. W. H. Bayles of South Dakota, Judge B. H. Paine of Grand Island and President Wells. We believe the management was fortunate in locating the Assembly at Grand Island where free use of the college buildings and grounds was given—a real advantage to the Assembly and to the college. We believe such a gathering will be held next year and years following, and that Grand Island will be the permanent location; naturally the proper place where the college and Baptist headquarters are located.

Minnesota's Leader Goes Home

A TELEGRAM TO THE BAPTIST Thursday afternoon from Rev. E. H. Rasmussen of the Minnesota state office brought the announcement of the death of the beloved Executive Secretary of the Minnesota Convention, Dr. E. R. Pope, after a brief illness.

Dr. Pope was in Chicago for a conference of mid-west state secretaries with Dr. W. H. Bowler at the Hamilton Club a week before his death, and was taken ill before starting home. Arriving at Minneapolis Saturday morning, August 12, he was taken to the Northwestern Hospital shortly afterward, and died on August 17.

After thirty-five years of service in Minnesota, of which twenty-eight was given to the office of state secretary, Dr. Pope was looking forward to release and a well-deserved rest. He had taken steps to be relieved of his office October 1, and the state board had thoughtfully made plans for making his last days comfortable.

Edward Ritchie Pope was born at New Bedford, Mass., in 1855. He studied for three years at Harvard, and then went to San Francisco to live with an uncle, John F. Pope, one of the pioneers of California and of the First Baptist Church of San Francisco. Dr. Pope studied in a lawyer's office and was admitted to the California bar in 1879. Responding to a conviction that he should preach the gospel, he was licensed by the First Church in 1882, and then came to the Morgan Park Theological Seminary at Chicago and graduated there in 1885.

Following his graduation he was ordained at Carbondale, Ill., and served the church there as pastor for three years. In 1887 he went to Rochester, Minn., and enjoyed there a ministry of seven years, from which in 1894 he went to the secretaryship in which he was to do his great life work.

From 1894 to the day of his death Dr. Pope toiled and prayed and travelled for Minnesota Baptists, which under his leadership have come to number 238 churches with 29,196 members, raising last year nearly $900,000 for the work of Christ.

The funeral service was held on Sunday August 20, by Pastor Norman B. Henderson, at the University Church, of which Dr. Pope was a devoted member and officer. One of the greatest joys of his last days was the achievement of the great building enterprise of that church to make possible an extensive work in behalf of the university students and community.

Surviving Dr. Pope are his wife and four daughters, Mrs. R. A. Graves, Mrs. Paul Rhame and Miss Anna Pope of Minneapolis, and Mrs. D. L. Sherk of Quincy, La. Miss Pope was on a vacation tour in Seattle when her father was taken ill. Neither she nor Mrs. Sherk was able to get here before his death.

Joel Byron Slocum, D. D.

An Appreciation by REV. ALFRED E. ISAAC

TO the hosts of Dr. Slocum's friends, his death will come as a terrible shock. During his vacation, he was filling an engagement for five Sundays with the First Church, Vancouver, B. C., when heart failure brought his devoted ministry to a sudden end. Mrs. Slocum, who had accompanied him, brought the body back to Dayton, Ohio, her two sons meeting her in Chicago. The funeral was held in the First Church, of which he became pastor only two years ago, Wednesday afternoon, August 3rd. Although it was vacation time, the church was filled with his parishioners and friends. The service was in charge of his old-time friend, Rev. Alfred E. Isaac, of Rochester, N. Y., assisted by Dr. Frank Sweet, of Cleveland, who was supplying the First Church, Rev. W. R. Sloman, of the Third church, and Philip Bauer, Dr. Slocum's associate pastor. The casket and pulpit were covered with a profusion of beautiful floral pieces, the gifts of Dr. Slocum's friends from far and near, a number coming from Norwich, Conn., Greenwood, Brooklyn and Yonkers. A beautiful wreath was placed upon the pulpit chair which Dr. Slocum was accustomed to occupy. From one to three the casket was open and large numbers of friends passed by to look upon the face of their beloved pastor and friend once more.

Dr. Slocum began his pastoral labors in Westbrook, Maine, in 1896, following his graduation from Colby College and Newton Theological Institution.

He rapidly and steadily widened the scope of his ministry, occupying successively pastorates at the First church, Concord, N. H.; Columbus, Ohio; Greenwood, Brooklyn; Central church, Norwich, Conn.; Warburton Avenue, Yonkers; and finally the First church, Dayton, Ohio, one of the most outstanding churches in our entire denomination.

Dr. Slocum was honored a few years ago by his alma mater, Colby College, with the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He had written an unusually large number of songs for his beloved college. He had also written a number of short poems which were greatly admired.

During nearly the entire ministry of Dr. Slocum, the writer has esteemed him as his most intimate friend. He loved him as a brother, and counts him one of God's noblemen. Dr. Slocum leaves a wife and two sons. His oldest son, Lorrimer, graduated from Princeton last year and now holds a position with N. W. Ayer & Son. His younger son, Jameson, is still a student at Princeton.

W. Drew, D. D., pastor of the Third Church of the same city. It is believed that he will accept the call.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

PASTOR T. B. MARLIN has resigned at Auburn after five years of service, and is now available for supply work or a pastorate. The Auburn church has added 60 to its membership and increased its benevolences more than eight-fold. A fine group of young people have been developed. Building improvements have been made at a cost of $8000.

MINONK CHURCH has been pastorless since April 1, when Rev. N. J. Hilton, D.D. resigned to become District Superintendent in Southern Illinois. Minonk is a fine field. Besides a good membership in town, it has a large number of young couples on large and rich farms in the country. Nearly all of these are well educated young people. Dr. E. P. Brand has supplied the church a portion of the summer and they have now located a pastor. Rev. L. C. Taylor of Kinderhook has accepted a call and will begin the pastorate Sept. 17. The call was unanimous. Brother Taylor has been quite successful in the three pastorates he has had in Illinois.

THERE are three churches close together in the Quincy Association that are now pastorless or will be in a few weeks, viz., Griggsville, Barry and Kinderhook. These fields are all on the Wabash Railroad on the western side of the state. They all have good meeting houses, good parsonages and are strong churches, and we hope they will secure pastors soon.

REV. W. E. POOLE resigned the Carrollton field and accepted a call to Madison. Carrollton has been making inquiry concerning a large number of men. It is a good field, with a good meeting-house and good parsonage.

THE ATLANTA church has an old meeting-house in good repair and a fine parsonage, and as reported is pastorless or will be soon, as their pastor Rev. W. W. Ayer has been called to another very important field. We hope Atlanta will not be pastorless long.

FAIRBURY is a fine field for the Baptists, with a fine church and parsonage. Evangelist F. M. Dunk has been supplying the church during the summer. They are anxiously looking for a pastor.

ALPHA HAS a fine meeting house and splendid parsonage and is a fine field, but on account of a little discouragement they have been pastorless nearly one year. There are no serious difficulties there, but a lack of unitedly taking hold of the work. We hope they will settle a man soon.

TOULON is one of the best churches in the state. They subscribed more than $30,000 in the New World Movement. They have been pastorless since last fall but have all the time been looking for a pastor.

THE LINCOLN church became pastorless about Aug. 1. They expect to begin looking for a man at once. This is a fine little city. The Baptists have a splendid modern meeting-house and it should make a very hopeful field for some good man.

REV. AND MRS. CAREY W. CHAMBERLIN of Beverly reached home August 4, after an absence of five months. They visited our mission stations in Japan and China, and also attended the Shanghai Christian Conference.

MRS. MARY G. LORD, for many years a wise and devoted leader in the church at Athol, on the 12th celebrated her 88th birthday. In early life she was a teacher, connected with the State normal school at Oswego, N. Y., during the administration of the celebrated Principal Sheldon. Her only son, Mr. W. G. Lord, with whom she resides, is moderator of the town meeting, and one of the solid men in the church and community in Athol.

BELMONT STREET CHURCH, Watertown, Dr. O. J. White, pastor, has made solid progress during his first year of service there. They have sold their meeting-house to the Roman Catholic church just back of them, on very acceptable terms, and have purchased a lot in an ideal location where all ways seem to converge, and are expecting soon to adopt plans for a new stone edifice that will house all their activities and be equipped for their inevitable growth.

REV. H. L. HASS the new pastor at Marblehead, will be ordained September 6. Ultimately he looks forward to educational work in the Philippines under our Foreign Board, and purposes to take preparatory courses at Harvard in school administration. Mr. Hass is a graduate of Newton, and Des Moines, also was a soldier-student in the University of London. Marblehead is appreciating him.

EMPHATIC SATISFACTION is expressed all around with the settlement of Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves at First Church, Providence. His long, strong leadership at Newburyport, followed by his journalistic service on THE BAPTIST, gives him an especially intelligent and practical equipment for the service required in Providence.

THE CHURCH at WESTON is progressing toward their building project. Charles B. Dunham, architect of the churches at Watertown and Arlington, is drawing plans for a noble stone edifice on the site of the old church. The church is most fortunate in having such an experienced and dependable leader as Dr. Joseph E. Perry at this time, and they all know it and are acting accordingly.

NEW YORK

DR. PAUL FARR RUSSELL of Bellevue Hospital, New York was married at Owl's Head, Maine August 10, to Miss Phyllis

Hope Addison of Newton Centre, Mass. The officiating clergyman was the father of the groom, Rev. Samuel Russell, pastor of the First Church, Buffalo. The place chosen for the ceremony was a little island on Penobscot Bay, the summer home of the Russells, and near to Rose Hill Farm, the birthplace of the bride. Dr. and Mrs. Russell are under appointment by the Foreign Mission Society, for medical work in China, and expect to leave for their field sometime next year.

FIRST CHURCH, BAYONNE, C. H. Rannels, pastor. The work has prospered despite adverse summer conditions. The baptismal waters were stirred during July and one who had been reclaimed was given the hand of fellowship at the August communion service. The attendance has been unusually large for the hot season, the number present at the communion service August 6 being the largest summer congregation in many years.

FIRST CHURCH ATLANTIC CITY, of which Hinson V. Howlett is pastor, includes the following suggestive items in its weekly calendar:

"We often think that we have so nearly a 'missionary field' here that we ought to at least keep our resources for our own work! But it is a joy to invest more than $4,000.00 a year in fields afar!"

"We are represented on the home field by Miss Clara A. Mayhew, Christian Center, 150 Line street, Camden, N. J.; and on the foreign field by Miss Mabel France Ivins, Taung-gyi, South Shan States, Burma. Let us pray for them and their work daily."

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

FIRST CHURCH, WEST CHESTER, has invited Rev. E. N. Huff, of Hollidaysburg, to be its pastor, succeeding Rev. E. C. Kunkle, who resigned to become Director of Promotion of the Metropolitan District of New York. He has accepted and will assume the pastorate about Sept. 1.

REV. CHAS. A. WALKER, D. D. presented his resignation to the Olivet Church, West Chester, Aug. 9, to take effect Oct. 1, when he will have completed nine years and three months of service. He has been called to the First Church, Dover, Del., to succeed the late Rev. O. Gray Hutchison, and begins his service there immediately upon leaving his former field.

FIRST CHURCH, LOCK HAVEN, conducted a Vacation Bible School this summer, the first ever held in that community. Seventy-one were enrolled and good work accomplished. Pastor J. F. Miller says that the school was the best advertisement the church has ever had.

CHESTER AVENUE CHURCH, Philadelphia, on Thursday evening August 10, extended a unanimous call to Rev. Groves

MICHIGAN

A MID-SUMMER OPEN-AIR evangelistic campaign inaugurated by the Detroit Council of churches has been successfully carried on under the personal direction of Rev. D. L. Schultz, labor evangelist of the Home Mission Society. Meetings were held in nine different parts of the city, the work in the several districts being carried on by ministers and laymen. Scores of conversions were reported each week. One hundred men expressed a purpose of affiliating themselves with churches. Employment was secured for seventy-five men. The municipality allowed the workers a free field, no street corner being denied them. Many tracts and Gospels were distributed.

Ordination of Charles E. Smith

In response to a call sent out by the First Baptist Church of Ames, Iowa, a council of the Central Association met August 8 to consider the advisability of ordaining Charles E. Smith to the gospel ministry. State Sec'y. G. W. Cassidy was elected Moderator and Rev. Hal E. Norton, Executive Sec. of the Des Moines Baptist Union, clerk.

Mr. Smith is a graduate of Iowa State College of Agriculture and of Hartford School of Missions, and is now under-appointment of the Foreign Mission Society as an agricultural missionary to the Belgian Congo. He gave a very clear statement concerning his Christian experience, call to the ministry, and Bible doctrine. These were found to be entirely satisfactory to the council, and at the evening service they proceeded to ordain Brother Smith. The service was as follows:

Scripture and prayer, Rev. Frank L. Cooper of Des Moines; sermon, Mr. Smith's pastor, Rev. R. B. Davidson of Ames; ordaining prayer, Rev. L. E. Viets of Boone; band of fellowship, Rev. Hal E. Norton of Des Moines; charge to candidate, Rev. Frank Case of Des Moines; benediction, Rev. Charles E. Smith.

An interesting part of the service was the offering of $115 taken at the services to enable Mr. Smith to purchase books to take to the Congo.

Mr. Smith and his splendid wife sail for their field early in September.

Nebraska Students in State Schools

Baptist students going to any of our state institutions should at once connect themselves with the Baptist church, and pastors are under obligation to inform the churches at our educational centers of prospective students that they may get in touch with them and line them up for the denomination. We are therefore giving the names of pastors in our educational centers: State University, C. J. Pope, University Pastor, 1440 Q St., Lincoln, Neb.; Chadron Normal, C. E. Hamilton; Wayne Normal, E. M. Owings; Kearney Normal, D. I. Coon; Peru Normal, Claude Richmond.

EVANGELIST RICHARDS of Grand Island loses his summer supply work with the Humphrey and Platte Center churches Sunday August 27. On these fields Mr. Richards has accomplished a successful work. Forty members have been received. Humphrey and Platte Center are German Catholic settlements. The Baptist churches are the only evangelical churches in these fields.

Mr. Richards may be addressed at 624 E. 11th St., Grand Island, Neb., for evangelistic work September 1.

COLORADO

DR. ARTHUR I. FOWLE, Executive Secretary of the Nebraska Convention, has accepted the unanimous call of the Greeley church, and the Greeley people are very happy in their splendid acquisition.

DR. JOHN Q. A. HENRY was at one time pastor, for two years, of First Church, Denver. At a recent meeting the church adopted a memorial, presented by a special committee, consisting of R. S. Roe and Mrs. F. I. Smith, reading in part as follows: "It is with profound sorrow that we have received the news of the passing on of a former and much loved pastor of this church, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D. He was a strong preacher, a zealous servant of Jesus Christ, unswerving in his allegiance to his Master and yet loving and winsome in his intercourse with all people. He really believed that he had a message from God for lost sinners and with all the enthusiasm and earnestness and persistence of an intense nature, fully possessed by that message, he proclaimed it far and wide. His zeal for God carried him to the ends of the earth, turning many thousands from drunkenness and sin to sobriety and to Jesus Christ."

UTAH

THE STATE CONVENTION, cooperating with the Home Mission Society, is carrying out an enlarged program of missionary effort. The program contemplates the erection of several new houses of worship and extensive development of the fields occupied by Baptist missionary forces. Rev. Henry Jacobs, for eighteen years a missionary worker in Baptist churches of Salt Lake City and adjacent towns, has been secured to have oversight of the work in the western part of Salt Lake City. This large and growing field, in which are located the Rio Grande and Burlington Baptist churches, is the most promising of Baptist home missions in Utah.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

SAN DIEGO FIRST CHURCH has been highly favored since July 1, during Pastor F. O. Belden's vacation, in having a former pastor, Dr. W. H. Geistweit of St. Louis for four Sundays, and another former pastor, Sec'y W. F. Harper, for one Sunday. Dr. Geistweit's inspiring discourses drew increasingly large audiences. By request of the church board he preached on Prohibition to a capacity audience of 2000. This church has cooperated with two other city churches in holding daily vacation Bible-schools. Rev. and Mrs. E. E. Silliman, who are members of this church, often send cheering reports concerning their missionary work in India.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Church Federation of Los Angeles, at its meeting on Tuesday, July 18, passed the following resolution: "The Church Federation of Los Angeles counts the present tendencies to Sabbath desecration as being filled with promises of grave moral decline. At a time when humanity seems so uncertain as to its moral obligation, all Christians should seek to bring the moral truth of Christ to the attention of the world, both by precept and example. We particularly deplore the open and violent defiance of Christian Sabbath ideals on the part of those who undertake to sell real estate through the use of the Sunday barbecue, gifts of prizes, automobiles, etc., to purchasers, and other cheap and vulgar methods of Sunday commercialism. We wish for humanity's sake that all such practices might be eliminated from our city and community."

OREGON

REV. DANIEL BRYANT, associate pastor with Dr. W. B. Hinson of the East Side Church, Portland, has received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the First church, Corvallis. Mr. Bryant has accepted the call and will enter his new field September 1.

THE OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, located at Corvallis, and had an enrolment last year of 5,300 students.

Dr. Burton Convocation Orator

At the One Hundred Twenty-sixth Convocation of the University of Chicago to be held September 1, Professor Ernest DeWitt Burton, the Director of the University Libraries, will deliver the address on "Education in a Democratic World." Professor Burton has been for many years the Chairman of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, and has twice visited the Orient, especially China and India, for extended investigation of educational conditions, from the last of which he only recently returned. He went to Japan and China last August as Chairman of the China Educational Commission of the Foreign Mission Conference of North America. Professor Burton has a remarkably wide acquaintance with the educational situation in the Orient, as well as in this country and in Europe. He has been a professor in the University of Chicago since its foundation.

Miss Prescott Leaves Secretaryship

MISS NELLIE G. PRESCOTT, who since September, 1914, has been officially connected with the Women's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, first as associate foreign secretary and then as foreign secretary with full responsibility, left her position at headquarters August 1. Her resignation had been regretfully accepted in May.

While Miss Prescott felt compelled to give up the heavy work of the foreign secretaryship she has consented to act as advisor to the foreign department. Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh has taken over the work as acting secretary.

Many testimonials of appreciation of Miss Prescott's work were given at the annual meeting of the board of managers at Indianapolis in June. The Board feel very grateful that though Miss Prescott will not be in the work at headquarters they will have the continued benefit of her wide experience and her wise counsel.

Miss Prescott expects to live in Rochester, making her home with her friend Mrs. Augustus H. Strong.

A Wanderer Abroad

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

I. The Lure of London

"The city is full of them—" these are the words I heard from a Londoner speaking to a friend in the "tube" yesterday. He was referring to the invasion of the city by Americans, and indeed one cannot fail to notice them this summer. Whatever interest other parts of Europe may hold for tourists there is certainly a lure to London. The war appearance of a year or two ago has entirely disappeared, so that the city has assumed its old time appearance—plus a vast improvement in streets, new buildings, and cleanliness. There are other things as well as Americans here, there is the ever present Ford car. A friend told me the other day, and his word can be relied upon, that over here they furnish a squirrel with each car to pick up the nuts as it goes along! That also "reminds me" of a hill climbing event near here between a Rolls Royce and a Ford. Both cars came to a very steep hill, the Rolls Royce was heavy and slow, the Ford was light and quickly ascended reaching the top first, but with a tremendous rattle. When at the top the chauffeur of the Rolls Royce said to the rapidly "said the chauffeur condescending-Ford man, 'What car is that you have?'" "A Ford," he answered. "It runs very ly, 'but what was the awful rattle I heard coming up the hill?'" "That sir," replied the Ford man, "was the eighteen hundred pounds which I did not pay for a Rolls Royce, rattling in my pocket!"

A notable feature in London this past week have been the demonstrations, demanding no more war. These were coincident with similar gatherings throughout Great Britain and in many European countries. The pilgrimage to Hyde Park was worthy of the city; a procession two miles long with ten thousand people in it passed through the main west end shopping thoroughfare to the meeting places in the park, where twelve different platforms were erected. There were men, women and children of all ages, representing churches, trade unionists, labor party, the Quaker Societies, "War resisters," and as one paper expressed it—"the potential conscientious objector." At the end of the long procession a group of communists fell in behind with a banner bearing the inscription—"We don't support this demonstration; it's humbug." The speakers on the various platforms were drawn from the church, among whom were many of our Baptist leaders. From each platform resolutions affirming hatred of war, and demanding international co-operation to end the evil was carried. The mover of the resolutions in every instance was an ex-service man.

Yesterday being in the House of Commons, I witnessed the expulsion of Horatio Bottomley as a member of the House. It will be remembered that he was recently convicted of embezzling funds entrusted to him for victory bonds, to the approximate amount of one hundred and thirteen thousand pounds. The last expulsion was about one hundred years ago. The whole proceeding though only lasting about fifteen minutes, was as solemn as the ecclesiastical excommunication of a bishop. A great hush prevailed through the house, so great it could be felt. Bottomley did not appear in person, but sent a letter, explaining his position, this was followed by a reading of the court's record of conviction, after which a motion to exclude was made by Mr. Austin Chamberlain. Bottomley has had an erratic and weird experience. He was the editor of John Bull, a London weekly. He poses as a martyr, while most of the people regard him as a criminal.

How often a thing should be left unsaid or better said! Here is a church notice from the Methodist Recorder the paper of that denomination over here: "The Rev. E. Omar Pearson, was presented on behalf of the members of our Crambrook Church, Ilford, with an envelope containing ten guineas, as an expression of appreciation on his leaving the circuit!"

A Charter for Industry

The statement which follows was submitted to the Social Service Conference at the Indianapolis Convention, and its publication was requested by the conference. The author is Rev. U. M. McGuire, of Greencastle, Ind., formerly a member of the editorial staff of THE BAPTIST.

CERTAIN political rights of man have entered into the constitution of modern governments on the basis of such accepted formulas declarative of those rights as Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence and the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen. But industrial rights rest upon no such accepted formula. Modern industry has become so far and so permanently institutionalized, so complex in its organization, and so complete in the subjection of the life of both the individual and the community to that organization, that in order to establish economic justice, insure industrial peace and promote the general welfare, it is necessary for a charter of industrial rights to be defined and established upon the following principles:

I. Natural resources of the earth are the common heritage of the people and values created by the community belong to the community; the equity of each in the common wealth is inalienable, but it may take the form of adequate provision by society for individual welfare; property is to be acquired, administered and used as a trust for the common good, having in view spiritual ends and the best life for all.

II. All are under equal obligation to labor in proportion to ability for the common good; equal opportunity must be secured to all for employment, for acquiring a living, for conditions favorable to health and morals, for one day's rest in seven, for healthful recreation, for care in case of need, for family life, for education and religion, and for participation in the general welfare.

More Than Million Children Working

More than 1,000,000 American children between 10 and 15 years of age are engaged in gainful occupation, 1,060,858 being the exact figure according to a census bureau report, August 11. Out of every thousand boys between those ages 118 were recorded as employed either on their own account or for wages, while 5.6 per cent of the girls were so employed.

III. Industry in general must be so organized as to secure economy, efficiency and democratic cooperation; each particular industry in which different parties have an interest as investors, managers, workers or the community, must be governed by a body in which all parties having such interest are represented, respectively, by representatives of their own choosing and in proportion to their vital interests.

This charter is proposed to the public as expressing the Christian conception of an enlightened and humane industrial order for the present stage of civilization; and all the agencies of religion, of education, of business, of organized labor and of civil government ought to co-operate in efforts to establish and maintain such an order.

the local churches everywhere, incorporate them into their interpretations and applications of Christianity, and urge a repentance to righteousness in harmony with them.

And thirdly, these are the Christian ideals: life above lucre; the general welfare before private interest; the maintenance of all the normal rights of man; equality of economic, educational and social opportunity; restoration of the family and of the weekly day of rest; reasonable hours of toil, and sanitary conditions; a living wage as a preferred claim upon industry; the right to organize, with free choice of method; adjustment of conflicting claims by collective negotiation, in which all parties interested shall have representatives of their own choosing and in proportion to their vital interests; abolition of unemployment (including that incidental to industrial disputes, and of profiteering; adequate care of the weak by the strong; economy and efficiency in the production of economic goods, equity in of their use to the highest spiritual and social ends; progressive application of their distribution and the subordination discovered principles and methods of democracy to the industrial organization; national goodwill; enlistment of all social orderly procedure, conciliation and fraternal agencies, religious, educational, industrial and political, for the promotion of these ends. Such are the maxims to which all Christians by the genius of their faith, and by the principles of the gospel, are committed beyond debate, compromise, treat or recall.

In the promotion of these ideals, it is high time for the churches everywhere to move "like a mighty army," and to make common cause with all groups of people, however organized, that seek the same end. Signs of such a movement are growing more evident. The light of a new day is beginning to stream across the tops of the hills.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF PORT BYRON, N. Y., is without a pastor, Rev. L. Bumpus having resigned about two months ago to accept a call to Marion, N. Y. There is a parsonage and the church can raise $1,200 salary. A middle-aged man is preferred.

The new country church at Roseglenn, N. D., needs hymnals. If any church can spare Baptist hymnals, or other standard hymnal, please notify Wm. Mueller, Star Route, Ryder, N. D.

James A. Francis at the University of Chicago

THE University of Chicago preacher for August 13 was Dr. James A. Francis, pastor of the First Church, Los Angeles. The services are held in Mandel Hall at 11 a. m. and are largely attended by the university community.

Prior to the service the Alice Freeman Palmer Chimes in the Founder's Tower rang out "May Jesus Christ be Praised" and "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood."

Dr. Francis appeared in the conventional Geneva gown worn by all university speakers; but with characteristic independence he laid his robe aside before speaking, and presented himself in a comfortable summer suit. His first paragraph raised a hearty laugh which ran throughout the congregation,—an unusual thing for this stately occasion. He had his hearers en rapport from start to finish, and a bit of aside or casual allusion in the midst of the loftiest flights had its answer in the ripple of mild laughter or the half-spoken assent which revealed his complete control of his audience.

The entire service was one of exaltation of the Lord Jesus Christ. Three hymns were sung by the choir of eighteen men's voices, leading the congregation; and all were hymns of adoration. In the hymn "I've Found the Pearl of Greatest Price," a reverent hush fell upon organist, choir and all the congregation when the verse was sung, "Christ is my Peace, He died for me, for me he gave his blood; And as my wondrous Sacrifice offered himself to God."

Dr. Francis, who was alone in the entire conduct of the service, in his morning prayer thus pleaded with the Father: "We pray for this great institution of learning; this morning we ask for it this one thing; that it may become increasingly Christian in spirit and in outlook; that above all other things learned here, we may learn to know him who gave us being, and before whom at last we must all stand."

The preacher's text was Ephesians 1:19: "And what is the exceeding greatness of his power toward us." The sermon was a marvellously rich and vital exposition of the entire chapter of the epistle, with the text for a climax.

We can better appreciate the passage, said the preacher, when we understand who wrote it and to whom it was written. The Ephesians had no Bible, they had little or no social status. They had been brought up in a community where decency was not respectable, it was only queer. They had very little; but they had, so Paul tells them, the consciousness of access to Jesus Christ the Eternal Son of God risen from the dead. That was about all they had; but that one privilege is the biggest there is. You have that same privilege of access to the living Christ, every hour of the day. . . .

The dignity, greatness and worth of the human soul depend not on where we came from, but on what we may become. The biggest promise in all the Bible is the promise that if we come to him and follow him and keep following, some day we shall be like him. We've got a supernatural religion! . . . Men and women, the day you found Christ you found everything. . . .

Paul had a quenchless and undying passion for Jesus Christ, and he interpreted everything in human society by Jesus Christ. All spiritual blessings are for us in Christ. Paul does not say, you will find everything in a book; but, you will find everything in a Person. . . . Paul tells the Ephesians that he prays for them because he has heard of their faith in Christ and their love for one another. Faith and love: a nice pair,—mother and daughter, and they always go together. Faith in Christ results in love for one another.

Paul prays that they may have the vision of God in Christ. To live in the light of Jesus' face, to have direct dealings with him day by day: this is the only road to sainthood and to power. The measure of the power promised through the abiding presence and life of the risen Christ, is, Paul declares, to be found in the taking of a dead man from the tomb in the garden, and placing him on the throne of the universe as business manager of a thousand million worlds,—"The power which He wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenlies." That power is what most of all the church of today needs: the power of the living Christ working in us who believe.

duction of armaments by all nations; We believe in a warless world, and dedicate ourselves to its achievement." These ideals are commended to the people of our churches for consideration and approval and action.

In order to promote an informed and active world citizenship, the following definite suggestions are offered: Have one or more classes studying world questions, using such study books as "Christ and the Nations" by Batten; "Marks of a World Christian" by Fleming; "International Aspects of Christianity" by Davis; "Everybody's World" by Sherwood Eddy; "The Christian Basis of World Democracy" by Latourette; "World Facts and America's Responsibility" by Patton.

Keep informed concerning international questions and know what are the issues at stake. Arrange for a course of at least six talks or addresses on world questions. Whenever possible invite some qualified person to come and explain the issue involved in any question.

Our Book Shelf

Uncle Mary; A Novel for Young or Old.
By Isla May Mullins. Boston: Page Company. $1.75.

Mrs. Mullins, who is the wife of President E. Y. Mullins of Louisville Seminary, has given us in "Uncle Mary" what appears to us to be her best book so far. A young New England woman lives through ten years of poverty and discouragement resulting from family catastrophes, and carrying in her heart an incurable longing for her girlhood lover lost to her through those catastrophes and her own obstinacy. An orphan's home child of unknown parentage, strangely sent to her, is the providential agent in the recovery of Uncle Mary's sweetness and the fulfillment of her girlish dream. The story is a skillful portrayal of the unloveliness of a selfish life, and of the peculiar wisdom of a patient lover. It is a thoroughly readable and desirable book for all the family, "young and old".

Simon Called Peter. By Robert Keable. E. P. Dutton & Co.

An infamous, blasphemous, pornographic story, reeking with monstrous lewdness. It should be loathed by every decent man, banned by every library, and boycotted by every reputable book-seller. It is not a "War story"—it is a SEWER story; and the stench of the sewer pervades the whole of it. There is an excuse for the sewer; there is none whatever for this book.

Racial Studies: Vol. IV, The Italians in America; Vol. V, The Greeks in America. New York: Doran Co. $1.00 each.

Every traveler in America knows that a Greek restaurant is easier to find than a railroad station—indeed in many cities it is hard to find a restaurant not run by Greeks. What do we know about these energetic business people who are feeding our city workers? What is their racial and social and economic background? What is their preparation for political and industrial fellowship with us and our American-born neighbors?

J. P. Xenides, Greek born and passionate lover of his nation, educator and social worker of long experience in Asia Minor and in New York City, tells the story of the Greeks in America, and interprets the Greek mind, in 150 pages packed full of condensed and well-organized information. He writes as a Christian scholar and writes for American readers; and he writes a most valuable book.

For Italy Rev. Philip M. Rose contributes another volume to this notable series, which was projected by the Interchurch World Movement as a part of its survey of world conditions. Mr. Rose is an American thoroughly familiar with the Italian people and their old-world home, and is pastor of an Italian Congregational church. He covers fully the economic, social and religious conditions of the Italian-American contingent of our population.

The Nature of Scripture, by Prof. A. S. Peake. New York: Doran Company. $2.00.

The reader should know that the book under review is a compilation of occasional addresses given at various conferences, assemblies, and schools, during the past fourteen years. The work obviously has not the unity of purpose and workmanship to be found in Prof. Peake's other book on "The Bible, its Origin, its Significance and its Abiding Worth." The author in his preface says, "This volume contains a collection of papers and lectures mainly concerned with the nature and value of Scripture as it appears to a student who combines an acceptance of critical method with a loyal adhesion to the evangelical faith." The book appears to have been elicited by the fact that "the advocates of traditional theories on the Bible have been stirred to new efforts." Prof. Peake here seeks to state and defend "the reasons for rejecting the traditional view of the Bible and for accepting . . . the critical view." "I do not doubt at all that the traditional view of the Bible has been definitely dislodged, and that to accept it would be for us a kind of intellectual sin against the Holy Ghost." These citations indicate the author's position and purpose. Revelation is a process in history, having its climax in Jesus, "who summed up all that was best and greatest" in the history and experience of Israel. Yet Jesus "was not simply, as his predecessors, a part of the process, the last link of a long chain. . . . He is not man's last best word to God, but God's last best word to man, who came less to tell us about God than to live the life and express the nature of God, so far as was possible within the limits of our human experience. With his life, crowned by death, the long process of revelation was complete."

"It Is to Laugh"

Mary Jane's father had just refused her request for a nickel. Turning to her mother, she exclaimed: "Mamma, you are the nearest relative I've got, but papa is the closest."

"Where," asked the female suffrage orator, "would man be today were it not for woman?"

She paused a moment and looked around the hall.

"I repeat," she added, "where would man be today were it not for woman?"

"He'd be in the garden of Eden eating strawberries," answered a voice from the gallery.

J. Frank Norris, the stormy petrel of Texas Baptists, went to Los Angeles to preach at Temple Church. On his return he told his people the following story one Sunday evening. We take the report from Dr. Norris' paper, the Searchlight:

"My good friend, Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of the Temple Baptist church in Los Angeles, where I spoke last Sunday night, told me a brand new story and I will give it to you, on how to take up a collection. Two men went to rob a train—a very frequent occurrence nowadays, and they went into the Pullmans and threw their guns down on everybody and said: 'Throw up your hands,' and they all threw their hands up. That's a very sensible thing to do when a man throws a gun on you—and the leader of the two robbers said: 'We are going to rob every man in this train and kiss every woman.' One old, little, scrawny, puny, wrinkled 50-year-old maid was in the rear of the car. One of the men standing near the robbers said: 'Mr. Robber, please sir, you can take our money, but please don't kiss our women,' and this old maid popped up on the back seat and said to this man: 'Say, look here, sir, who is robbing this train, anyway?' She had an eye to business, didn't she? She wasn't going to be robbed of her chance—no, sir."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE CHOIR AND THE BUDGET

By WILLIAM O. MILLER

If one harbors any doubts as to the place which the choir holds in the formal programs of church worship, a glance at the religious notices in the Saturday editions of the daily press will be an enlightening occupation. Here it is visually demonstrated that church music more and more shares with the pastor the responsibility and the opportunity of lifting men's souls and thoughts out of the tangle of daily life and into the pure, sweet atmosphere of the hereafter. If this were not proof enough, a compilation of expenses for music in all the churches of the United States for one year would show an outlay of many millions of dollars. If the contributions of the choir to the spiritual quality of the service are of doubtful value or mediocre, the choir is a liability and not an asset, irrespective of the amount appropriated for its maintenance. If, however, the work of the choir supplements that of the pastor, beautifying the service, and unlocking the windows of men's souls, so that God's pure sunshine and life-giving air may flow in more abundantly, a service is performed which cannot be measured by material standards.

In no other way do our churches seem so prodigal in expense as in their music. Not that the appropriations are lavish or expensive. More money should be expended, on the whole. But the returns are inadequate. And this is no reflection on the loyal bands of singers and players who serve, either voluntarily or for meager stipends, often unappreciated, frequently the weekly subjects for critical examination over the Sunday dinner. If there is lacking a spirit of cooperation and sympathetic understanding between the choir and the pew and pulpit, let me respectfully recommend a few moments of prayerful introspection on the part of the latter two constituents. Too often the choir-loft is the object of critical attention; it is helpful occasionally to reverse the lens, for quite as interesting observations may be made from as well as of the choir-loft. One of the deadliest influences on choir-effort is "indifference." In no other phase of church work does it place its blighting hand with more withering effect than on the choir.

Therefore, to make the investment of the church's money in music more productive, yielding almost immediate returns, supplement the monthly stipend with a full measure of human interest and kindly appreciation. It may come as a shock to many to learn that the personnel of the choir has ordinary human feelings and aspirations, and is unusually susceptible to sympathetic consideration.

However, the choir is a big financial loss for reasons beyond control. In every other division of church activity the work of the local church is supplemented, or even directed, by central organizations composed of experts, and functioning according to modern scientific business principles. Is it too far-reaching a comparison to cite the work of central boards directing local effort in behalf of foreign and domestic missions? Then possibly the Bible-schools, with their prescribed courses of study, leaflets and festival programs, may be a reasonable comparison.

But who helps the choir? Music is left shivering outside, and not one jot of constructive thinking apparently is given to lending her a helping hand. Why should the success of so vital a factor in formal church worship be left to the chance ability of the little band of organist and singers who compose the choir? Why should they not receive the stimulus of practical and helpful suggestions born out of the experiences of others?

Thousands of country and city churches could be made more attractive if the efforts of the local choir, often well-meaning, but ill-advised and more illy-executed, could be directed and encouraged by timely suggestions from a central board. Seasonable programs for Christmas, Lent, Easter, harvest-time and patriotic occasions, as well as variations in the weekly music to maintain interest, are but a few of the things that such a board could do in the interest of church music. Experience is a dear teacher, but the price need not be paid over and over by different choirs. Who could measure the returns if the vision of our local choir directors could be clarified and enlarged by contact with the ideals and methods of our most successful and helpful leaders, through the agency of a central board? Would not our ministers and governing bodies welcome practical suggestions which would enable them to understand their choir problems more intelligently and to locate the sources of weakness in their own choir, and to develop instead a healthy, enthusiastic and responsive organization? The choir deserves more than to be the butt of clerical jokes and lay gossip.

Then the choir touches another sensitive spot in the budget. If its work is effective, if it stimulates interest in the formal worship of the church, the result is obvious. The heart of the ever-patient treasurer is warmed by the fact that the "loose collections" are on the increase, and the heart of the pastor is gladdened because through an interest often first awakened by the music of the choir, he has been able to reach an ever-widening circle, and men and women have thus been brought in increasing numbers into the active, helpful, spiritual life and work of the church.

The choir occupies such a necessary and important place in modern church worship that its needs and limitations should be made a matter of careful, critical study. —The Presbyterian.

Another interesting set of cantillations, or readings with music. This live Chicago publisher has made a most unique niche for himself by the fine assortment of works of this type he has issued in the past few years. This "speaking-song" sort of thing has not been so assiduously cultivated in this country as over on the other side. There, by the cleverness of such artists as the late Stephen Hawley and others of his ilk, the genre has developed to a status where all the publishers look upon it as legitimate and profitable. So far on this side, the publishers have not seen the light to any great extent, outside of the Summy Company. But it is only a matter of a few years until the reading with appropriate music will win its position here also. Such works as listed above will do much to win common acceptance for the genus. They are not difficult to do, keenly accentuate the points of the clever poems, and will win their hearers by the humor and point presented.

Stricken Swatow

A plea by a resident missionary

I have written this message from my heart. I have been a missionary in Swatow District for twenty-seven years and am resident missionary in Swatow city. It is less than a year ago since I left my field to return to America in quest of health. In this hour of distress of the Swatow people and of our fellow workers in the work of the Kingdom of God I urge upon our Board of Managers of the Foreign Society and upon our Baptist churches that funds be sent to Swatow in order that your missionaries may undertake relief work among their stricken fellowmen.

The situation in a few words is this. A territory comprising a population of about 8,000,000 people has been devastated by a tidal wave and typhoon of unusual force. This territory is named in Chinese Tie-Ciu, i. e. the District of the Tides. The entire land is very low and is cut up by innumerable canals and rivers, which rise and fall with the tides of the ocean not far away. Thus the tide at Kityang city, forty miles from the coast, rises and falls five to seven feet. The bay or port of Swatow is funnel-shaped, and an enormous amount of water is driven into the interior by a severe typhoon, flooding all the towns and villages. The city of Swatow is built on a spit of land hardly three feet above the high tides. In addition to flood and typhoon, fire destroyed a number of houses not blown down by the wind.

Swatow has been very unfortunate during the past four or five years. On Feb. 13, 1918, a terrific earthquake destroyed thousands of homes, and quite a number of towns and villages were completely ruined. Mission property was damaged to the extent of many thousands of dollars. In January, 1919, a great conflagration destroyed a large part of the business section of Swatow, involving a loss of millions of dollars. Time will not allow to write about the military chiefs who "captured" Swatow and imposed large sums upon the local Chamber of Commerce. To all this is now added what seems to be the greatest disaster of all,—50,000 dead and 100,000 homeless. My heart goes out to Brother G. W. Lewis, who took over my work in Swatow city temporarily as I left for America last autumn. I grieve as I think of the terrible losses sustained by our fellow Chinese Christians in life and property. We should pray earnestly for our missionaries living at Kak-chieh, our mission compound, situated on a hill 200 feet high on the bay opposite Swatow. Though out of reach of the tidal wave the terrific force of the wind no doubt partly destroyed some of our splendid institutional buildings.

Apart from the necessity of supplying funds for the repairs of our mission property, which according to Brother Page is estimated at $50,000 (Mex.) there comes to American Baptists the challenge to aid our fellow Chinese Christians and our own missionaries in their efforts to succor the unfortunate at this time. It is unthinkable that we should leave all this work of relief to be done by the non-Christian organizations in Swatow. If American Christians fail to respond at this time it will mean that the influence of your missionaries will be less among the people we should win for Christ, than it was before this disaster happened.

I do not know what the board of managers intend to do. It is August and no

1300 Beneficiaries

In addition to cooperating with Baptist ministers and missionaries in providing for retiring pensions, larger than could otherwise be obtainable, The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention is today making grants to 1,300 beneficiaries.

This is in harmony with the object of the Board, as stated in its Act of Incorporation in 1913:

"The objects of the corporation shall be to administer its funds for the benefit of worthy Baptist ministers and Baptist missionaries, their wives or widows, and their dependent children."

The Board has no debt. Nevertheless ordinary justice requires an increase not only in the number but also in the amounts of the grants made to old and broken ministers and missionaries.

They Gave Their Best. Can We Do Less?

It requires the income of a fund of $6,000 invested at five per cent in order to make possible a single annual grant of $300.

doubt it would be very difficult to get the board together to act at this time. A statement issued in September, when the board will meet again will be too late to help the present situation. Contributions should be sent to our mission treasurer, G. B. Huntington, 276 Fifth Ave., New York city, without delay. It is just possible that my plea may not be in line with the general arrangement of things, but I have not been giving the past twenty-seven years of my life to the Swatow people to fear "red tape" in a case of emergency such as this.

As I write the daily papers bring the following message from China: "United States Consul-general Cunningham yesterday received a cabled appeal from the U. S. Consul at Swatow for supplies to fight the cholera epidemic which he said was now sweeping the city as a result of the pollution of the water by dead bodies of animals and human beings."

Need I add another word? "What ye have done to the least of them ye have done unto Me."

A Fortune for a Penny

Christian workers all over the country will be glad to learn that the Bible at least is getting back to pre-war prices. For the first time in almost five years the American Bible Society is able to offer Gospels with heavy paper cover for one cent. An edition of the Gospel of St. John is already off the press and the other Gospels will be prepared in the same style and in various languages. We are amazed that a book of 64 pages, so attractively covered, is issued for the price of one cent; and glad that the Gospel is again available for wide circulation at a cost so trifling.

THE safety of the republic rests to a large degree with the teachers of the nation. We call upon teachers everywhere to teach respect for law and order and for constituted authority; to impress alike upon young and old the importance of obedience to the Constitution and to all state and national laws and to local ordinances; to teach the children that the laws are made by the majority and may be changed by the majority; but that they must be obeyed by all; and that he who disobeys the Constitution or laws is an enemy of the republic.

John Mason Jackson, an honored member and officer of Hyde Park Church, Chicago, until his death at the age of thirty-nine in 1898, is the subject of a very appreciative memoir by Dr. T. W. Goodspeed, published in the University Record (Chicago) for July.

Rev. B. W. Valentine, a Colgate alumnus, who was a teacher in Benedict College, Columbia, S. C., for sixteen years, the last eleven of which he was president, has been elected Professor of education at Otterbein College, Westerville, Ohio. During the last year he has been taking courses in education at Cornell University.

Dr. E. M. Poteat, Sr., formerly a Department Secretary of the Board of Promotion, while visiting his sons on the mission fields of China, conducted a series of evangelistic services in Shanghai Baptist College, and following his delivery of the commencement sermon he baptized eighteen students who professed their conversion to the Christian faith.

Miss Catherine G. Burke, the second blind student to be graduated from Barnard College, was in this year's class. She won election to Phi Beta Kappa. Miss Burke is a Bible student, and has recently secured from the New York Bible Society the Epistles of Paul in New York Point print. The Society publishes the Authorized Version also in Revised Braille, the Four Gospels in three volumes costing $9.75.

Announcement has been made by Dr. Elkanah Hulley, president of Broadus College, Philippi, W. Va., of the appointment of Arthur L. Brandon as alumni executive and field representative. Mr. Brandon entered his new work recently. Broadus is the Baptist college of West Virginia. During the last few years the college has had a steady growth. The appointment of an alumni executive marks another forward step in the activities of the college. Mr. Brandon will work in Japan is the one important country of the world with which our 1922 trade shows an increase. Our imports from the whole world in the fiscal year 1922, says the Trade Record of The National City Bank of New York, show a fall of 28% in value while from Japan alone, our imports show an increase of 18%. The 1922 exports to the whole world show a reduction of 42% in value while those to Japan show an increase of 30%.

The value of our total trade with Japan in the fiscal year 1922 is approximately $550,000,000 against $150,000,000 in 1913.

Twenty-seven states have already adopted or have pending some sort of bonus legislation, according to a summary in the Bond Buyer. Thirteen states have already sold for this purpose bonds amounting to $174,500,000. Eight other states have authorized referendum elections involving $170,500,000, all but one to be voted on in November. The list is as follows: California, 10,000,000; Illinois, $55,000,000; Iowa, $22,000,000; Kansas, $25,000,000; Kentucky, $10,000,000; Maryland, $9,000,000; and Montana, $4,500,000. In November, 1924, Pennsylvania is scheduled to vote on an issue of $35,000,000.

E. R. Pope: An Appreciation

By FRANK PETERSON

WHEN, on Thursday afternoon at about 3 o'clock, August 17, the summons came to Dr. Pope to come up higher, a useful servant went home to God. And the writer lost a very dear friend.

I had known him ever since he came to Minnesota in 1887, but our acquaintance became intimate in 1893 when the William Carey Centennial was celebrated. Special efforts were then put forth in our churches as an acknowledgment of God's favor during one hundred years of Baptist foreign missions. To make the financial campaign of this year more effective, Associational Secretaries were appointed to help bring each church into line. Dr. Pope was appointed for the Southeastern Association and so well did he accomplish his work that when the reports came in to per cent goal. This success attracted attention to his ability to achieve things, so me it was found that his Association was the only one that made the one hundred that when a year later the state convention board was looking for a successor to Dr. Peters who had fallen in the harness, I felt that I could safely add my recommendation of him to this position. I remember that I backed it up too, by showing his record as associational secretary. In the nearly twenty-nine years that have passed since, I have never had occasion to regret the position I then took.

THE BAPTIST last week gave the history of Dr. Pope's earlier life as student and pastor. He entered upon his new duties as state secretary for Minnesota January 1, 1894. It did not take long to discover that he was the right man for the place. Such men are few whose qualities are so well fitted to the office of an executive secretary as were found in Dr. Pope.

He had a keen penetration and a quick grasp of the question in hand. The board soon discovered that in Dr. Pope they had a man in the administrative office on whose judgment they could rely and whose advice they could safely follow. He knew the churches, their temper and conditions as well as he knew his own children. He knew the state and all its varied resources

Loving Our Neighbor

WHEN we are admonished to love our neighbor as ourselves, the command at once suggests the wisdom and necessity of looking into the question of how after all we really do love ourselves. In putting His admonition in that form the Master evidently intended to put us at once right up against that question. Clearly, if our love for ourselves is not a fine, strong, clean, noble thing, we cannot even understand what it is that Jesus is talking about, much less measure up to the thing which He asks us to do. If I do not think well of myself, if I do not cherish in my own soul the sentiments and ideals that will allow me to think well of myself, there will not be much chance that I will have that esteem and respect for my fellowman without which anything like real love toward him would be impossible. I cannot love my neighbor except as a noble, unselfish affection is an instinct of my own soul. Evidently Jesus intended to teach us that the task of loving our neighbor, difficult as it is, has to be preceded by the harder task of growing a soul that would make it possible.—The Guardian.

as perfectly as he knew the multiplication table. His fine tact stood by him throughout his whole administrative career. One-third of the churches and membership of Minnesota Baptists consists of foreign-speaking peoples, and these are divided into seven different nationalities. By his kindness and unflinching tact in handling the different nationalities he proved himself peculiarly fitted for the responsible office he held. When he visited the Swedish Conference all felt that he was one of their own. The same intimate feeling was felt toward him by all the other nationalities. The result was that a hearty cooperation was secured and the affairs of the convention moved along like clock work and without friction.

Activity was the soul of his being. He loved work, and master of detail as he was, he seldom if ever, erred in the development of his plans and nearly always reached his goal. He was generous almost to a fault. His contributions to Christian work are not all recorded in the books of the state convention, nor in the records of his church. Many are the times that the writer has been called upon to raise church debts. If Dr. Pope was present, as he usually was, he never failed to join the others in pledging himself for a liberal amount, although this was not expected of him. In his relation with his fellow workers he was considerate and fair. For nearly twenty-nine years our offices have been together. We have gone in and out with one another and spoken from the same platform, but in all these years I cannot recall a single instance when there was an occasion for a misunderstanding. Such harmony and fellowship in service will always linger as a sweet memory in the writer's mind.

Among the names of those who have had a prominent part as state builders, the name of E. R. Pope should have a conspicuous place. He has not builded railroads nor headed projects of material development, but in his twenty-nine years as leader of a strong denomination in the state he has contributed those things which will outlast the material. Dr. Pope's influence was by no means confined to his own state. His voice was heard in our national assemblies and his counsel was not only respected but appreciated. Des Moines College did itself great honor when, in 1912, it conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Three years ago next January, he assumed the additional duties as state director of the board of promotion. This very naturally added much to his already heavy responsibilities, but by his natural deft and business-like way of handling affairs, the results were far above the average. This additional work may have been his physical undoing, and, perhaps, led to his untimely departure from us.

The strain of work began to tell upon him, and to head off a possible breakdown he presented his resignation to the board to take effect at any time in the near future or as soon as a successor can be secured. Seeing the situation as it really was the board very reluctantly accepted it but made provision so that he could take up other and lighter work for the convention. One of these things was the writing of a history of Minnesota Baptists. No man was better qualified to do this than he; and without him there is much of Baptist history that can never be told.

Farewell, my dear brother! Now take your rest until the resurrection morning when you shall hear Him, whom you so long and faithfully served, say: "Well done, enter into the rest of thy Lord."

No Constitutional Amendment Likely

"I find THE BAPTIST a perpetual stimulant. Almost every week its suggestions help me to solve some local problem." Thus writes a pastor of one of our churches in no mean city. It should be noted that THE BAPTIST is a lawful stimulant; It is healthful stimulant and finally it is a needed stimulant. And in conclusion note that it will be wise to "stimulate" the entire membership. When will you have your every family canvass for THE BAPTIST and Missions?

Killam's Kollum

To Advertisers

President Lawrence of Oklahoma Baptist University writes to correct our recent reference to his institution as being a new enterprise. He assures our readers that the university had thirty A. B. graduates last year. Our four-line item has evidently been read, for Dr. Lawrence says, "as a result I have been flooded with applications for positions by teachers from all parts of the United States."

We hope prospective advertisers will see the significance of this kindly protest from President Lawrence. If THE BAPTIST can get results like that unintentionally, just imagine what would come if we really tried!

He Was Not A Baptist

Once upon a time there was a preacher who never made the interests of his denominational newspaper a vital part of his church program. His superintendent inquired into the matter and as a result found that the minister was selfish. He found so much good material for sermons that he hesitated to let his congregation know its source for fear that they would think that he was not original. If he had been a Baptist minister he would have made wise use of facts and figures which come week by week and have added "you will find the whole story in THE BAPTIST." On Sunday afternoon dozens of his hearers would have read the paper with new interest.

The Advantage of Not Knowing

There is a decided advantage in being uninformed. He that knoweth nothing feareth nothing and careth nothing. He that is ignorant of the crying needs of the world is not under the necessity of putting himself out to meet those needs. We have a vast number of folks who are members of our churches who know so little about the work of the denomination outside of the local church that they never give that work a moment's serious thought. This is a decided advantage if one wants to live that kind of a life. Readers of THE BAPTIST feel constrained to serve and sacrifice for His sake. When you influence a person to subscribe for the denominational journals you add to his usefulness and to his value as a man.

The removal of the historic Andover Theological Seminary to Cambridge a few years ago for affiliation with Harvard Divinity School, has now been followed by a practical amalgamation of the two schools and some significant changes in the faculties. Dr. William L. Sperry, pastor of Central Congregational Church of Boston, has been appointed dean of the new school. Daniel Evans, former Andover professor of systematic theology, will occupy the chair of Christian theology, and Henry J. Cadbury, also of the Andover faculty, is assistant professor of New Testament interpretation. William R. Arnold, still another Andover professor, succeeds Prof. David G. Lyon in the Hancock professorship. Prof. W. W. Fenn (a Unitarian), formerly dean of the Harvard Divinity School, takes the Bussey professorship of systematic theology.

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke thus describes conditions as he found them on a recent visit to Russia: "The horrors of this famine haunt the mind. Men fall dead from hunger in the streets. Whole families have perished in their homes. The bodies, stripped of every vestige of clothing—clothing is too precious to bury—have had to be disposed of by cartloads in vast common graves. Cannibalism is not unknown: the proofs are absolute. From crowded trains of refugees, traveling in goods-wagons, the bodies of victims of typhus have been day by day cast forth into the snow."

THE poll on Prohibition as conducted by the Literary Digest shows some results that deserve consideration. According to the Digest ten million ballots were distributed to voters in various states. Thus far 617,838 persons have sent in their ballots. The summary of the 617,838 ballots is as follows: those in favor of strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment or Volstead Law, 236,329; those in favor of a modification of the Volstead Law to permit light wines and beer, 253,009; those in favor of repealing the Prohibition Amendment, 128,500.

Before we analyze these returns a word may be said with reference to the questions submitted by the Digest. The first question is fair and square, but the second is misleading. It opines that the Amendment allows considerable latitude in operation, and that light wines and beer may be permitted. But the Amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and the Supreme Court has handed down a decision sustaining the law that beverages containing over one-half of one per cent of alcohol may be classed as intoxicating. Light wines and beer containing over this amount of alcohol are forbidden under the Amendment. The second question at best can refer merely to a lax or a strict interpretation of the Constitution. The third question has to do straight out with the repeal of the Amendment.

We have no means of knowing how representative these replies may be. We may assume, however, that the ballots were impartially distributed. The replies may therefore be regarded as cross sections of public opinion—specimen views of the people by all or nearly all of the ten million voters responded we might have a fair index of public opinion. But it is in this kind of a poll as in all others; those who are especially interested in a change in the law respond at once; those who are satisfied with the law fail to vote and allow the case to go by default.

Several things are suggested by all of this which may be noted. Less than one fourth of the voters want the Amendment repealed. 236,000 out of 618,000 stood for the law without change; 253,000 out of 618,000 are in favor of the Amendment but want it more liberally interpreted. There is little if any encouragement in all this for the wets. There is an overwhelming sentiment against the liquor traffic as we have known it. The old style saloon has gone to stay. There is however something in all this which should cause temperance people some anxiety. Three-fourths of our people are opposed to the liquor traffic as we have known it. But the policy of full Prohibition is not yet grounded in the conviction and life of the nation.

There lies before us as a nation a long course of education showing the evils of alcohol and the benefits of Prohibition. And there remains the even more difficult work of educating the people in respect for law and its adequate enforcement. This is the immediate task before the churches. As our social service commission has pointed out, there is a summons to the churches to be active in this educational work, to teach respect for law, to show the benefits of Prohibition, and to create a public opinion which will secure a fair and adequate enforcement of

The Incessancy of Unbelief

THE American Israelite, a weekly Jewish journal founded by Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, has an editorial (July 27) entitled "Protestant Christianity's Failure." We are not to understand that other forms of Christianity are exempt from the sweeping judgment, but rather that even Protestant, as well as Greek and Roman Catholic Christianity has failed.

The editorial referred to is occasioned by the activities of certain American Protestant movements for making the United States Christian by constitutional amendment, with the probable consequence of depriving non-Christians of their right to hold office. With any such movements we are not concerned; for we Baptists are committed to the doctrine of a free church in a free state; and the first amendment to the constitution, guaranteeing absolute religious liberty to our Jewish fellow-citizens as to ourselves, is largely the fruit of the insistent demand of Virginia Baptists who were fed up on persecution for conscience' sake. We stand side by side with the Jews in opposition to any plan for limiting that absolute liberty.

We are however very deeply concerned with this vehement and unqualified arraignment of Protestant Christianity for having utterly failed of its mission and purpose:

"There never was a time before our own when thinking men and women had as much cause for contempt of Christianity as today. It has shown itself utterly incapable of coping successfully with the passions of mankind, or of offering any solution for the great problems of the day. The time has come when it is necessary for Christianity to justify its existence in the minds of thinking people. It seems to have little, if any influence, on the daily life of men and women, and none at all in guiding the leaders in the affairs of nations."

The Israelite (whose severe judgments, by the way, seem a bit incongruous with the Hebrew ideal of godliness as summarized by the prophet Micah) a week earlier had anticipated this editorial broadside by calling for the immediate abolition of the foreign missionary enterprise: "There are those, of whom the Israelite is one, that sincerely believe that if all missions to non-Christian peoples were abandoned, neither they nor the world at large would be the losers."

Has Protestant Christianity failed? Has the time come for it to defend its very right to continue in the world? We recognize in the question a quality and temper which mark it as peculiarly a fruit of the times. What institution is immune to the same challenge in this hour of world welter and universal scepticism and despair? Democracy has failed, we are told; and Prof. Shailer Mathews, in his "Validity of American Ideals" has met and dealt with that phase of the attack on the standing order in modern civilization. The family has failed, we are told; and Bertrand Russell goes to China to lecture in her universities and coincidentally to demonstrate the strength of his conviction by living openly in very unconventional relations while there. The authority of law has failed, we are told, and the Industrious Wreckers of the World devote themselves to proving that it has failed, greatly to the discomfort of people who own property or ride on trains.

Law will abide and its beneficent authority will continue long after the Reds have all turned black in their forgotten graves. The family will survive the treachery and fury of its selfish and lustful enemies; for love and the comradeship of confidence which the family alone makes possible, are a necessity of our natures. Democracy will outlast the whirlwind of madness which now sweeps over the world; for we have tasted and found freedom sweet, and hereafter no form of slavery to man will ever suit our mood. And Christianity, evangelical Christianity, will likewise retain its place in the life of men and its power over the hearts of men. The Living Saviour Jesus Christ is veritably the Bread of Life, meeting elemental needs. Forever true through all the changing generations of men, is that word hot from the heart of Augustine, a great sinner saved by grace: "Thou movest us to delight in praising Thee; for Thou hast formed us for Thyself, and our heart is restless until it rest in Thee." So long as sin drives the soul in fear and agony to long for pardon and reconciliation; so long as pain and the tragedy of life and the grim shadow of death spare not the children of men; so long as the burden of living and the awful sense of Eternity crush us down in the dust: so long will the human heart welcome and answer the words of grace and redeeming love which come to our fainting and perplexed spirits, "Look unto Me, all; come unto Me, all—and be ye saved, and find rest for your souls."

Christianity has never seen the day when it did not have to meet the charge that it had failed. Jesus met it; Paul met it; and while sin and unbelief are in the world that flag of unbelief will still be flaunted in the face of the church of Christ. We shall not daunt its devotees by dialectic or controversy. We shall not turn alleged defeat into victory by contemptible Jew-baiting or by statutory enactments. If the hunger of a man's heart and the revelation of God's matchless love in the Cross of Christ, cannot win Jew and pagan alike to faith in our Saviour, it is futile to seek their conversion by law. We confess with sorrow and shame that the history of our so-called Christian civilization is marked by pages of monstrously unchristian policies and persecutions and pogroms. We confess that at our best we are very far from being what we think our Master wants us to be. But our best, such as it is, is his work for us and in us; and our sufficient reply to those who say that Christianity has failed, is to raise the question: what would the world have been, what would America have been, today, if Jesus Christ had never appeared in history to reveal the Father, to atone for our sin at the Cross, and to be exalted as the Living Lord and the Author of our salvation?

How God Times

A REMARKABLE coincidence which appears providential was revealed in the visit of Dr. Abernethy and Mr. Sheppard to the republic of Latvia as described in Mr. Frey's letter published this week. Two days after Secretary of State Hughes gave formal recognition to the new republic, the representatives of the Foreign Mission Society arrived to bear the fraternal greetings of American Baptists; and Dr. Abernethy was introduced to the nation as the pastor of President Harding, whose government had welcomed the little land new come out of bondage, unto the family of free republics of the world. Such a fortunate coincidence cannot fail to hearten our Baptist brethren in Latvia and to secure for Baptist principles serious consideration by the nation.

Two Aspects of the Wet Issue

THE Association Opposed to Prohibition has circulated petitions in Illinois to secure 500,000 signatures in behalf of a state-wide vote on the Volstead Law as a question of public policy. A former Chicago pastor, Dr. W. A. Bartlett, preaching to his old congregation at the First Congregational Church on August 20, denounced these petitioners as "anarchists" for their effort to discredit the authority of law.

Thereupon the Illinois president of the A. O. P. rushed into print as follows: "The half million men and women in Illinois who humbly signed our petition for a referendum on the wine and beer proposal," said Mr. Plamondon, "will undoubtedly be shocked to learn from the Rev. Dr. Bartlett, who preaches the gospel of the lowly Nazarene, how wicked they really are. All we ask is an official vote on the question of modification so that our legislators may be intelligently guided, and by the people themselves, instead of by an organized gang of paid reformers." 'Tis a touching picture, this, of humble and conscientious members of the commonwealth pleading for a return of lost liberty and deliverance from "the most condemned piece of legislation ever written into statute."

There is another side of the picture, however. In the Daily News next day appeared the following letter describing how at least a part of the 500,000 humble men and women were allowed to voice their earnest protest against the tyranny of forty-five legislatures and a dry congress: "I wish to show the way the breweries, distillers and saloonkeepers get that big petition for light wines and beers. I was sitting at the foot of 8th street, near the Illinois Central tracks, and saw a man and a woman coming through Grant park. They were passing around a petition. Every last one of the bums signed that petition and finally it got to me. The looks of them would have driven a weak minded man to drink. Their faces were bloated and their noses looked like honeycombs, and were red as fire from the drink habit. I gave them a lecture on good citizenship, and told them I would rather be shot than sign a petition to bring on more poverty and fill the jails and workhouses and insane asylums with victims and starve innocent women and children.

"Well, they crossed over north of 8th street, and so did I, and I saw every last one of the bums between there and the Art Institute sign that petition. That is one way they are getting signers."

The Losers

THE coal strike in the bituminous fields was settled August 22 after many conferences, the operators making a surrender under pressure, so they say, from the public. It is announced that coal may cost $1.50 to $2 per ton above last year's figure. The mines will be operated steadily, so the miners will recoup in part their loss of wages through the 144-day strike. The public gets the worst of it by having to pay for the strike. It is high time that the principle become established that the group which has to pay the cost of strikes and endure the hardship entailed by them, shall be recognized as an interested party in the adjustment and in the prevention of strikes. The primeval American doctrine of no taxation without representation is not yet obsolete.

A Protestant Protest

SCANDINAVIANS are not to be permitted to become Baptists, we are in effect advised, in an official communique issued to the American press by the National Lutheran Council. The issue was precipitated by an article published recently by Dr. Frederick Lynch, editor of "Christian Work" based on observations made in Scandinavia, in which he said: "Methodists and Baptists are looked upon as interlopers, and are regarded by the people as queer sects. The people cannot understand why they have come, and wonder why America sends them." Proceeding from this point the Lutheran Council challenges the right of American evangelical bodies to interest themselves in establishing their doctrines and organizing churches in Scandinavia, which is even yet ninety-nine per cent Lutheran. In the official statement before us their representative says: "The Lutheran Church is a Christian church. Doctrinally it is no doubt the most Christian of the churches . . . The Lutherans regard the Methodists, Baptists, and other American Reformed denominations [we are a bit amused to be classed doctrinally or historically with the Reformed bodies] as interlopers in Scandinavia."

It is our purpose later to give careful and courteous consideration to the issue raised by our American Lutheran brethren, in a special article prepared by an American Scandinavian Baptist in behalf of our Scandinavian fellow-members. It suffices here to present one reason for our being interested in Lutheran Scandinavia and ready to encourage and reinforce our Baptist people in the Scandinavian countries. The Lutheran, the representative journal of American Lutheranism, is publishing a series of articles on the Christian fundamentals, by Prof. A. G. Voight, who speaks as a Lutheran theologian. In one of these articles, published August 10, occurs a paragraph headed, "We believe in Baptismal Regeneration." We quote in summary from that paragraph: "In regard to baptism, the Lutheran Church . . . teaches baptismal regeneration . . . We therefore disagree fundamentally with the Baptists and others, who reject infant baptism."

With kindly consideration for all who bear the name of our Lord, but with an irrepressible conviction of our own duty to him, we affirm our right to enter any community where ninety-nine per cent of the people are controlled by an ecclesiastical system which teaches that the sacraments are the chief means of grace, that water baptism effects regeneration, and that our salvation turns upon any work wrought on us by the hand of priest or minister. For once we take our stand with Martin Luther against his professed followers, as he declares: "The law never bringeth the Holy Ghost, for the law teaches what we ought to do, therefore the law justifieth not; but the gospel bringeth the Holy Ghost, for the gospel teacheth us what we ought to receive." The very text which Prof. Voight cites in proof of his doctrine of baptismal regeneration declares that "not by any works done in righteousness, which we did ourselves, but according to his mercy he saved us." Baptism is a work, an act of obedience, the requirement of a good conscience before God. To make of it a condition of our salvation is to pervert a confessional and memorial ordinance into a savior. Where such perversion of the gospel is proclaimed we believe we should ourselves proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus. We speak this word in the spirit of gentleness and with appreciation of what Luther and his people have done for Europe. We only wish he and they had gone farther in their reaction from Rome and her monstrous heresies. We would help them on their way to that end.

Indestructible Religion

AN editorial in the New York Times says: "The words of Amiel concerning religion, printed on another page of The Times, may be pondered with profit by every reader, whatever his faith or want of it. Never before, perhaps, have nations so much needed religion as a motive and sanction, and as food for faith, hope and charity. 'Pure reason' and the 'naked truth' tell so little of ends of existence. They accompany the human spirit a little way along the road, but cannot tell where the road of human life began or whither it leads or just why the journey was begun. The ideal dwells in the region beyond the present seeing or hearing of science, and is reached only when faith leads on through the encircling gloom and furnishes the one goal that satisfies the soul of man."

"Man must ever rectify his faith by the truth that science brings. He must continue to penetrate the mystery about him. But, as Amiel wrote, he must continue to 'adore' the mystery that still remains, for when that adoration ceases and the mind's desire fails, the life of the world shrinks to the visible and the audible and the palpable whose walls are a tomb. Religion will not let man be content with such a fate. Its efficacy, as Amiel intimates, is that it carries into the realms beyond. Nothing is so much needed today in the rehabilitation of the broken world as a faith that still holds toward a higher, diviner goal than mere social and economic and political adjustment—than things that are purely physical and temporal."

The Churches and Sound Doctrine

WE are glad to find ourselves in complete accord with the conviction expressed by the Word and Way (August 24) as follows: "We cannot understand why some of our most prominent, aggressive Fundamentalists are so insistent upon sound theology and are so indifferent to, and loose concerning, a sound ecclesiology." Dr. L. R. Scarborough, president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, has also voiced this concern in a significant article appearing in the southern Baptist press. Loyalty to our uplifted Christ and obedience to his Word surely involve the nature of his church and the means of grace, no less than other truths which we account as fundamental in the Christian revelation.

For the Sake of the Name

A SPIRIT of hopefulness and confidence is manifest among the missionaries now returning to their stations in the foreign field. Dr. Henry Topping, on the eve of sailing writes from Seattle Aug. 14, enclosing a farewell letter for our columns, concerning which he says, it is "written especially to some friends who have made our return possible. But we want to make acknowledgments chiefly to THE BAPTIST, for the publicity you gave has stirred up the interest which has sent us back to our field."

We are encouraged by this letter. The principal thing THE BAPTIST desires to do is to stir up interest in the work of our uplifted Christ.

"The Havoc of Prohibition"

FROM the Rochester (N. Y.) Federation Bulletin is quoted the following:

"An article under the above title appeared in The Independent for July 8. It has shocked the friends of prohibition everywhere. People are asking why The Independent should take such an attitude. Here are some of the facts: The Independent as now issued is not The Independent of a year or so ago. It is now The Independent published by the founders of The Weekly Review, which absorbed The Independent, Oct. 1, 1921. One of the editors of this Weekly Review said to the writer within a month: 'I left The Weekly Review because it seemed to stand for just two things—hatred of prohibition and hatred of Woodrow Wilson.' It seems too bad that the name of The Independent should be so prostituted as the above named article would seem to indicate. Pass the word along, and do not allow readers of The Independent of today to confuse this paper with The Independent which for many years has stood for the best things."

The Rapture of the Forward View

By GEO. E. BURLINGAME

A WHALING ship had left port on her way to the far distant Arctic fishing grounds. Slowly the land disappeared below the horizon, and the crew settled down for the daily routine of the long and monotonous run. In idle hours a group of sailors gathered in the stern of the ship and lay across the gunwale watching the gleaming wake in the waters, looking afar to the horizon beyond which lay the shores whence they had come, dreaming of what they had left behind, their thoughts wholly of the past. In the prow another group assembled, keen of eye and alert of mind, looking steadfastly ahead or scanning the far horizon to port or starboard, already on the watch for spouting whales, and dreaming of trophies to be won, their thoughts wholly of the future.

Herein is a parable of civilization and of Christianity. Civilization will endure, and Christianity will endure, only as we who possess the institutions of civilization and the blessings of Christianity succeed in transmitting them to posterity unimpaired. The little children in our arms and the youth in our schools are the men and women of tomorrow; they are the hope of the world. We can do nothing now which will affect the history of the nineteenth century, but we can do much to affect the history of the twenty-first century. The past is utterly out of our control, but the future is ours to impress and shape through our teaching ministry to childhood and youth. If we are possessed and obsessed by "the rapture of the forward view," we shall perceive both our privilege and our obligation to our posterity, and shall align ourselves in the forward-looking group who see in the young life about us the one hope for the continuance of our free nation and our Christian Church.

Built of Human Stuff

Strange it is, indeed, that we indulge our souls in the enjoyable assurance that what we have achieved, and what we have conserved, is here to stay, is a fait accompli, a thing done for good and all; forgetting that our civilization, our institutions, our states and schools and churches, are built of human stuff and have no power of endurance, no staying qualities, apart from the men and women who build their lives

The Eternal

The current of things temporal sweeps along. But like a tree over that stream has risen our Lord Jesus Christ. He willed to plant himself as it were over the river. Are you whirled along by the current? Lay hold of the wood. Does the love of the world roll you onward in its course? Lay hold upon Christ. For you he became temporal that you might become eternal. For he was so made temporal as to remain eternal. Join thy heart to the eternity of God, and thou shalt be eternal with him.

—Augustine.

into these institutions; stupidly slow to realize that civilization passes—libraries, hospitals, schools, churches, all; unless we have been foresighted enough to provide for the continuance of them through the fidelity and virility of others who come after us and accept heirship in our spiritual estate.

Real Americans Do Not Happen

American democracy is not possessed of any immortality save that which inheres in an unbroken continuity of citizens, succeeding generation after generation to the heritage which has been vouchsafed to them by their fathers. The Constitution has no hope of living in history save the hope of being incarnated in successive generations of Americans who are willing and glad to live under the beneficent regime of it, willing to endure hardness to maintain its integrity and authority, and willing if need be to die for the defense of it. If we are to cherish any rational hope for the permanency of the republic, we must allow ourselves to be caught in the rapture of the forward view, and recognize that real Americans do not happen; they are born, and bred, and called, and disciplined by means of the vital and precious truths of liberty and democracy. We must find our place in the bow of the boat and face the future, not the past; we must give ourselves up to a lust for liberty which will set us at the task of teaching our children and youth what America cost and what she is worth and what her citizens owe to her and through her to all the world.

The school teachers of the nation have a peculiar responsibility and a high privilege in this regard. With the young they live and for the young they live; and if they are possessed by the rapture of the forward view, they may transmit to posterity that which they themselves possess of love of country, of law and order and liberty. The National Education Association, at its recent annual meeting, gave unequivocal expression to this responsibility in the adoption of the following resolution:

"The safety of the republic rests to a large degree with the teachers of the nation. We call upon teachers everywhere to teach respect for law and order and for constituted authority; to impress alike upon young and old the importance of obedience to the Constitution and to all state and national laws and to local ordinances; to teach the children that the laws are made by the majority and may be changed by the majority, but that they must be obeyed by all; and that he who disobeys the Constitution or laws is an enemy of the republic.

"We approve training in American citizenship and urge that the principles of this Government as embodied in the state and national constitutions be made an integral part of the training of every student in every school. We also urge in the interest of true Americanism that no person, unwilling to submit to these principles, be employed in the education of youth."

A Noble Ideal

Here is a noble ideal for the school teacher; and it should be our desire and prayer for every man and woman who dares to assume a place of influence and power over little children or youth in the school room, that these teachers may seek to live, not for themselves or merely for their own generation, but for the coming generation, "for the future in the distance," caught up by the rapture of the forward view. Nathan Hale, whose monument by McMonnies stands near the city hall in lower Manhattan, was sent, a lad of twenty, by General Washington into New York to penetrate behind the British lines and secure some needed information. As he returned, and within a few steps of safety, he was caught, and was sentenced to be shot as a spy. His last words might well be placarded on the wall of every American school house, and written in the heart of every school-boy and girl: "My only regret is that I have but one life to give for my country." If the nation for which he died in the hour of its birth is to endure and prove worthy of his sacrifice, and of many like sacrifices in its history, we must see to it that our children understand and love and believe in American democracy before we have to leave them with its destiny in their hands.

A Rich Heritage

The Kingdom of God, vital and potent as it is in the world today, has no adequate assurance of continuance in the history of mankind save as we who love it and live for it and incarnate it in our own time, also sense our own responsibility for transmitting it to our posterity through faithful teaching and tireless witnessing to our children and youth. To a certain extent at least, it is true that in every church there are the two groups, more or less sharply differentiated: those who ride in the stern of the boat and those who ride in the bow; those whose faces are ever to the rear, who are concerned chiefly with great traditions and past glories and present acquisitions, indifferent and blind to all the promise and glory of childhood and youth in the world about them which is destined of God to take in time all that we now control. And there are those who live always, not for the past, glorious though it is and grateful though we are for it; nor for the present, measurably satisfying though it may possibly be for the time; but who live always under the sweet compulsion, the dominating obsession, of the rapture of the forward view, ordering their lives and accepting their opportunities and making their glad sacrifices with the controlling purpose to secure our rich heritage intact to posterity and to persuade posterity to receive it as a priceless gift of God.

George Meredith was powerfully influenced by this profound sense of obligation to posterity. In one of his letters concerning his own writings he thus recorded his attitude to the future: "I think that all right use of life and the one secret of life, is to pave ways for the firmer footing of those who succeed us." What a noble principle for the guidance of every parent and every teacher, and also every citizen and every church trustee and deacon: "to pave ways for the firmer footing of those who succeed us!" They are coming along after us, divinely destined to succeed us, they will soon be standing in our places, holding our offices, casting our votes, signing our checks; will they also be partaking of our bread at the Supper, and continuing our ministry of intercession at the Throne, and assuming our pledges for the maintenance of the church and its missionary enterprises? Not unless, in some larger way than we are now doing, we give ourselves to teaching and training and winning to faith and enlisting in service these little people and these lads and lassies who so soon will come into their inheritance and succeed to our vacated places in industry and society and state and church.

Master of All Worlds

For us at least there is no question that the world has a Master and that he knows his own business. That is a fundamental truth of our religion. If that is insecure nothing else can stand. Well! if we honestly believe this, we must have the courage to live by it and to act upon it. God is Master, and neither man nor devil possesses delegated power to manage God's world for him. His hands are not palsied, his wisdom is not defective. He is still at work, and he knows how to manipulate human action, whether it be wise or unwise, in the interests of that grand end for the universe which his love has set itself.

—Frederic C. Spurr,
"The Master Key."

Is it an ideal utterly unattainable, or hardly desirable, which is presented for the people of God in the words of Moses to Israel as recorded in Deuteronomy, wherein he commands the fathers and mothers to become the teachers of their little ones and so secure to them the precious heritage of truth and grace, of history and of promise, in which God had revealed himself to them?

"Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6:4-9)

What a nation we would be, and what a Kingdom God would have, if this ideal had been cherished and realized continuously and progressively from the birth of Christianity to this day. What an increment of power will come to our existing Christianity even now if we will accept and fulfill this conception of our duty to our children and to the youth of the community: so impregnating our family life and our school life with the radiant testimony to the holiness and love of God as to make it inevitable that those who follow us shall find the way more easily and walk in it more steadfastly. For this ideal of a Godly family life involves the selection of all the elements which enter into the creation of the atmosphere of the home and the social activities of the children, with a view to their learning God's way of salvation, and his will for his people. This ideal involves also the positive and pitiless rejection of every element which, however popular and however fascinating, cannot justify itself as a necessary or helpful influence in the promotion of Christian faith and character and service in the lives of our growing boys and girls.

The Glory of the Work

Herein lies the glory of the work of teaching the truth as it is in Jesus; and herein is the compelling appeal for our consecration to this work and our preparation for it. The call of Christ to this high service goes out to every actual and potential worker with children and youth: to the mother cradling in loving arms her firstborn baby; to the timid young teacher in her first country school; to the workers with boys and girls in the Sunday school and the young people's societies and the guilds; to the leaders of groups of young folks in the Young Men's and the Young Woman's Christian Associations; to Scoutmasters and Campfire leaders; to the noble army of men and women who have consecrated themselves to the ministry of teaching in our Christian academies and colleges; and to all the others everywhere of that vast army who deal with youth in its plastic and amenable forms.

One's heart thrills at the thought of what those workers can do for America, the world, the Kingdom of God, through the next generation, if they will give themselves to the blessed task of paving ways for the firmer footing of those who succeed us, loving them, living for them, sacrificing for them, keeping life clean and sweet and simple and trustworthy, for their sakes: to the end that they may take over from us all that we ourselves possess of truth and light and testimony, and make it their own with a passionate devotion kindled from our own hearts.

And with what sorrow do we consider the shameful tragedy of open or covert disloyalty to Jesus Christ and his gospel on the part of any of these workers with children and youth, who leave the commandment of God and hold fast the tradition of men; who are concerned more for the scholarship of their pupils than for their salvation; who covet earnestly the latest hypotheses but covet not the best gifts, faith and hope and love as the fruits of the Spirit of Christ in their hearts; who disdain and discredit that unspeakable gift of God which has made our nation all that we are of good; and who deny the authority and the deity of our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ. We commend to the readers of this article the straightforward and hearty avowal of the board of education contained in the report of that body to the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis. It constitutes a fresh challenge to every teacher and officer in our Baptist colleges and seminaries to yield themselves to the transcendent task of bringing God into the thinking and experience of their students through a personal experience of salvation in Christ Jesus. It carries within it a confession of faith for teachers, by which every teacher may measure himself and by which he may be measured.

"The board of education has often pointed out to the schools themselves and to our constituency the imperative necessity that our schools should be Christian not merely in name but even more in the character of their faculty, the spirit of their environment, and the impression which they make upon the student body. Much depends upon the teachers themselves. We repeat with emphasis what we have frequently asserted before, that our schools should give first consideration to the Christian character of their teachers. If by their character, their attitude or their teaching they are in any way compromising the Christian influence of the institution, they should be invited to depart. Difficult as it often is to secure the right kind of teachers, trustees and officers should rest content with no teachers who are not earnestly and actively Christian. Our Christian schools have only one excuse for their appeal for students, one excuse for their appeal for large funds and that is that under Christian teachers, in an environment that is Christian they are able to give an education that is Christian in spirit and in passion, and that sends forth men and women who have caught the spirit of their Master."

There is exquisite joy, and reward "rich beyond the dreams of avarice." in any work for little people and with youth which undertakes to secure to them intact our precious heritage of civil and spiritual liberty. In such work we are building our own selves, our very souls, into the future life of the race, and so exerting a lasting influence upon human society. Meredith writes these pregnant lines of inspiration to the men and women of today concerning service in behalf of the men and women of tomorrow:

"Full lasting is the song,
Though he the singer passes;
Lasting too,
For souls not lent in usury,
The rapture of the forward view."

If we can but learn, while there is yet time, how sweet it is to give ourselves unselfishly and sacrificially to the winning of youth for loyal American citizenship and for heroic Christian faith and service, we shall not care to invest life as a loan, even with heavy usury, for transitory ends.

When Somebody Cares

The greatest gift that is given to us
Is to know that somebody cares,
Hardships may come as we know they must

But still to know somebody cares;
We can bear our share of pain and strife,
We can conquer the hardest battles of life;
And know that at last things will be all right,

If we just know that somebody cares.

We can strive to the top of Life's highest hill

When somebody cares,
We can meet defeat to be unconquered still
When somebody cares.
For the goal to strive for is not the one,
For a life of riches, of ease and fun;
But just to know when our day is done
That somebody cares.

There's never a loss will seem as great
When somebody cares,
We can bear the sorrow, the sting of hate
When somebody cares.
We'll never think that all is lost,
We'll straighten our shoulders and bear the worst,
And pay for life, whatever the cost
When somebody cares.

For there seems no use of life unless

Somebody cares,
No use to struggle or win success

If there's no one to care;
For the greatest joy that life can bring,
Is not the possession of worldly things:
But to know that whatever the years may bring—

Somebody cares.

The Secret of Life

By B. D. MARTIN

The mountains of the sky ride down
Toward the setting sun,
A wind bestirs the thoughtful trees,
Another day is done.

Of had I pondered in my mind
The secret of our worth;
Why some men's deeds die with the day,
And some outlive their birth.

Then, as I watched the setting sun,
I heard a whispering tree—
"A man may live his life in terms Of God's Eternity."

—Selected.

Companionship

No distant lord have I,
Loving afar to be;
Made flesh for me, He cannot rest
Until He rests in me.

Brother in joy and pain,
Bone of my bone was He.
Now,—intimacy closer still,—
He dwells Himself in me.

I need not journey far
This dearest friend to see,
Companionship is always mine,
He makes His home with me.

I envy not the twelve;
Nearer to me is He;
The life He once lived here on earth
He lives again in me.
Ascended now to God,
My witness there to be,
His witness here am I, because His spirit dwells in me.

O glorious Son of God,
Incarnate Deity,
I shall forever be with thee
Because thou art with me.

Some Essential Elements of a Progressive Program of Religious Education

By E. LEROY DAKIN

JESUS was a master teacher. He has been called the "unexampled Rabbi." The greater part of his ministry was given to teaching. His aims and purposes were impossible of achievement apart from intelligent understanding. The church of Jesus Christ, if she is to be true to herself, must give the same place and put the same emphasis upon education in her ministry as was given it by her Lord in his. This is only another way of saying that education is the fundamental function of the church. Every pastor, therefore, as a faithful undershepherd, must build his plans for the local church around a comprehensive educational program, designed to meet as adequately as possible both the needs of the members of the church and all the reachable folk of the community.

Because the educational function of the local church is primary and fundamental, all its resources must be capitalized for this ministry. The whole body of believers must give itself to this task. The church must be carefully organized for this ministry, and responsibility delegated to a committee or board for carrying it on. Care must be taken, however, to secure an abiding consciousness on the part of the church that this ministry is not the function of the pastor or a board to which it may be delegated, but of the church as a whole. The committee or board responsible for the performance of this function of the church should be made up of the most intellectually alert and spiritually competent folk to be found in its entire membership.

The Jesus Point of View

In practically all our churches this task is the privilege and responsibility of the folk who are officers and teachers in the Sunday school. I want therefore, to set down for your consideration a brief outline of some of the things that ought, in my judgment, to be included in a progressive program of religious education. Before we talk program, however, let me say that we must do our work from what I like to call the Jesus point of view. Our purpose must be so to present the facts and truths of Christianity as to secure that first the church, and then the community, shall be dominated by the motives and ideals of Jesus, and absorbed in carrying out the projects of the Kingdom of local church is the process by which the God. In other words, education in the members aid one another in coming to share the richest religious experience possible for them through their fraternal cooperation in helping to bring others, young and old, into a deliberate, intelligent, and happy participation in the functions, relations, and activities of the Christian life. Our aim therefore includes: Evangelism, Training, and Service.

The Evangelistic aim involves giving every individual, at every stage of his personal development, the knowledge and inspiration and training of his will, that will secure for him a complete religious experience as a growing, spiritual being. It seeks to establish such personal relations between every individual and God as will make for their highest religious development. All our ministry is to no purpose if we fail to establish personal relations between the individual and the Saviour—personal relations of love, confidence, and obedience.

Our Training aim must also be kept constantly before us. Part of our task, and an important part, is the training of all the members of the church for efficient Christian work. It is the function of the church both to express Jesus' view of life and to carry out his program. It must both perpetuate itself and make itself efficient as an interpreter and promoter of the cause of Christ in the world. The church, therefore, must discover and train its own leaders. The type of leadership we are to have in the future, both in the pulpit and the mission field, in the home community and in the ranks of the church itself, is straight up to the church. In fact, the church of today is actually creating the church of tomorrow.

Education for Life

CHILDREN must not be brought up for themselves nor for their parents. We must bring them up for life. Their education has for aim to aid them to become active members of humanity, powerful brotherhoods, free servants of the city. It is to complicate life, deform it, sow the germs of all the disorders, to put in practice an education which is inspired by any other principle.

—Charles Wagner.

Our educational program, if complete, must include the Service aim. The Christian is a social being. His life is lived in social relations. Jesus' program looked to the redemption of society, as well as of the individual, because he recognized that the two are essentially one. The Kingdom of God was the phrase he used to express his ideal of human society, a society in which men live as brothers because they each sustain a vital personal relation to God as Father. His ideal society is one in which a perfect democracy functions on the highest level of morality because it is based upon a foundation of spiritual ideals and motives, operating dynamically in and through the individual. It is a progressive society driven forward and determined in its life by folk who have had a personal experience, an experience in which Jesus has become to them a personal Saviour and Lord. Our church program of education must be such as will lead the individual Christian out into the life of the modern world for vital, dynamic, creative living.

An honest attempt to meet these demands will include as a minimum:

First, the shaping up of a comprehensive school program, in which provision is made first of all for the need of all the members of the church.

In the second place, the program ought to have in mind the needs of all the unchurched people of the community, men and women, as well as boys and girls. The quality of our program and the spirit in which it is promoted ought to reinforce one another in the appeal they make to the community. Let us not suppose, however, that we have fulfilled all our obligations when we have promoted an adequate program for our Sunday school.

Religious Illiterates

Thirdly, one of the finest opportunities for religious education to be found anywhere is presented in connection with the high school Bible study credit courses. Our young people of high school age give themselves eagerly to these Bible study courses. Failure to take advantage of this opportunity opened to us by our public schools seems to me little short of criminal. The great weakness of the church today is in that we are dealing with a generation of religious illiterates. The coming generation will be little better off unless we do more than we have done. This pressing need demands that wherever possible we should not content ourselves with the enlargement and development of our Sunday-school program, and take advantage of such opportunities as are afforded through high school credit courses, but should also promote special week-day schools or classes, wherever possible.

Our Sunday-school program at its best is wholly inadequate. If we are to do more than we are doing towards securing a Christian community in the days ahead, we must give ourselves immediately to the task of supplementing our present program by week-day instruction.

Beside all this, our year's program ought to look forward to a happy and efficient climax, so far as our children are concerned, in a well planned and carefully conducted Vacation School. The regular ministry of the church gives opportunity for training and service for our older boys and girls, as well as adults, but the Vacation School gives a unique and most needed opportunity for the training of the younger children in those religious activities and habits of service which are vital and essential to real Christian character.

In our training program four things should be included. First, and perhaps most important, the training class, meeting regularly every Sunday in connection with the Sunday-school service. This class should be composed of the choicest young people of the church. I recommend for the average church the adoption of the Standard Teacher Training Course as a study for this class. I think it is best that young people should not be allowed to enter this course until they have graduated from the senior department of the Sunday school and have completed at least the second year of high school.

Emergency Teachers

Secondly, let us not forget our constant need of new teachers and substitutes. Until we have trained workers for all our classes we shall have to depend upon volunteer adult workers who have not had the advantages of the training class. Organize an adult class for men and women, picked from the congregation, to serve as teachers. We owe it to our school and to folk who are willing to do

A Great Day for Esthonian Baptists

By ADAM PODIN

The Esthonian Republic

AFTER all the difficulties in the way of starting our Baptist Seminary in Esthonia had been removed and the Government sanction was in my possession, March 5 was appointed as the day for the public opening. The school had been in session since the first of February with eight earnest young men and four women students, but the public ceremony filled the hearts of all with hope and joy. We had to suspend regular lessons four days because we had so much to do arranging for the festival and decorating the church and the seminary. Invitations were sent all over the land and beyond.

The long expected day, a day of joy and gladness, will always stand out in the history of our Esthonian land and Baptist church. On that day the train brought over a hundred delegates and friends to rejoice with us. After they had taken refreshments in the seminary, served by the students, a procession was arranged. Three flags, the American, British and Esthonian, headed the procession, followed by a brass band, then all the principal leaders, then the delegates and honored guests. Never before in our country have an English and an American flag united with an Esthonian one in leading such a procession.

"Our Soul is Escaped"

When we arrived at the church the doors were shut and we were afraid we could not find room. From the church steps Pastor Laas, one of our oldest ministers who had so often been imprisoned for the Gospel's sake, led the singing of "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," accompanied by the brass band. The huge crowd joined in the hymn. Then he read Psalm 124, the three flags being displayed over his head. At the close the door of the church was opened and the band led the way inside where places had by that time been arranged for all delegates and special guests. Soon the church was over-filled and no more room could be found. Many had to go away.

When all was in order the three flags were placed over the pulpit, the American flag on the right, the English on the left and the Esthonian in the middle. President Harding's picture was hung under the American flag and that of Dr. Rushbrooke under the English flag. Under such circumstances I opened the glorious and remarkable meeting with a hymn, prayer and then the festival sermon.

I read Psalm 146, explaining that the people of Israel after they were delivered from the Babylonian captivity could once more assemble in the temple and as a free nation join in praises to God, the God of their father Jacob. The history of Israel, I said, is the history of the Esthonian Baptist church. About forty-two years ago the Spirit of God visited our land. Some Swedish brethren were used as the instruments for a revival. They were not Baptists but they were very earnest Christians. The Spirit of God laid hold of some of our men and women and after reading the Bible they found salvation and were baptized. From that very time persecution began on the part of the Greek as well as the Lutheran church. Several of our delegates who were sitting under those three flags enjoying full freedom were not only once but many times imprisoned and put in chains for the Gospel's sake. We were also persecuted by the Russian Government at the bidding of those churches. I gave the history of my own church. Meetings were forbidden. Sunday schools closed, the church turned into soldiers' barracks and later into a Russian Orthodox church where our tenderest feelings were wounded by the setting up of dead idols and the practicing of superstitious ceremonies in our sight. This was a picture of our churches in Esthonia. How did the freedom come and from whom? It came from our God. Disorder took place in Russia through which the power of the superstitious church was broken and our enemies and the enemies of the Divine Truth were dispersed, persecuted and often killed by their own people. After a time the old serpent lifted its head in a different form but the sons of Esthonia paid the price, shed their blood and bought freedom with their lives. Then the Esthonian Government separated the church from the state and gave religious freedom to all citizens.

At that point I was interrupted. The whole congregation rose and the master of the ceremonies, Pastor Mohl, asked us to sing the Esthonian national hymn, in memory of our dead who had fallen on the battle field for our freedom and in recognition of the religious freedom granted by our Government. At the same time the Esthonian flag was waved to and fro. Then I continued. Now, I said, we had our religious freedom but our land had been ravaged and despoiled by war and living is very expensive. We could never have opened a Seminary for our preachers. But the American Baptist brethren sent their representative, Dr. Charles Brooks, here two years ago. He saw our poverty and our need and arranged with other Baptist boards and assemblies, especially the Canadian and British, to stretch hands of practical love over the ocean and help their younger brothers in Esthonia to secure their own Seminary. We had only a few thousand church members in Esthonia but in the United States several million Baptist church members worship as we do and these people all join us in spirit.

Ovation to President Harding

Again I was interrupted and Pastor Mohl asked the congregation to sing the American national hymn while the large American flag was waved over the picture of President Harding. Then I described the help we had received from the English nation both during and after the war, telling how the English have helped us to stand today as a nation that has its own rights and rules its own land. I could not go on, for the whole congregation rose and sang the English national anthem while the Union Jack was waved over the picture of Dr. Rushbrooke as the representative of all the English friends who had helped us to see such a day.

Professor Schmidt was the next speaker, telling about the need for our Seminary and illustrating his subject from the Bible and our own church history. Next the

Why Southern Baptists Overturned the Columbia Slate

Dr. John E. White interprets the action of the convention at Jacksonville on the Columbia memorial.

Dr. John E. White of South Carolina has a statement in the Biblical Recorder, (August 9) setting forth the "inside story" of the action taken by the Southern Baptist Convention on the Columbia Conference memorial. Dr. White was chairman of the committee of eighteen members appointed to advise the Convention concerning the disposition of this memorial. The committee included among others W. P. Throgmorton of Illinois, E. B. Hatcher of Mississippi, A. U. Boone of Tennessee, and J. W. Porter of Kentucky. The Convention adopted the report of Dr. White's committee, and declined to accept the recommendations of the Columbia Conference. In the portion here quoted Dr. White tells why:

"This Conference at Columbia, Mo., of prominent brethren and one sister, evolved two requests:

1. For a committee of nine from the Southern Convention to form with a similar committee of the Northern Convention, a joint committee on matters of comity. Our committee declined that proposal because no one could show any real occasion for such a new agency and because the brethren from Missouri and Illinois, where there have been controversies over alignment as between the two Conventions, showed us that these issues had already been decided by the Baptist people of these sections in their State Conventions, and therefore the Southern Baptist Convention had no rights of supervision in the premises. So far as I can recall, our committee, of which the editor of the Recorder was a member, was utterly disinclined to enter that field of trouble.

2. The Columbia Conference requested a committee of nine from the Southern Convention to join with a similar committee of the Northern Convention in the preparation of a general doctrinal statement which would be submitted to the two conventions for approval and proclamation. This proposition was discussed at length. Two members of our committee had been also members of the Columbia Conference. They were there to urge the adoption of the Columbia idea and its recommendation to the convention. Our committee voted against doing so. The convention voted against doing so with no disposition for discussion. The reasons for this decisive course I will now state.

Not Hunting Trouble

First. The call for a creedal statement was urged on the ground that the Northern Baptist Convention needed it because it was in trouble and though Southern Baptists didn't need it we ought to go to their rescue. But the Northern Baptist Convention had not indicated in any way that it desired our assistance to compose their quarrel. Our committee naturally sensed the courtesy of the situation and did not feel willing to bring about what would have been of the nature of an overture offering our good offices to settle their quarrel without having been invited to do so.

Second. Our committee was however informed that the Columbia Conference included representatives of both factions of the Northern Convention and that they were agreed that a creedal statement, such as was proposed, was desired. Members of our committee had doubts about that.

In the light of what happened at Indianapolis it should be as clear as the sun in the heavens that the Northern Convention would have rejected our good offices very positively. What a lamentable spectacle the Southern Baptist Convention would have then presented! That anybody can now regret that we did not expose ourselves to that humiliation and its consequent ill effects, I do not understand at all. I can almost see it printed before my eyes—the response our committee of nine would have received from the Indianapolis Convention. "Your fraternal willingness to join with us in a Creedal Commission, which we understand the Southern Baptist Convention does not regard as necessary on its own but on our account, is duly appreciated. In response we beg to say that in accordance with the immemorial attitude of our people, the Northern Baptist Convention does not feel free to join with the proposition of the Columbia Conference for the production of a Conventional Creed for American Baptists. We prefer to hold fast to the fundamental sentiment that has prevailed in the conscience of Baptists in this country up to this time, and will continue to affirm that the New Testament is an all sufficient ground of our faith and practice and as a Convention we need no other."

That is about the way we would have gotten it—in the neck.

Third. Our committee at Jacksonville declined this proposal of the Missouri Conference for these and still another reason. We did not believe the constitution [should this read "constituency"? Editor] of the Southern Baptist Convention would stand for the Convention's assumption of creed-making authority. There is a Baptist dead line of creeds in the mass conscience of Southern Baptists, and it runs somewhere this side of the big organization we call the Southern Baptist Convention.

Call it by what names you will—doctrinal statement, confession of faith, whenever it is set down and proclaimed in orderly articles it is a creed and for purposes ecclesiastical it is a test of fellowship. Baptist churches have their creeds, of course they do, but they call them Articles of Faith. Baptist churches have never seemed to know how to administer their formal creeds, and they do not mean much in actual effect, perhaps because they have an ingrained genius for taking the New Testament as a rather intelligent and intelligible pronouncement on the Truth as it is in Christ and as the Apostles got it from him by the Holy Spirit, and so do not set much store by them. As for Baptist history on this subject it runs one way—and that way against ecclesiastical over-lordship in making interpretations of the New Testament for any man who can read it and interpret it for himself. The fathers of the Southern Baptist Convention made a pronouncement to that effect concerning its dealing with confessions of faith—at the very outset in 1845. Of that particular brand of Baptists who established our churches in North and South Carolina—the Sandy Creek Association—Dr. W. J. McGlothlin says they "rejected all creeds and stood on their interpretation of the Word of God." The Philadelphia confession never had ecclesiastical authority behind it. The Philadelphia Association never adopted it. The New Hampshire Confession never ran the gauntlet of the New Hampshire Convention or Association. I wonder why. Probably because Baptists then and now in their rank and file feel deeply and invincibly that there must be a dead line for Baptists in creed making.

When Southern Baptists, in a misguided hour, shall launch out over that line—then, instead of unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, will come the day of bitterness, strife, and disintegration."

The Middle of the Road

By MRS. GEORGE M. THOMAS

I am not much on education
Never had a real vocation
Couldn't make an attestation
As to rhythm of an ode
But as to religious training
Without quibble or proud feigning
I am zealously remaining
In the middle of the road."

On the right I view the heights
Only scaled by learning's flights
Elevated walls of "rights"
In Conservatism's Code
On the left the depths I see Radical expression free
"Lord" I pray—"just let me be
In the middle of the road."

When Christ said "Come unto me,
Let me all your burdens see
I will hope and comfort be,
And I gladly take your load"
He didn't say "Just climb the steeps"
Or "With your load come through the depths"
With loving arms outstretched He keeps
In the middle of the road.

And when doubts and fears beset
And with sorrow cheeks are wet
To my trembling knees I get
In the house of my abode
Soon I know that He does hear,
For I feel Him drawing near
There He is to greet and cheer
In the middle of the road.

Little children, well He knew Could never climb heights, steep and new Nor dig in depths for teachings true
No matter what the goad;
So when He said "suffer them"
He meant his love He'd proffer them
And His dear arms He'd offer them
In the middle of the road.

So now, with Jesus standing there,
Our tears, our joys, our hopes to share,
Our heaviest burdens, too, to bear
Just to ease our earthly load;
Why can't we Baptists now forsake
The heights and depths, and, for His sake,
With Him to guide, forever take
Just the middle of the road.

The International Baptist Seminary

By PRESIDENT FRANK L. ANDERSON

IT HAS been a year of laying foundations for the larger service which the seminary is inevitably destined to render in the training of leaders who will help Christianize and Americanize the millions of foreigners now in America, as well as help in the Christianization of their own peoples in Europe.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society has invested approximately a quarter of a million dollars in the buildings and grounds now used for the purposes of the seminary. This property is in splendid repair. During the year there have been sixty-one students, resident and non-resident, distributed as follows: Roumanian, 4; Italian, 9; Hungarian, 9; Czechoslovak, 6; Polish, 9; Russian, 20; Special, 4.

The Spanish-American department at Los Angeles has had twelve students enrolled. This makes seventy-three students in all the departments. Ten men and women have given full time on the faculty besides five in the Spanish-American department giving full or part time and four have been assisting the heads of the several departments.

It is almost impossible to speak with scientific precision about the quality of the work done by the students in the classes because we are still in the process of standardization. But this we can say that the marks of progress on the part of old and new students have been in the main satisfactory. There is in most of the students an enthusiasm for education that is exceedingly encouraging.

Thinking Internationally

Apart from the regular class-room tasks the faculty is of the opinion that the series of six lecture entertainments given by the six departments have been of unique educational value. Each department was responsible for the program using its own initiative in selecting the speakers and entertainers. The lecture and entertainment purposed to interpret the history, ideals, and customs of the nationality to which the department belongs. The students and faculty were helped to appreciate the struggles and achievements of the six nationalities in the school. The series was a great harmonizer of the student body. Nationalism was helped to feel and to think internationally. Each nationality learned to appreciate all the others. The series was a great success and the committee of the faculty, of which Dr. Mangano was chairman, should be congratulated for the real contribution made to the education of the students and even of the faculty.

The deep religious spirit has been evident throughout the year. Each national group has its daily prayer and devotional meeting conducted in the language of the department. Chapel services have been conducted daily in the English language. Students have from time to time had general prayer meetings in English.

The teaching has been characterized as religious in spirit and in motive. No subject is treated as outside the sphere of religion. The atmosphere of the school is one of healthy, deep, exultant spirituality.

The students have practical experience in field work in missions and churches under the supervision and direction of the head of the department. This keeps the

Foreword

For many years The American Baptist Home Mission Society has been engaged in missionary work among the foreign-speaking groups in the United States. In 1913 the society established a Hungarian Baptist training school in Scranton and also in Chicago a Slavic training school. Two years later the Russian Bible Institute was opened in New York City. In 1920 the society began in Los Angeles, a school for Spanish-speaking workers, now the Spanish-American department of the International Baptist Seminary. In 1907, an Italian school for preachers was opened in Brooklyn by Colgate Theological Seminary.

The society decided in 1919 to combine these schools if possible, bringing all these departments except the Spanish-American at Los Angeles, to East Orange, N. J. During the first year of actual work, 1920-1921, three departments had their home at East Orange—the Russian, Hungarian, and Polish. In the fall of 1921, the Czechoslovakian school and the Italian school moved to East Orange, and a new Roumanian department was started.

The fine buildings and equipment of this International Baptist Seminary were made possible by a gift of Mr. Rockefeller to the Home Mission Society at the time this movement was contemplated.

A board of trustees has been organized, representing The American Baptist Home Mission Society, other missionary organizations which are interested in this work, and especially the Baptist associations of the different foreign groups for which the seminary exists.—Charles L. White, Exec. Sec'y, Home Mission Society.

student in constant touch with his own people—an absolute necessity. The Christian spirit is the outstanding characteristic of the school as it should be.

Inasmuch as a great deal of the work of the foreign-speaking pastor is done among those who have little or no knowledge of the English language, it is essential that those who are to be the leaders among their own people shall know how to use their own language accurately. Not only must he know the language of his people, but he must be familiar with his nation's history and literature. The head of each department is therefore responsible for the instruction and training of his group in these important subjects. This includes the study of grammar, the writing of themes, the study of the history of literature (with text-book), the reading of selected works, and reports on such books as may be assigned for reading.

Work in the Mother Tongue

Most of the work in the Old and New Testament is done in the native tongues of the various nationalities. This means that the men who are sent out by the seminaries will have an intimate knowledge of the Bible in their own language. While problems of introduction, authorship, date, scope, and interpretation of difficult passages are features of these courses, the chief end sought is the mastery of the contents of each book. When a student has completed these courses he is expected to have a definite idea of the main points presented in each book, all of which is an essential part of his preparation for the study of Christian doctrine.

One of the important functions of the heads of the various departments is the preparation of their particular groups intellectually and spiritually for the meeting of the problems that are unique to the foreign-speaking churches. This is accomplished in the class room and on the field of actual service. Each student is expected during his course to have had some practical experience in the conduct of the various phases of church work under the supervision of the head of his department.

We hope to be able to accommodate about ten additional students this coming year. The heads of the department expect about twenty new students. This means that some men cannot be admitted next October. It is evident by 1923 we shall need a new dormitory.

In closing I would express my gratitude to God for his leadership throughout the year in the work of the seminary and praying that we, faculty and students, may have that same guidance during the year before us.

The Evangelicals in Germany

AT THE July meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, an official message was received from the newly formed German Evangelical Church Federation in response to the message of good-will authorized by the executive committee of the Federal Council at its meeting last December. The message from the German churches giving interesting sidelights on the present situation, reads in part as follows:

"Dear Brothers in Christ:

"On Ascension Day, 1922, at the grave of Martin Luther in Wittenberg the city of the Reformation, the document creating the German Evangelical Church Federation was solemnly signed. Thereby the task which was begun in 1919 and 1921 in the church conferences at Dresden and Stuttgart has been completed. Thereby the wish of German evangelical Christianity, which recognized the seriousness of the present hour, and which sought to clasp hands in united service of the heavenly King, has been fulfilled. We pray that God may bless our work and that through it we may have added faith and brotherly love manifested among us.

"We heartily thank you for the friendly expression of your readiness to enter into a relation of economical cooperation with the German churches. We are certain that the mutual contact of our two great

A Child and Her Saviour

A contribution to the study of the psychology of religion.

EDITOR'S NOTE: A few months ago a twelve-year-old country girl in a middle-west town was converted during a series of meetings conducted by an evangelist of the Home Mission Society. Her spiritual development in testimony, prayer, and a changed life, was very rapid and remarkable in view of her age and the fact that her parents were not Christians.

The story which follows is in the form of a personal letter written by herself unaided, at the request of the evangelist and with no thought on the part of the girl that it would ever be published. The naive and frank recital of her spiritual experiences is a mark of the genuineness of the document. Her letter is here given exactly as she wrote it, save for a few minor corrections in spelling and punctuation, one or two elisions, and changes to preserve anonymity.

This story of a child and her Saviour is printed as a testimony to the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, as an encouragement to those who work with young children, and as a contribution to the study of the psychology of religion. We venture the suggestion that if Christian people would believe more heartily in the necessity and the possibility of the conversion of children, there would be more children converted and enlisted early in active service for their Master. This young girl in the few months since her own conversion has had a joyous and fruitful time in personal witnessing and soul-winning among those of her own age. She was asked to write to an eleven-year-old girl in another town, whom she had never seen; and as a consequence the girl was shortly afterward converted and received for baptism. It is to this girl that she refers in her letter, as W—.

Dear Mr.—
I let my pastor read your letter. I told him I thought you had given me a pretty hard task, but now the more I think of it the easier it is. It is much easier to write about my life as a Christian than any other part.

I cannot remember very far back in my life of darkness, but one thing I can remember is that I always dreaded and despised Satan. Even though I did not like him, I let him get a firmer grasp on me every day. At times I wanted to be a Christian. I knew that I was wicked, and the only way to get out of it I thought was to be good, not to use slang words, and be as good as a person possibly can be. I would try these rules, when I thought of being cast into a fire (I had been told of this by one of my aunts). Being good with me at that time, was just for a few minutes, and then all thoughts of fire Satan and God passed out of my mind, and I was the same wicked girl.

I used to say my prayers before I went to sleep, but they meant nothing to me, they were just a group of words put together to form a sentence, and the sentence to form a prayer; I said them as a matter of religion. I didn't see how God could answer prayers being as far off as I was, I knew he was listening but of what use was that, he could do nothing to help me, he was not on earth to do the things I asked of him. Mother would send me to Sunday school when the weather was warm, but Sunday school was the same to me as prayers, a matter of religion. When I was eleven I went to Sunday school and church, steady that was when the weather was warm. The sermons that the preacher rendered never drew my attention very much, the only thing that interested me was what the people wore and how they acted, which when I got home I would criticize. Many times during the weeks of that year my temper and tongue would take full possession of me. It was hurled at father, mother, sister or brother, or whoever the offender might be. I never could take a joke, and at times when one happened to strike me as being too personal the sender would get full benefit of my hot temper and sharp tongue.

Christ For Me!

My heart is fixed, eternal God, fixed on thee,
And my immortal choice is made,
Christ for me?
He is my Prophet, Priest, and King,
Who did for me salvation bring,
And while I've breath I mean to sing,
Christ for me.

Now who can sing my song and say,
Christ for me.
My life, and truth, my light and way,
Christ for me?
Can you old men and women there,
With furrowed cheeks and silvery hair,
Now from your inmost soul declare,
Christ for me?

Can you, young men and maidens, say
Christ for me!
His will I love, and him obey,
Christ for me!
Then here's my heart and here's my hand,
We'll form a little singing band,
And shout aloud throughout the land,
Christ for me!

—RICHARD WEAVER.

Toward the end of my eleventh year, I began to get interested in the Bible. At that time many questions were in my mind, "Why was Jesus hung on the Cross?" and such questions as that. Very soon I turned from the Bible to story books. I had been reading novels ever since I was ten; they held a great interest for me, while I was reading them, but after finding all about the book, of the many splendid things that were pictured out to me, I would turn from my book not to find such things; then would come to my mind the question, "What is the use of living? In the end you will go to the Devil or God and that will be the end of you." After reading the novels, I would have the idea that no one cared for me, not even mother, I used to get myself in some very serious trouble in this manner. In my twelfth year I continued on the same way, until about in February, then I begin to see I was in need of some one, my life seemed lonely. Each Sunday morning after my brother had gone to church, I would read the Bible. I started in Genesis, I did not get very far before I could not understand it, or keep all of the kings apart. During the two months of February and March my heart seemed to grow heavier than it was before, I could feel every beat it made. My heart according to my imagination was black what made it black I don't know. Those two months I believe were the hardest I ever lived in want.

Then in April the Evangelistic Campaign broke out. The first meeting I was to was April the 18th. When you talked to me after meeting, I had a vague idea of my want of someone during the meeting, but when you talked to me afterwards I suddenly awoke to the realization that Jesus was the one I wanted, but how was I to get him to be my Saviour. I went home that night and prayed to God with more faith than I ever had before. The next night I went and was converted, that was the happiest moment I ever knew. My heart felt light, it was a burden of sin lifted away by my Saviour.

I learned that my rules would help make a better Christian, but to be a Christian, you must, trust, believe, and love Jesus. I learned too that Jesus can give you more pleasure than the world can. The only thing that marred my happiness was father and mother they were not Christians. The next night after being talked to a little they were converted also. On April the 20th was our first children's meeting I gave my first public testimony then. I love to testify for Jesus. My first public prayer was at Juniors.

W— was the first person I ever tried to win for Jesus. I know now that God answers prayers because, before I wrote to W— I prayed for God to help me to write the things that would lead her to Christ. My second attempt at soul-winning was June the 6th. My brother, sister, and myself took the car and went over to Eagle Bend. . . . Coming back I rode with my cousin F— and her folks. When we were well on our way I asked her if she knew what being born again meant; she knew. Then I asked her if she knew how to become a Christian. She had the same idea as I had before I was converted. When we were just coming into their yard she asked me if I was going to the movie the next night. I told her no, and if she would come over Sunday afternoon I told her I would tell her all I know about Jesus. She came over that Sunday, and after doing up my own work I took her up in my room and shut the door I took those little booklets and read some parts to her. She told me she loved Jesus and wanted to be converted. When she went home I gave her my book of St. John to read when she had the time, I gave her "Little Daniel, or Just Say Jesus." Last Sunday brother, sister, and I went to a school house where they hold meetings, we drove over and got our cousins, F— and her brother, C—, and took them to the meeting with us. On the way over they told me they liked our pastor and liked to listen to his sermons. If they could only come to church, and could have more help to find Christ than I can give them, I am sure they would be of a great service to Christ and other people. I think if Auntie could have some one talk to her, she would awake to the realization of her need.

I think I am getting a bit farther ahead of the baptismal service than I

Facing The Task

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

A WORTHY and ennobling task confronts the membership of the local churches in the Northern Baptist Convention. It is a worthy task because it calls for spiritual outreach and inbuilding. It is not a task of pride and vainglory, but of submission to the Lord in self-giving and stewardship. While there is a money goal, the cash is to be but the expression of the lives that were first hidden with God in Jesus Christ; and whenever and wherever this is really true no sort of apology need be offered for a money goal.

Some things are essential if the task is to be ennobling. First, the individuals that comprise the membership of our local churches must recognize afresh the Lordship of their Saviour. This will be marked by increased intercession for the unfruitful members of the church and for the unsaved; by an intensive study of God's Word to learn the higher duties of stewardship and evangelism; and by a new life of personal service beginning with a zealous attempt to revitalize all the members of the local organization and produce them as cooperating units in the divine institution. We need to remember that if some are sick in our homes it is the well members of the household who must care for those who are ill. So in the church, the only way to reach the inactive, non-producing, non-missionary members is through the intercession and personal ministry of those who live close to their Lord and Saviour.

Expand or Expire

Next, the best and latest information about the world situation, its missionary impacts and the necessary support of the local church must be furnished every member. Either we expand our knowledge or we expire spiritually. The use of trained three-minute speakers, bulletins, ingenious posters made up by local people, good advertisements in the church bulletin, a church school of missions, a missionary pageant, some visiting missionaries, if they can be procured, a debate between the woman's union and the board of deacons upon "Resolved, that the practice of stewardship is essential to a saved life," and then real live, Spirit-blessed, new-material sermons will create an atmosphere of intelligence that will promote the spiritual life of the members. A normal measure of production can only be secured when the people have been made intelligent about their task. The use of the promotional program as adopted at the Indianapolis Convention will help to fix and maintain the interest of all who use it.

The final thing connected with our worthy and ennobling denominational task is to get every member enthusiastic about it. We do not want a false, noisy, momentary enthusiasm, but a real deep expressive love for a wonderful Saviour who has given us the splendid chance to help win a lost world through the proper well rounded maintenance and projection of a local church. My friends! get some real enthusiasm into you for this year's work. Sell the task to yourself first of all. On your knees talk it up to yourself till it has enthused you with its call to a real spiritual life, to Christian service, to Christian education and to stewardship.

Yes, your money and that of every Christian in the membership of our Baptist churches is involved and enthusiasm for the whole task is essential if we are to succeed. Your money is you and you in your totality must be self-given to your Lord. The money goal is one of the indications of the reality of the Lordship of Christ in your life. Give your money with enthusiasm and Christian liberality.

Some very definite plans are now presented for the use of churches organizing themselves for the money side of the task. Particular attention this year is being given to a program designed to help every local church meet all its financial needs and opportunities represented by its double budget: (1) current expenses, (2) denominational missions and education (New World Movement). The following suggestions are offered:

1. First Steps:

a. In the local church constitute a committee of four—pastor, a layman, a woman worker and a representative of the young people's society. This may be a subcommittee of the church cabinet or executive group.

b. Inform the church about its own and the denominational needs. Use available literature.

c. Secure the appointment of a strong committee or use machinery already in hand to make up a current expense budget and a generous sum on a minimum basis for denominational needs. Fix a date for an every-member canvass.

d. Spend several weeks circulating printed copies of the budgets and interesting all the members in stewardship and missionary information based on the Survey and other available literature.

e. Send every member a copy of the church covenant and draw their attention to the clause concerning regular and cheerful giving.

2. The Every Member Canvass:

a. Secure pledge cards showing place for signing a subscription (1) for current expenses, (2) for denominational missions and education. Many pledge cards should also include a stewardship enlistment blank.

b. Enlist and train canvassers. Literature detailing this will be furnished upon application.

c. Start canvass on a Sunday afternoon and lovingly but persistently keep after the members until all have made the desired response.

1. A pledge to current expense.

2. A pledge to the New World Movement unless they already have one on file in the church records. Some members will desire to increase present pledges and opportunity for this will be given when requested.

3. Final Steps:

a. Have committee as in paragraph one, report the completion of the local campaign to the associational committee who will report the results to the state committee.

b. Offer your best workers to the associational committee so that help may be furnished backward or pastorless churches, to make their canvass effective.

c. The goal is to reach every member of each church in your Association, and having brought them near to Christ, the result will be to secure from them all a worthy pledge for current expenses and New World Movement. Thus will we help fully fulfill our stewardship obligation and obey the world commission our Lord gave us.

The final result of all this will be a revived church doing its share of the denominational task in a worthy and ennobling manner.

Young People's Work in the Local Church

By MARK F. SANBORN

THE importance of young people's work needs no discussion. Our churches are awake to the unmeasured potentialities among the hosts of young people in every community. But many churches are anxious to discover the best plans of organization and the most effective programs for their young people. Only a few suggestions can be made in a brief article.

A survey to determine the present status of young people's work may be the most needed step in some churches. This can be done by the pastor, church school superintendent and president of the young people's organization, together with other young people's leaders in larger churches.

A definite aim or objective to be accomplished in the young people's work of the church must next be decided upon. Without this no program will succeed. The Christian Culture courses had the advantage of this definite aim in the study of the Bible, sacred literature and missions. Our young people need the all-round training afforded by such a comprehensive objective of instruction, training in leadership and personal service.

It will then be in order to select and adapt such methods of work or forms of organization as will serve best as a means of attaining your objective. The local conditions must determine your decisions. The principle underlying Christ's statement, "The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath", should always be applied to our programs of young people's work. The organizations must always exist for the young people and never the young people for the organization.

There is today a great variety of organizations for young people, that look towards the development of the physical, mental, social and spiritual nature. Many churches, even the smaller ones, will do well to use several of these as the needs may require. Some of these are departments of the church school, organized classes, Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls, World Wide Guild, Christian Endeavor, B. Y. P. U., and Life Service League.

Correlation of the various groups among themselves and with the larger program of the church and the church school is also necessary. Where there are several groups of young people the Council plan of organization is recommended. The

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

The Flood

DID you ever see a river,—a real honest-to-goodness river, when it was going strong? Did you ever see the Mississippi down in what they call "the lower river," in the spring when the levees are strained to breaking to keep the mighty stream in bounds; when it rises and rushes and rages until no craft or power of man can stand against it?

There comes to mind a little nursery jingle just here, so inopportune, so preposterous, so silly—but so inescapably true: "Little drops of water . . . make the mighty ocean." The little drops of water make the mighty river, too; and that irresistible current which crashes through huge dikes and roams furiously over fields and towns and counties at will, is the product of combination. Little drops of water from Montana ranges and Colorado mountains and Minnesota forests and Iowa prairies and Wisconsin hillsides merge their single trivialty until it becomes a monster of energy.

Did you ever see a river,—a real honest-to-goodness river, of love-gifts flowing from the hands of an innumerable multitude of God's redeemed children, merged in a mighty stream of money for missions, a blessed river of salvation pursuing its onward way to press and crash and break upon the barriers of heathen darkness and superstition and misery and sin? Did you ever see that river, even in your dream of what might be, of what may be, of what ought to be this very minute?

Think of the New World Movement as a river, like "the river of God which is full of water": continuous in its flow, abundant in its measure and power, and gracious in its life-giving ministry to the lost world. Think of your offering as a little drop of water, helping to make the mighty stream. Think of your pledges, your fruits of self-denial and sincere stewardship, as a wee part of that river which is the total gift of all the members of all our churches for the evangelization of the world which so sadly needs Jesus.

If you think hard enough and long enough you will come to understand why the General Board of Promotion has proposed as an objective for this year: "EVERY MEMBER OF EVERY CHURCH . . . GIVING." Join in with your gifts to make that stream a mighty agent for the work of Christ.

Where the Revival Should Begin

ONLY a revival of religion can save us from the dangers that beset civilization. Any man with a little coaching can manufacture a bomb that will destroy what a thousand men have built. An unscrupulous gang can manipulate the forms of democracy to obtain the most dangerous power. Selfishness may completely disrupt our industrial organization. No laws and no enforcement of law can preserve us against those who sacrifice the good of all to the interests of their own group. Only the great religious motive can save us.

The religious revival must begin with the children. It needs no great tabernacles, brass bands or special campaigns. The church must be about its normal business of religious education. We need kindergartens in sunny rooms, under religious leaders. We must multiply our boys' and girls' clubs under earnest religious direction. These movements today are full of religious implication, but the religious motives must become explicit. The churches must open up to our youth the meaning of the great social enterprise of righteousness inspired by the religious ideal. (From an address by Theodore G. Soares, Pres. Rel. Educ. Ass'n.)

Is A Foreign Missionary Busy?

By F. W. HARDING

IN the foreign field it is always the thing at your side which is crying out insistently for attention that gets in the first claim. Here is a brief list of things and persons which require our time during the course of a day:

- A Garo in trouble;
- A man perplexed over some difficulty;
- A peon with a grievance demanding immediate attention;
- A group of people in to apply personally for a new school;
- An evangelist in to report his last tour;
- A teacher with school problems to be solved;
- A carpenter to know whether this building is to be repaired this way or that;
- The mohori to ask whether he had better direct coolies to tie down thatch roofs because the wind is ripping them off or to clear up the water system for the compound;

A pastor to talk about the next session of the Tura Bible Training School;

People from another village where there is a school to see if mission won't give them maps or a blackboard or some other school equipment;

A boy to talk about returning to Jorhat School for further education;

The father of another boy who is in Jorhat because he hears his boy is ill;

A man to complain that their pundit isn't given satisfaction (has written a love letter to a girl in the village);

One of the office force to get my aid to fix the duplicator which has broken in the middle of a 500 copy job;

Letters to be signed and got out on tonight's mail—the mail boy is waiting;

Carpenters to know what job they must do next;

Painters likewise;

Someone to say that one of our men owes him money, and will I be good enough to pay it and take it out of his pay;

A boy from the hostels to ask if he may go to his own village for a few days;

Some other missionary in the station with a problem to discuss;

Some one seeking lumber or paint or nails;

A father to ask where he shall bury his babe which died in the night;

A man to borrow money to buy a cow with and trade;

A man to know if I want to buy bamboos or eggs or a porcupine or some sweet potatoes or a monkey;

A crowd from an interior village to see all over the inside of our bungalow—

These and a thousand others are the kinds of things that stand by one's side and steal time from other important matters. You say, "Dodge some of them!" Well I tried it, and even though I got into the innermost recess of the innermost and remotest room in the bungalow the people found me. If they didn't come in, they stood outside of the door and coughed and coughed (their way of ringing the door bell) until in absolute desperation one had to give them attention or go crazy trying to do the thing one wanted to do and hearing the insistent "ringing of the door-bell."

"The Children of the Later Exodus" is a new stereopticon lecture on Baptist work for the Negroes, written by Coe Hayne and now available at the stereopticon depositories.

"The Stewardship of Possessions" is the name of a new lecture given for the first time at the Stewardship Conference at the Indianapolis Convention. After corrections suggested there, it was completed and is now ready in the various depositories.

It will be necessary to order this latter lecture by return mail to secure it during October.

The Chimney Corner

The Nat Trap

"AND baked beans for luncheon please," Mrs. Faraway added, as she was about to leave the kitchen. Mrs. Faraway was now so very far away from New England that whenever she felt the oncoming symptoms of homesickness she screwed up her courage anew and ordered a meal of baked beans. Out of a can! Which was the best she could manage in Burma in honor of Boston and vicinity.

Therefore, you can picture her disappointment when luncheon came on the table and the beans were—tomatoes. Red, juicy tomatoes; also out of a can. She ate them, and Mr. Faraway ate them, without any comment whatever although tomatoes could not possibly ease the heartache for Boston! Even after luncheon she only said: "Comfort, suppose you open a can of spaghetti for supper."

Mrs. Faraway's afternoon was cut up into as many pieces as a jig-saw puzzle, with brown mothers who were worried about brown babies, and brown girls who were learning to sew, and brown boys who wanted some kind of a class, also, and brown men who came to ask six dozen questions. The mere detail of a menu had quite faded from her mind until supper time when the spaghetti proved to be—tomatoes. As red and as juicy as they had been at luncheon. This time Mrs. Faraway simply sighed to herself: "He is using up the left-overs I presume." So she ate in silence, for she loved economy and was mentally patting herself on the back that at least Comfort was practicing it, even on her!

Then the next day dawned, and after breakfast she said, "Comfort, you may open a can of asparagus for the salad at luncheon."

Mrs. Faraway's mornings were as much of a jig-saw puzzle as her afternoons, for she taught reading and 'riting and 'rithmetic to the primary brownies. Not that you are to picture a little red school-house with stone steps and blackboards and desks-with-ink-wells. But there was a certain palm tree, then another palm tree: the two of them made a shady spot plenty big enough for fifteen scholars, and this was all the school those brownies knew anything about. But it was all they needed just at first, for the sandy earth made a near-at-hand blackboard, with fingers for chalk. The more fashionable scholars with clean lone-gyles (skirts) skipped over to pull big green leaves off the near-by trees so that they could sit on them while Mrs. Faraway taught Little Miss River and Wee Miss Sugar-and-Spice to spell through such marvelous sentences as, "I see the rat," "The rat sees me." It was a morning like this that drove cooks and bills-of-fare from Mrs. Faraway's mind, but luncheon time brought her back with a thud! For on the lettuce leaves the asparagus tips were—red tomatoes.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"Dear me, haven't we used up that can yet?" she sighed sadly, for canned tomatoes as salad are entirely too watery and unpick-up-able with a fork! But it is very difficult to be stern with an economical cook; therefore all she said was: "Comfort, you might open a can of preserved peaches for dessert tonight."

"Um," said he, and clattered his pots and pans as if his soul were miles above such earthly occupations.

Another jig-saw afternoon. This time, calling in the homes. Oh, those homes! Up on stilts they sat, in mid air, out of reach of snakes and centipedes and scorpions. There were babies sucking cucumbers and babies placidly creeping straight into the open fire, there was rice piled up in one dusty corner, there were grannies worried about their souls and grannies worried about their sores. Every house on stilts a mass of problems—sanitary, spiritual or sympathetic as the case might be. An afternoon that made desert for supper a thing all too easily forgotten, until at 6 p. m. it came upon the table in little glass saucers, but instead of being peaches was—tomatoes! Redder and juicier than ever.

"There is more in this than meets the eye," sighed Mrs. Faraway to herself.

"My dear," said Mr. Faraway, stopping midway of his dessert, "I don't like to complain, but it seems to me we are having tomatoes rather often lately, aren't we?"

"Are we?" asked Mrs. Faraway, raising astonished eyebrows at him. Things had indeed come to a sorry pass when Mr. Richard Faraway began to take notice. "Well, Dick, tomatoes ought to give us delightfully crimson complexions."

"Possibly," he answered regretfully, "but I admit they leave me feeling curiously pale and wan—"

"I know! Oh, don't I know!" groaned Mrs. Faraway, shutting her eyes and pushing the little glass saucer and its red untasted contents as far away as possible. "Something will have to be done, but I had better wait till morning to tackle him," she sighed; and all night long wild hordes of red tomato cans trooped through her dreams.

But that was nothing compared to what had happened to Comfort, as she discovered when she broached the matter to him the next morning.

"Um'm'm'm," he said, drawing it out so much longer than usual that she thought he might be starting a solo.

"The only reason I have so many different cans in the pantry is to furnish us with variety," she repeated. "Of course I'm sorry you can't read the English labels on them, but I thought I had taught you how the various pictures on those labels look so that you could pick the proper can that way, especially as all the peaches are by themselves on one shelf, all the asparagus in a group on another shelf, the baked beans by themselves. I thought that would make it easy for you, but I was perfectly willing to come in and help you select the cans if necessary, Comfort, anything rather than tomatoes for another meal! The very sight of them turns us sick . . ."

Comfort drew a long breath and broke forth into speech: "The mistress does not know all," he sighed deeply in the tone of one who has suffered long and unjustly in silence. "Step this way!"

He unlocked a certain door and she "stepped." The little pantry was dark, and coming from the sunlight she could not see the sight there was to see, which Comfort was explaining: "I am an unhappy man! I reach on the top shelf for baked beans, and I get tomatoes. I reach on the next-to-the-top shelf for spaghetti, and I get tomatoes. I reach on the middle shelf for asparagus, and I get tomatoes. I reach on the low shelf for peaches and I get tomatoes. I am an unhappy man."

This was such a long speech for him that he stopped, exhausted, and leaned against the pantry wall.

Mrs. Faraway was beginning to ask: "Why couldn't you tell by the labels?" when her eyes became enough accustomed to the gloom to see the reason why: there were no labels!

"Where are they?" she asked, astonished.

"Gone!" said the cook, waving his hands. "All gone!"

"But where are they gone?" she insisted, for surely labels could not blow off pantry shelves.

"Rats!" he answered in a sepulchral tone.

"Rats?"

"Rats," he echoed, and launched forth into an explanation that was simply amazing. Mrs. Faraway leaned limply against the other wall and listened, round-eyed. And that evening she wrote home to Boston:—

"Beloved Betty:

"Never again can you say that I am uselessly buried alive in this little Burman town. Never again can you send me letters wailing that I am wasting a college education on these dear brown people. Betty, I need ten college educations and ten hearts of love and ten sets of brains to solve the fifty-seven varieties of problems that assail even brand new missionaries like ourselves. Take, for example the problem of rats.

"I think I may have written you that agriculture is in such a primitive stage in this corner of the map that we were urged to bring along a year's supply of food, in cans of course, for everything that comes in boxes the worms eat, or what the worms forget the mould in the rainy season remembers! So on our pantry shelves we have a tin vegetable garden, a tin orchard, a tin cow, a tin lamb, a tin pig. But imagine discovering that an army of rats had nibbled every label from a year's supply of groceries! Do you think that even a college education would enable you to tell by juggling whether a certain tin can contained peaches or tomatoes?"

"So our diet is bound to be unsettled for the next twelve months. We never know what a day will bring forth. We feel like the advertisement of the bull dog for sale: 'Will eat anything. Very fond of babies.' Variety may be the spice of life, but certainly is the sweetness of it. However, what can we do, except hope for a Pied Piper?"

There was more to the letter, but Betty of Boston was such a practical person that she read thus far in the letter to her department in Sunday school the Sunday morning following her receipt of it, where it created so much enthusiasm that by evening the following letter was on its way to Burma:—

"Dear Mary, Mary, Missionary!
How does your tin garden grow?
On pantry shelves with no labels,
And brown maid all in a row!"

"I read your letter to my Intermediates and the girls immediately said: 'Oh, let's be her Pied Piper, Miss Betty! traps—those cunning little round red ones with four holes.'"

"'Better send Rough on Rats,' the boys suggested. With such an army of rats it would keep her too busy baiting traps all day. This powder makes them die out-doors. The advertisement says so!"

"So we de-baited wildly: traps or not traps, agreeing on only one point—namely, to help you. So it was voted that I should write you post haste to see what kind of traps or powders would be most useful, and to assure you that meantime we shall be saving every possible nickel and quarter and dime in the most delightful 'mite box' you ever saw. I made it this afternoon by painting a child's round hat box red, printing on the top: THE RAT TRAP. In the sides I cut four round holes through which our savings may be dropped, and between the holes there are pictures of Burma cut from missionary magazines. Write soon, Mary dear to your loving Betty."

As fast as wind and wave could waft this letter to Burma it arrived, and this was rather slow; then as fast as bullock cart could creak from the coast inland to that distant mission station the letter travelled onward, and this was slower still. But when Mary Faraway read it at last she said two things at the same time (if that be possible), "How awful! How lovely!" And in her turn sat down to write an instant reply:—

"You wonderful American Pied Pipers!"

"Never in my life have I been so surprised as at the unexpected offer from your Intermediate department to rid me of rats. What a relief that would be! Yet how impossible! For of course you do not realize that the religious beliefs of my Burman neighbors cause them to think that the spirits of the dead enter into animals, provided these dead persons displeased the gods while living. My poor cook, for instance, is still struggling to give up this old heathen belief, and he tells me with tears in his eyes that the rat that ate the peach labels is undoubtedly his grandfather! It seems that shortly before his death, this grandfather was among the visitors at our bungalow and was especially delighted with the peach cans; he thought the picture on the label was too mouth-watering for words. As indeed it is: such a lovely pink and gold peach with a fadeless green leaf beside it.

"So can't you imagine what a frightful commotion it would make in town if we two Christian new-comers should set traps and kill off grandfathers, uncles, or friends whose spirits may have entered rats? It would never, never do. I think the Faraways, who are so new in all their other ways, would surely be driven out of town with stones.

"But, oh, you good young Pied Pipers, don't you remember that in Mr. Browning's poem the piper of Hamelin had an even greater attraction over children than over rats? This, I think, is your cue. So I am writing post haste to say that while I dare not use a single rat trap, I would like a NAT TRAP, please!"

"I can hear you saying: 'What a very poor speller Mrs. Faraway is, for nat is spelled with a g—gnat.' But I assure you that Burman nats are quite different from American gnats. For ours are sights unseen—evil spirits that lurk in all manner of places to tweak little boys' ears and stub little girls' toes and cause sickness.

"Take the case of little Miss Sugar-And-Spice (but not everything nice!) This very morning that prim little maiden was skipping sedately to school, when she stumbled. Over a pebble or the root of a tree, you suggest. Of course! But Miss Sugar-And-Spice knew better, and ran home in terror to tell her mother, so that by the time I came along I saw a very strange sight! For there was Mrs. Sugar-And-Spice standing on tiptoe, putting a little rice and a delicious titbit of rotten fish (nga-pi, they call it) in the branches.

"Now what may that be for?" I asked.

"The nat that lives in this tree is evidently displeased with Sugar-And-Spice; see, he made her fall and cut her knee! But this offering may make him forget his grudge against her," explained the dear brown mother. And Sugar-And-Spice stood there anxiously watching Teacher: didn't I agree?

"I didn't! And I said so. But I am so very, very new in town, how should I know the ways of nats which are so very, very old? There isn't an ache or a pain in town which the nats are not supposed to have brought. Oh, I wish you could see the sight I see at sunset time, when the houses are given a spanking!"

"There is a prodigious rattling of tin pans, a deafening din of shouts and screams, while every house in town (but ours) is beaten with long sticks. Why? To frighten away the nats, of course; for in the dark they would not be able to find their way back again! Naturally they think these homeless spirits will try to get refuge in any house which omits this wise procedure; so with every house being vigorously spanked imagine how the naughty nats must flock into the unspanked House of Faraway! 'Spare the rod and spoil the child.' Yet we keep so well, my husband and I, we act so normal, that Sugar-And-Spice says proudly: 'I don't know why but you're special! The nats don't trouble you.'"

"They never trouble any Christian,' I explain. So do you wonder I want a nat trap, please? For the sooner I can spread the joy of Christian things, the sooner the fear of nats will be trapped forever.

"Kindly choose a good stout carton for my 'trap,' and 'bait' it with little dressed dolls (the button-and-unbutton kind), with pencils, with pins, with work bags, with thimbles, with scrap books, with postals, with all kinds of toys. If you will surely mail it by September first, then I can have it for Christmas which ought to be a day of days to lay low the nats and raise high the joy of living. With oceans of gratitude (both Atlantic and Pacific) from your friend, MARY FARAWAY."

"What fun!" chuckled the Intermediates. "Much more fun than rat traps!"

"I should say so," added the girls who could sew, "for it gives us all summer to dress little dolls."

"All summer to earn money," cried the boys who were aiming to buy pencils and pins and toys.

"All summer to interest Everybody we know in our Summer Christmas Tree," Miss Betty added, and right then and there they decided to have a real tree with real candles and carols,—outdoors.

"There's a pine tree on my lawn," piped up the Boy-Who-Was-Always-Bored. Only now he was not bored at all, he had so many new ideas at once! "I think my mother has fixings to trim it up—"

"Let's have August twenty-fifth for our summer Christmas—"

"Let's ask all our neighbors—"

"Let's have the admission fee some article for the Nat Traps—"

"Let's have a little play—"

"Oh yes, a little play, Miss Betty, to show how Christmas traps the nats—"

So that is what they did!

It was, of course, the nicest party in the world, and the stacks of pencils, pads, pin-cushions, jack-knives, pictures, dolls, toys, tooth-brushes, tubes of paste, etc., etc., were something to make a real Santa Claus gasp with surprise. Two days later the Nat Trap started on its big adventure...

On that December twenty-first when the homesick Mrs. Faraway saw the box, so square and solid and full of secrets she fell on her knees and opened it eagerly, saying over and over in a contented little refrain: "Bless those Intermediates! Oh, this will

GETTING AN EDUCATION

Prov. 9:1-11

EDUCATION AND MONEY

By J. SHERMAN WALLACE

Will a college education pay? Can I afford the time and the money it will cost? Could not the money and the time for four years' training be better invested in other ways? Would it not be better to get to work and make an early start in the business world? These are the first questions of the average high-school graduate. Ours is a practical age. We are tempted to measure life itself in terms of dollars and cents.

We hear much of self-made men, and many an earnest young man hesitates to spend four valuable years in college after the high school is finished. Some become discouraged and yield to the lure of the dollar even before the secondary school is completed. A prosperous business man in the Northwest recently said to a college representative, "If you can show me how it is going to pay, I will talk to you about sending my girls to college." The financial basis is the lowest plane upon which to consider the worth of a college education, but it cannot be ignored and ought not to be.

Professor Eli W. Weaver, a teacher in Brooklyn, has made an investigation of the effects of education upon earning ability. He traced the careers of 166 boys who graduated from the elementary schools in Brooklyn in 1892. Eighty-four were engaged in commerce, thirty-nine in skilled labor, twenty-two in professions, eight in civil service, and thirteen as managers and foremen. The average annual earnings of these men were $1,253, while the average earnings of the laboring men of the city were only $500. The average boy who left school at fourteen years of age had earned a total of $5,722 when he was twenty-five. The average boy who stayed in school until he was eighteen had earned $7,387 when he was twenty-five. In other words, he had earned $1,665 more in seven years than the other had earned in eleven years.

Careful statistics show that the average uneducated man earns $1.50 a day. Omitting Sundays, he earns $450 a year. In forty years he earns $18,000. The average high-school graduate earns $1,000 a year. In forty years he earns $40,000. The difference in favor of the high school man is $22,000. To get this added amount he spends twelve years in school, nine months per year, twenty days per month, or 2,160 days. In other words, he earns $10 each day he is in school.

But a college education increases one's earning capacity much more rapidly. The United States Commissioner of Education has asserted that a common-school education increases a man's productive ability 50 per cent, a high-school training increases it 100 per cent, and a college training increases it from 200 to 300 per cent. The contents of "Who's Who in America?" show that possibilities of success so far as fame is concerned, are greatly increased by a college training. John W. Leonard prepared a table from the material furnished by the biographies contained in "Who's Who in America?" Of 11,500 noted men mentioned in that publication, 9,760 furnished data as to education received. Of these, 4,521, or 59 per cent, were graduates of colleges or universities; 965, or 11-4/5 per cent had attended such institutions but had not graduated. Others had received special training in technical schools. Only 808 had received merely a public-school education.

Hon. Richmond P. Hobson says: "Though less than 2 per cent of the men of America go through college, yet from this 2 per cent the nation draws 7,700 of the 10,000 leaders in all walks of life." Every one of experience knows that, other things being equal, the college-trained man can secure a position over uneducated men ninety-nine times in a hundred. The great mercantile and manufacturing houses of America are constantly seeking for trained and educated men to fill their positions of responsibility and leadership. The general manager of an international business house which employs thousands of salesmen recently said, "I never get enough men for the more important positions of the firm, because there are so very few men who can present their own arguments clearly and overcome the arguments of the other side without giving offense. At the present time I have three positions paying $5,000 a year each, and I am unable to find a man of personality who has the qualifications that I have indicated." As Andrew Carnegie said: "The business men of America have at last come to realize that a college education has a commercial value."

For financial reasons alone our young people can well afford to defer their entrance into commercial pursuits until after a college education has been secured.

"Through the coming to us of Pastor B. Franklin Irving at the close of his pastorate at Streator First Church—Benson Young People's Society woke up, and a few months ago successfully had what they called a 'community booster banquet' for young people which was splendidly patronized by about sixty young people and was a fine success. Invitations were sent to eighty-five persons and the majority responded. Pastor Irving engineered the program and was toast master to the delight and joy of all our friends. As the purpose and plan was not only to boost, but also to attract as many prospective as possible, and to enlist as many friends as available, the program will interest our young people's readers. It was as follows: 1. Young people's chorus choir; 2. 'Welcome' by president of B. Y. P. U.; 3. Reading—"Sculptors of Life Are We" by high-school student; 4. Vocal solo—a friend of the church; 5. Toasts, master of ceremonies, Rev. B. Franklin Irving; (a) Our object, (b) Our Advantage, (c) Why I believe in our B. Y. P. U., by president, (d) What the B. Y. P. U. has done for me, by a veteran, (e) How any one can help, (f) The good times socially we hope to have, social chairman, (g) Bad ways that have killed others, (h) After tonight, what?; 6. Orchestral music; 7. Reading, 'I was wondering' by McAlpine; 8. Pledge signing by prospectives; 9. Business meeting (ten minutes) for reconstruction and reorganization.

"This resulted in a number of 'new materials' being added to our society; besides new life and enthusiasm which has since successfully affected our Sunday night and midweek services by largely increased attendance, not to overlook the solving of the musical problem for Sunday night preaching services by the organization of our enthused young life into a fine chorus choir. As an immediate result of this—our Easter musical program was favorably compared with the best in our part of the state; and also through the musical leadership and drilling of Pastor Irving, and the hearty cooperation of all enlisted young people—our recent Children's Day musical program was voted to be the best in more than twenty-five years. But the best thing was that the personnel of our young people's meeting was quite wonderfully changed from a medley group of old and young to a real live wire young people's society that functioned according to the standard. Our church prayer meeting has been helped also. And there have been baptisms and re-consecrations as well. This coming month we plan for lawn party and fun festival at which we intend to recruit other unattached and unchurched young life. We now maintain an open air gymnasium and lawn tennis courts under the able direction of Pastor Irving and we hope to begin the fall season with a real evangelistic endeavor to 'Win My Friend' for Christ and the church. Altogether we are encouraged also to know that we as a B. Y. P. U. are stimulating and inspiring our pastor to be a preacher with an encouraging and inspiring message to burdened and hungry hearts."

International Lesson for September 17

THE MESSAGE OF MALACHI

Lesson: Malachi 3:1 to 4:3 Golden Text: Malachi 3:7.

Setting

Malachi is the last book of the Old Testament, and covers the latter part of the period of Nehemiah's work at Jerusalem. The same social and religious conditions exists as those portrayed in the previous lesson from Nehemiah. Malachi (the name means "messenger", possibly inspired by 3:1) has for his burden the coarse formalism of the priests, the wanton offenses against family life among the people, and the resultant unconcern regarding the solemn obligations of worship and sacrificial offerings.

Lesson

The book is so brief that it may easily be read through in connection with the assigned lesson. Its dominant truths may be stated as, (1) a faithful God, (2) a pure ministry, (3) an obedient people. The character of God as revealed here is calculated to work shame and penitence in the hearts of the people. "I have loved you, saith the Lord"; and Jehovah affirms that because he is changeless they are spared in spite of their waywardness. The blessed intimacy which grace makes possible for those who fear Jehovah is pictured in the familiar verse, 3:16 (associate with John 3:16 to remember it), and 4:2 also embodies a rich promise of comfort and victory.

The ideal of a pure and godly ministry is set forth, by contrast with the actual life of the incompetent and unworthy priests, who understood God so little that they thought they could deceive him with blemished offerings and blemished souls. In 2:5-7 is given a portrait of God's minister as God would have him: "The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity." It is imperative that the minister, and indeed every Christian worker, shall keep constantly before him God's ideal, lest he drop his own to the level of secular mediocrity. Compare II Cor., chapters 3 to 6.

Malachi brings definite indictment against the people of God who are called by his name, for that they follow wicked ways (cf II Chron. 7:17) and are reconciled to chronic sinfulness. Marital obligations are held lightly, solemn vows and pledges are forgotten, truth has become optional and occasional, while the field hand and the orphan and the defenseless widow have become the prey of conscienceless wealth (cf I Tim. 6:9, 10, 16, 17). We have a very similar picture of social conditions, and a similar denunciation, in James ch. 5.

Symptomatic of moral decline and spiritual torpor is the prevalent sin of robbing God, by withholding the enjoined tithes and offerings. Money which comes from our labor in field or factory or office is a part of us, and is not commonly given save under the impulse of grateful love to our Redeemer. Sin lurking in the life not only makes an end of prayer, but an end also of stewardship. Unfaithful administrators, unfaithful bankers, unfaithful husbands and fathers, are not likely to prove faithful stewards of God's bounty in material things.

Leading Thoughts

Stewardship has a symptomatic relation. How is your stewardship pulse beating? Are you doing business with God on a sound basis, as his happy partner?

Position conditions responsibility. As preacher or teacher or church leader, is your vision of the Ideal clear and bright? Are you growing up to your office day by day?

True religion works as a leaven in society. It fruits in finer homes, fewer poor, less sobbing and sighing and loneliness. Have you that sort of religion? Is it working?

A Joyful Success

The Methuen Church of Lowell, Mass., was the scene for four weeks this summer of a Daily Vacation Bible School. The enrollment the first day was 171. There was equipment for only 150 but 162 were allowed to remain. The average daily attendance for the first three weeks was 135. Four paid workers and sixteen volunteers carried on the work. The vestry of the church was used for the school work and the yard for the "daily dozen," the kindergarten sand-pile, and games, and also for much of the boys handcraft. In the yard too at their little tables the kindergartens enjoyed the milk and crackers provided for them.

There were dresses made by the older girls, towels worked by the younger girls; the boys made kites, cane-seated chairs and a village complete from an automobile to a pig, all sawed from cigar boxes with gig-saws. There were also picture books made by the children and given to the day nursery of Methuen. Picnics, screen pictures, and ice-cream cones made monotony impossible. Principal, Miss Caro E. Allen, and Pastor John Ward Moore worked untiringly, and to their efforts are largely due the success and popularity of the school.

You will find the next issue full of splendid material for your work in the Sunday school. Order extra copies for your teaching force.

Fundamentalists Retract Error

Dr. W. B. Riley Lifts Ban on International S. S. Association

The Fundamentalist Conference at Los Angeles last June adopted the following resolution practically placing a boycott on the newly formed International Sunday School Council of Religious Education:

"As members of evangelical churches and representatives of the evangelical faith, we repudiate the 'Religious Education Association' as utterly Unitarian and rationalistic, and declare our conviction that the International Sunday School Association, by its proposed alliance with that Association, now deserves a total rejection."

Dr. Charles G. Trumbull, editor of the Sunday School Times, and a leading Fundamentalist, protested against this attack on the International Sunday School organization, and in his paper repeatedly urged that the action be rescinded as having been based on misunderstanding. In the Sunday School Times for July 22 Dr. Trumbull wrote: "Sunday School workers throughout North America will vigorously protest against the error and unintentional injustice of the resolution adopted by the Fundamentals Conference, and the Times is confident that that Association will promptly express its regret for and disavowal of the mistake."

The chairman of the Fundamentals Conference, Dr. W. B. Riley, has written the following frank statement which appears in the Sunday School Times August 12, and which will partly retrieve the unfortunate consequences of the all-advised Los Angeles resolution:

"I want to personally acknowledge obligation to the Sunday School Times for having called attention to, and given us a chance to correct, the mistake in the series of resolutions adopted at the fourth annual meeting of the Christian Fundamentals Association. I assume entire and personal responsibility for that mistake. In reading the daily press on the trains between Kansas City and Los Angeles, I got the impression that the Religious Education Association was involved in the merger. I think that was due to two facts: First, that the abbreviated reports were not clear, and second, to the circumstance that I had read but a short time ago a hearty approval of the Religious Education Association as an educational asset from a high International Sunday School authority.

"I am glad, however, to know that it was a mistake, and that the International Association has not linked itself with the Religious Education Association, nor in any wise sets its approval upon the same."

Our Own Folks

Conference of the Czecho-Slovak Baptists in America

By JOSEPH NOVOTNY

Immediately after the Indianapolis Convention, from June 24 to 28, the Czecho-Slovak Baptists met for their annual conference in Longfellow's country, on the banks of the Falls of Minnehaha, in Minneapolis. The conference was a historical event: not only because it was attended by such a large group of Czecho-Slovak Baptists as never before (especially from the Czecho-Slovak Mecca in America, Chicago) but because of the important step which this conference resolved to take. It organized for the first time the noble group of the ordained ministers into a solid body, which will from now in a positive way help its members in their effort for further study of heart and mind, but also in a negative way watch at the gate of their organization that only worthy men may be allowed to enter.

But the chief event of this assembly was a resolute move of the delegates towards an ideal goal—self-support. There is no doubt that the reflex of the conditions in their old country (Czecho-Slovakia) was the immediate reason. Czecho-Slovaks, the westernmost Slavs, the interpreters of the Western culture to the rest of the Slavs, the only Slav nation which had a successful reformation, is now in flames of a new religious reformation; and sparks from this spiritual stake have fallen already in the neighbors' countries—Jugo-Slavia and Poland. Now, such an opportunity God places in a nation's lap only once in centuries. And the Czecho-Slovaks in this country, enriched by a divine vision, see this opportunity—that the Czecho-Slovaks might be the religious leaders for the rest of the Slavs.

The Baptist Czecho-Slovaks resolved therefore to collect a good sum in order that they may be able themselves to start their own missionary work: among their countrymen in America, in their old country of Czecho-Slovakia, and in a Slav sister-country, Jugo-Slavia. They collected in some fifteen minutes among the delegates $2,500, and at least the same amount is expected from the churches. But they have collected not money only; they have found a man who would be willing to go to Jugo-Slavia, to a country where there is practically no Protestant mission whatsoever, and at the same time a great opportunity. The "Away from Rome" movement and the desire for a national church are the promising signs of religious hunger after the Czecho-Slovak pattern.

The missionary spirit overwhelmed the whole conference and made everybody enthusiastic. The effect of it, of course, is evident on the home field already. The Czecho-Slovak Baptists in America are the happy inventors of their purpose of life, they have found the reason to live, they know for whom they will toil and pray, work and give. A noble philosophy of life was discovered. They parted with heavy heads, full of high ideals, knowing hearts, full of sympathy for their Slav brethren, and strengthened hands full of immediate preparations for Christ's near victory in the Slav world.

There is a great opportunity for the English-speaking brethren in America to strengthen the ready Czecho-Slovak hands for such a noble work. You can never say what will happen when a human heart burns with missionary zeal. Miracles of the twentieth century will be the result, and to be able to look upon it and praise God because of it will be your reward, if you strong American brother will hold the hand of your younger Czecho-Slovak brother in this country. May God help us that once history may not condemn us because we have lived in a big time but we have not seen the importance of it. May God find us prepared and ready in this great time—big enough for the big tasks!

New York.

A Farewell from the Toppings

Dear Friends All:

You will be glad with us that, after progressing thus far on our return journey to Japan and then waiting so long to complete it, we are now booked to sail from Seattle on August 16 on the Shidzuoka Maru. Our Japan address will be 75 Bluff, Yokohama, Japan.

You who know how long it has taken to secure adequate funds for the new church home for our Japanese work here in Seattle will share our joy in the fact that the building will be finished by the end of next month. Pastor and Mrs. Okazaki and their splendid co-workers are joyfully anticipating their release from the shabby old sliding-down-the-hill building that has tried their souls and limited their labors for so many years. Our thanks are deeper than words can express to all those friends who gave so generously that this great need might be met.

Detained by the Debt

After our deep disappointment that we with other missionary families on furlough were asked to remain in America another year because of the debt, it is a wonderful inspiration to find there are loyal friends of the cause who feel as one of them wrote, "If you people can give time, energy, and life to that great work, you have a right to expect others to make it possible for you to go. Please apply enclosed check on your passage." So we go because of the generosity of personal friends. You can judge of our eagerness to be off, from the swiftness of our departure as soon as it was made possible. Some of these friends are not Baptists; some had already given generous "specials" to the church building fund; and we think of them always with the prayer, "God make us worthy of our friends."

It was with great glee that we "got by" in the medical examination which every returning missionary must undergo. To be sure, the examining physician, who gave it as his emphatic opinion that "twenty-five years service in Japan is long enough," did raise a question about our low "blood pressure" which might have furnished an excuse to remain at home. But though we must admit we may not seem as husky or as "peppy" as we were twenty-seven years ago when we first went out, we know that we have resources of endurance that the physician's testing appliances know not of. We have your prayers to keep up our courage "pressure." We shall see again our precious daughter Helen, whose work as Y. W. C. A. secretary in Kobe we will leave others to praise. We will again be with our other sons and daughters in the faith, of whom we are equally proud. All this will strengthen our joy "pressure." And to be again in one of the centers where we know the need is greatest and where the people are ready as never before to accept our service, will give us a new grip on the life of faith which is the life of Victory.

The Color Question

We want your sympathy also with our parting pangs! We long to stay by our Oriental friends in America, especially on this Western coast where so frequently they meet the unchristian, unpatriotic, unenlightened sentiment toward other races that hinders our fair land from becoming God's great demonstration center, of his blessed purpose of good to all mankind. However, we have also found on this coast a goodly company of Christian patriots who have no use for the idea of the "divine right" of the white man to rule the earth or to look from a pedestal upon his tinted fellow men, and who recognize that "The day fast approaches when the color question will be the fundamental international problem of the world." (Read Tyler Dennett's, "A Better World".) We commit to them this problem of the "Alien in our Midst," upon the solution of which hangs so largely the fate of that better world for which we pray. We believe that the solution which Jesus offers, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," will eventually appeal to the heart and the common sense of every true American.

There is no denying that we shall miss the creature comforts of this wonderful northwest country. It will cost us fully twice as much to live in Yokohama as it does here in Seattle and there will be no such ozone-laden air or purest snow-off-the-mountains-water or abundance of delicious foods in the city to which we go.

Some of you know how many years we camped in the 150-year-old kindergarten building in Morioka, which is to be torn down this summer to make place for the long anticipated new building; and how often through the years we have heard the pleasant assurance, "You people certainly ought to have a home." You will sympathize with us in the fact that there is no house for use in Yokohama and no money to rent one. Therefore we are all the more grateful to that big-hearted mission family who have offered us a room and welcome to live with them.

However, we are not relinquishing our dream of that "real house," so necessary to the work as well as to the preservation of the missionary. It is a tragedy that in the years gone by, our Society has not had funds with which to build. As one member of our mission writes, "Enough money has been wasted in rents to house us all in homes, bought and paid for." But some day the slogan will sound, "Build for your missionaries as for yourselves," May we live to see it!

Please bear in mind how we love the song, "America, the Beautiful," and how often we have asked that the prayer of that last verse be sung,—

"America, America, God shed his grace on thee!

And crown thy good
With brotherhood
That binds across the sea."

As we fare forth once more across the sea it is with a new and brighter vision of that brotherhood that is to be, and with a new song of gratitude to our Father for putting it into the hearts of our friends to make it possible for us to go.

Yours for the Kingdom on earth as it is in heaven.

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

Many of our pastors are away during August. Some are returning. During July and August there is a decided lull in church activities. The heat has been very oppressive in the city this summer; in fact, out of the city also. Automobiles are no more religious than street cars and railroad trains. They take people from our churches and Sunday services. With the coming of September, we hope for renewed interest in the work of the churches.

Part of the writer's vacation has been spent at Arcadia Heights, near Ironton, Mo. Here the Missouri Baptist Assembly has been in session from August 7 to 18. An excellent faculty was provided and the enrollment was 449. Many others would have come if railroad conditions had been more favorable. Mr. J. C. Hockett, Jr., Sunday School and B. Y. P. U. Secretary for the state, directed the program. The property is owned by the Missouri General Association and a committee from its executive board looked after the property interests involved. Of this Committee S. P. Ringo, of Ironton, is chairman and L. A. Cook, also of Ironton, treasurer. Miss Anna Menge of Farmington, E. I. H. Webb, of Fredericktown, Rev. F. M. Baker, of Flat River and J. C. Hockett, Jr., are members of the Committee.

The Missouri Baptist Assembly organization now has the function of boosting the assembly over the state. Its officers are: Rev. J. H. Satterfield of Kansas City, President; John M. Schneider, Jr. of St. Louis, Heyward Foreman of Columbia, Chas. G. Ross of Caruthersville and Miss Reva Parkin of Fredericktown, Vice Presidents; Walter Pearman of Mountain Grove, Recording Secretary; Miss Geneva Morsey of Marshall, Corresponding Secretary.

The Missouri B. Y. P. U. Convention held its second annual session August 8-10, in connection with the assembly program. It adopted a constitution and elected officers. The officers are:—Milton Casebolt, of Marshall, President; John M. Schneider, Jr., of St. Louis, J. Paul Leonard of Springfield, Chase W. Jennings of St. Joseph, Miss Reva Parkin of Fredericktown, Vice-presidents; Heyward Foreman of Columbia, Recording Secretary; J. C. Hockett, Jr., Corresponding Secretary; Miss Mary Martin of Jefferson City, Treasurer.

It was the privilege of the writer to visit Marble Hill and Will Mayfield College during the assembly. The school was not in session, but there was pleasure in looking over the property and its possibilities for the training of the young people of Missouri. It is a junior college and has a fine faculty under the leadership of its president, Professor A. F. Hendricks.

On our way back to St. Louis for an appointment at Maplewood the second Sunday in August we had a long talk with Rev. J. C. Owen of Fulton. He has been selected to lead the effort in Missouri for the completion of Missouri's part in the Seventy-five Million campaign, his church at Fulton having released him a few months for the purpose. We supplied the Maplewood pulpit also on Sunday, August 20. Our own pulpit has been supplied as follows: August 13, Deacon E. W. Sladek of the home church. August 20, Pres. A. F. Hendricks of Will Mayfield College. August 27, Rev. C. P. Kirkendoll of the St. Louis Church Federation.

Dr. F. A. Agar is to be in St. Louis during November for a campaign of church efficiency, a great opportunity for St. Louis Baptists.

N. K. Larson Ends Labors

Rev. N. K. Larson, for many years General missionary of the Norwegian Baptist Conference of America, died August 4 at his home in Whitehall, Wis.

He was born at Froien, Norway, July 30, 1876 and came to this country in 1884 with his parents, settling in South Dakota.

At the age of 16 he went to Chicago to attend the Divinity School, from which he graduated in 1896. His first pastorate was at Woodville, Wis., where he was ordained.

Bro. Larson was sent to Norway as a missionary pastor and given charge of the church at Tromso, where he remained four years. He came back to this country in 1900, coming directly to Whitehall, Wis. where he accepted the pastorate of the Church and remained for nine years. For thirteen years he has been doing missionary work; for two years in Wisconsin.

and the remaining years as general missionary and corresponding secretary of the Norwegian Baptist Conference of America, keeping up his secretarial work until his death.

Bro. Larson leaves his wife and three daughters. He was a faithful and untiring worker in the kingdom of God and will be greatly missed by a host of friends.

Baptist Relief Work Among the Students in Poland

By K. W. STRZELEC

Among the most suffering war victims in Poland are the students. Many of them have lost their possessions and relatives, enduring hunger, and covering their bodies with rags. They have been without hope of the possibility to resume their studies. The several American relief agencies which came to Poland to lift the trodden-down country stretched friendly hands to them and the brave conqueror of bolsheviki hordes have been helped and inspired for taking up school preparation which will enable them to build up their own country with thanks for the ideals for which American Christianity stands. By the Baptist sacrifices the Lord helped in this work wonderfully. Our work has been personal and is making deep moral and spiritual imprint on the students. We have been unsectarian in this work, but persistent Christian; we have not sold our birthright for friendship neither to the Roman Catholic authority nor to freethinkers. Hundreds of students knew that we believe that behind our benevolence is standing our exalted Redeemer.

In 1921 we have supported in four Polish universities 117 students. This year we have upon our list 468 young men studying in five government universities who receive help from us monthly. Of the 468 students 444 are Roman Catholics, 19 Protestants, 2 Greek Orthodox and 3 Jews. According to vocation they study, 129 jurisprudence, 82 medicine, 79 philosophy, 54 forestry, 39 architecture, 29 chemistry, 16 agriculture, 8 science of mining, 6 art and 26 different other callings. We have bought to 174 of them suits, and many pieces of good clothing from the "Ship in Fellowship" were distributed among them. There is no other class of people who have accepted our help with more appreciation than the students did.

We have to explain to them many questions about our faith. Of course we give to them tracts, which explain our attitude to the Gospel. We have also to answer inquiries coming to us from their relatives. Most of the questions are as this: "What is needed to know, and how must one proceed if he wishes to become a Baptist?" We mail to such people answer to this effect: "Please read the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ, study diligently his teachings, if you will find that the gospel appeals to you, if you will believe to his Word and follow his command without reservation with love and joy, then you can be sure you are the same faith as we are."

When one writes and will become Baptist, and we see that he has financial advantage in mind we answer that everybody who joins with the Baptists must, before he unites with them, give solemn promise that every tenth of his earning and income will be given for missions and for benevolence.

The majority of the students have sent to us written promises voluntarily that the money be returned. We think $20,000 would be sufficient for making this work a never-stopping, ceaseless Christian en terprize among the university students in Poland.

MAINE

WATERVILLE FIRST CHURCH has conducted a remarkably successful Vacation Bible School. Fortunately some recent graduates of Colby College and school teachers of very successful experience were available for the teaching course. These with the pastor, Rev. Walter Quarrington, gave themselves to their work with contagious enthusiasm. The grounds about the church as well as those of Coburn Institute and the public park gave ideal opportunities for out-door games. 187 pupils were enrolled.

THE CHURCH AT PITTSFIELD, Maine Central Institute and Baptist interests in the state have met with severe loss in the death of Judge O. H. Drake. For many years he served the church in official capacity, was treasurer of Maine Central Institute and member of the executive committee, was on the convention board of the United Baptist Convention of Maine and held other positions of trust, each of which he made an opportunity for faithful and important service.

Old Home Week and Centennial

Cambridge, a typical New England church, never large in numbers but exerting a potent influence in the community, state and nation, gave the week August 13-20 to the celebration of its centennial. It was gathered in 1822 by Rev. Jacob Hatch, a Christian school teacher who was soon ordained as its first pastor. His grandson Dr. E. C. Whittemore was one of the speakers at the Centennial. This is the home church of Dr. Irving B. Mower, for twenty years secretary of the Baptist Convention of Maine, to whose loyalty and special effort much of the success of what the Centennial marked is due. He had erected a beautiful window in memory of his father and mother, Deacon and Mrs. Bemiss Mower, and at his suggestion memorial windows were supplied for the entire church by families of prominent members. This church is the only church in the community which it serves well. It is notable however, more for what it has kept for itself. Not only has it given Dr. Mower, whose wise leadership has made a permanent contribution to all denominational interests in the state of Maine, but several years ago it sent out Rev. B. F. Turner whose faithful ministry had an early ending, Rev. D. W. Kimball an able and faithful preacher and minister in Massachusetts and Maine, and also Rev. T. Earnest Ham, a son of the church who served as its pastor for several years and successfully and faithfully has served other Maine churches, and who was present to speak his own words of appreciation of the meaning of the old church.

At the dedication of the memorial windows, Mr. Chester H. Pease of Portland and Mr. Elmer Cole of Dover, both successful business men, spoke tenderly of their parents and of what the church spoke for. Special reference was made to the work of the Sunday school many years led by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ham and to the music of the church so long conducted by them and in which they have worthy successors.

All departments of the work of the denomination in the home and mission fields were presented in the program. Mr. E. A. Rockwell of Newton Theological Institution is the acting pastor. Evangelistic services under the leadership of pastor-evangelist Benj. Beatty, will follow the Old Home Week. The entire celebration was significant as a recognition of the broad and permanent work of a small church.

NEW YORK

MISS FAITH MOORS WILLIAMS, daughter of Mrs. Maude Moors Williams, was united in marriage to Rev. Frank William Lorimer, pastor of the Harlem Baptist Church, New York City, at the Moors Farm in West Winfield, Herkimer Co., at 4:30 p. m., on Friday, Aug. 21. The double ring service was performed by the father of the groom, Rev. Addison B. Lorimer, D. D., of Portland, Maine. The bride is a native of Utica, N. Y., and a graduate of Wellesley and Columbia. Mr. Lorimer is a graduate of Yale and Chicago, and is at present in senior class at Union Seminary. Mr. and Mrs. Lorimer will be at home after Oct. 1 at the Manse, 213 E. 123rd-St., New York City.

WEST VIRGINIA

TWENTIETH STREET, HUNTINGTON: Pastor Chas. E. Griffin resigned July 23, to accept the unanimous call to the First Church, Homestead, Pa. He will close his pastorate in Huntington Aug. 27, and begin in Homestead Sept. 10.

In the two and one-half years of his ministry here more than 200 new members have been received, 14 of them by baptism. A new church of 410 charter members mostly from this church, the Baptist Temple, was organized Aug. 10, in a fine residential section of the city, and on Sunday, Aug. 13, Pastor Griffin preached the opening sermon in their new tabernacle which is to serve them until the permanent building can be erected. In the afternoon a recognition council met and the new church was duly recognized and at the evening hour the pastor preached again and baptized four, thus dedicating the new baptistry.

OHIO

A Mute Minister

On August 16, there was held with Bethel Church a very interesting service when George Halse was set apart for the work as a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ. Brother Halse is a mute, and was at one time an instructor in the state institution for those so afflicted. The council was organized by electing Rev. George Wiggin, of the Amella church as moderator, and the Clerk of Bethel church as the clerk of the Council. Brother Halse told in mute language his Christian experience, his call to carry the message to others, and the grounds of his faith. An interpreter was there who told his answers, and it was voted that we proceed with the ordination. Pastor Wiggin delivered the ordination sermon, which was a masterly presentation of the saving power of vicarious faith and impressed upon his hearers their need of faith in their Saviour to lead others to him in prayer. He used, as his text, the bringing of the sick to Jesus, and letting him down through the roof. (Luke 5:17-20.) Pastor Lucas gave the ordaining prayer, Rev. Johnson, the charge to the candidate and Pastor Smith, the charge to the church. Brother Halse closed with the benediction in the mute language. Brother Halse has a congregation of mutes to which he preaches and whom he has been successful in winning to the Saviour.

DR. T. M. HOFMEISTER, pastor First Church Greenfield, preached the introductory sermon at the Clifton Association, Blanchester. His theme "Strange Things," was a fountain of inspiration to the many who heard this masterful address.

THE FLETCHER CHURCH, has been without a pastor since December and would like to hear from anyone who is without a pastorate.

They have a membership of 114. Four candidates are awaiting baptism, and they feel that there is a great work to be done. A young people's society was organized about a year ago, and now has a membership of forty young people, who feel the need of some one to help them in their work. The church clerk is George Motter, R. F. D. 1, Sidney.

ILLINOIS

REV. WM. M. FOURS has accepted an unanimous call to the First Church, Warren, Illinois. He is also a member of faculty of the Northern Baptist Seminary at Chicago.

IOWA

THE HARP EVANGELIST, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, is supplying the Walnut Street Church of Waterloo, his home town, during Pastor MacDonald's vacation.

KANSAS

CLAY CENTER CHURCH has installed three fifty-two-inch ceiling fans, and they are a great success inasmuch as they don't make enough noise to interfere with the preaching and are a real comfort to the congregation. Rev. J. F. Wells, field secretary of the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary, occupied the pulpit on Sunday, August 13.

FIRST CHURCH, LEAVENWORTH, has just purchased a parsonage for $4500. When minor repairs are completed Pastor Franklin Beery will be living in one of the finest parsonages in Kansas.

MINNESOTA

PARKER'S PRAIRIE CHURCH is enjoying a continuous revival under the ministry of Pastor A. J. Dahlby, who came on the field June 1. Nearly fifty persons have been baptized, most of them the fruit of special meetings held by the church in April and of diligent follow-up work by the pastor since his arrival. The church had forty-three resident members on April 1, and the town has not more than 600 people; yet the pastor is able to report that "despite the heat, which has been steadily between 90 and 100, we have had 100 or more at Sunday services, and forty to fifty-five at prayer meetings."

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

GALILEE CHURCH, DENVER, will occupy its new building on Sept. 10, celebrating the fulfillment of hopes and plans cherished for several years past. Pastor Gravett has been ill with flu since his trip to Chicago to preach at the Moody Church, but is now improving.

IDAHO

The Knul Church called a council for July 16, to consider setting apart their Pastor, Rev. R. J. McKowen, to the ministry. The council was composed of a large and representative body of pastors and deacons of nearby churches. Rev. E. O. Otto of Gooding was elected moderator, and Deacon A. S. Martyn of Twin Falls, clerk. After a thorough examination conducted by Rev. E. O. Otto, Pastor Guy Jones of Buhl, and Pastor W. H. Tolliver of Twin Falls, the council recommended favorably, and the church, with the assistance of the council, proceeded to ordain him in due form.

CALIFORNIA

Vallejo's New Building

The corner stone of the new edifice of the First Church, Vallejo, was laid at noon on Sunday, August 6, with imposing ceremonies. The pastor, Dr. Luther Parker Russell, was assisted by the pastors of the Presbyterian, Episcopal and Methodist churches of Vallejo. The program consisted of a hymn by the choir; invocation by Rev. D. A. Mobly of the Presbyterian church; Scripture reading by Rev. J. T. MacGovern of the Episcopal church; an address by Admiral J. S. McKean, Commandant of Mare Island Navy Yard, on the relation of the Navy Yard to Vallejo and of Vallejo to the Navy Yard and the vital part the churches held in that relation; an address by Prof. J. W. Johnson, D.D. of the Berkley Divinity School, on what the Baptist denomination is to the world; a solo by Mr. C. E. Rykert; the reading of the history of the Vallejo church from its organization in 1869 to the present; the placing of the stone by the pastor; concluding with prayer and benediction by Rev. A. B. Gilbert, pastor of the Methodist church.

A large crowd filled the street and cross street, which during the ceremonies was closed to traffic by the chief of police. The address of Admiral McKean was a clear-cut practical appreciation of the church by one who, while not a member of any church, recognizes the fact that the church is a necessity if good society and good government are to be obtained and maintained. For this reason he was particularly glad to see the new church erected in Vallejo, since it was a guarantee that when the sailors—and they are many and come from every section of the United States—come ashore they will come into a good moral and religious atmosphere and one that will not injure their morals or discipline, and so help to maintain the efficiency of the American Navy.

The First Church building is a fine artistic structure of German-Gothic. It is to be entirely of brick, and will cost (leaving the interior of the auditorium as yet unfinished) $47,702. It will be a veritable work-shop with its large Sunday-school assembly hall and numerous class rooms, rooms for the ladies' aid, pastor's study, dining hall and kitchen. The assembly hall will be fitted with a stage, motion picture equipment, and in fact will be adequately equipped for the social life of the younger and also the older members of the church.

As above stated the auditorium can not be completed now for lack of funds. For some time to come it will be necessary to hold all worship in the Sunday-school assembly hall. This will be a hardship but is unavoidable, as to finish the church complete will require $75,000, and there is only some $40,000 in sight. The necessity for so large a building on account of the great number of sailors and enlisted men appeals so strongly to the church that it was resolved to build a church that would ultimately meet the demand. The state board of California and the board of the Northern Baptist Convention recognized the merit of the undertaking and contributed $10,000 to the new edifice. This was a great aid to the small membership all of whom are just ordinary people financially.

This church has been erected principally through the wise, practical leadership of Dr. Russell. He has had great obstacles to vanquish but he has come out victorious. This is the eighth edifice Dr. Russell has built. The church is deeply grateful to him for his masterful work here. It can almost be said of him that wherever he went he built a church. T. S. TURNER.

YERBA BUENA NAVAL Training Station, colloquially known as "Goat Island" Station, has about 2000 boys in service. With them are two chaplains, the "Station Chaplain" being W. R. Hall. Six religious services are held every Sunday, and lectures, addresses, and other features are provided for week nights. Nearly every week one or more of the boys is baptized at the First Church, San Francisco. One of the duties of each chaplain is that of librarian, and 10,000 books are available for distribution among the boys. Mr. Hall, a Baptist, and one of our own denominational missionaries, is engaged in an important work.

The vital Christian must be at one and the same time a conservative and a progressive; conserving all that God has given us in the yesterdays and going on with God to achieve, discover and possess, until the kingdoms of this world become the possession of our Lord. Christianity is a deed to be done as well as a message to be received. It is a service to be rendered as well as a story to be told. It is a life—a life from God, lived for God, by giving itself for others, after the manner and with the passion and purpose of Jesus. —Selected.

PROPOSED NEW CHURCH EDIFICE AT VALLEJO, CAL.

Great Events in Latvia

By JOHN ALEXANDER FREY

ON Sunday, July 30, the great Dome of Riga had an audience of more than six thousand people. This is the largest building in Latvia and is more than seven hundred years old. This great assembly had gathered to do honor to Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard, who as members of the Foreign Mission Board were visiting Latvia. A splendid organ recital by the famous Dome organist, H. Creutzburg, opened the service, and all the chorus choirs of the Baptist churches in Riga furnished vocal music. The climax of the meeting came in the addresses of Dr. Abernethy and his comrade, who conveyed hearty greetings from our brethren in America. The Lutheran Church very kindly placed at our disposal their venerable and old temple of God and all without charges. The Baptists of Riga are therefore very thankful for this evidence of Christian fellowship. Bishop Irbe, the head of the Lutheran Church in Latvia, on this occasion sent a telegram which read "May God unite Christ's people."

The next day our honored guests came to Libau, where Rev. E. Ribeneek, pastor of the Nazareth Baptist Church, is also mayor of the city. The city council gave a splendid luncheon in the Kurhaus at the seashore, at which many heads of the various civic organizations were present. After a ride to the naval port, the party returned and had tea in the Nazareth Church. This was followed by a reception at which the leading persons of the five Baptist churches and the two Lutheran churches came to pay their respects. At 6:30 an immense audience crowded to the Lutheran Church in Libau. There must have been six thousand people massed into this great auditorium. The pastor, Dr. Wiswald Sanders, introduced the guests with most appropriate words and offered a prayer in their behalf. He then requested them to occupy his pulpit. Once more united choruses of Baptist churches furnished music.

When the welcome service was finished and the guests stepped out from the church yard they were surprised at the arrangements by the chief commandant of the military forces of Libau, Mr. Kukis, and the mayor and the prefect of the city. There was arranged a magnificent parade of the military forces, of policemen, of firemen, of factory, business, and trade union men, of the teachers and children of all schools in the town with many bands of music. After a welcoming speech by the commander-in-chief and the hurrahs by the military forces and the other representatives of Libau, the parade went through the main streets in honor of the guests, who stood in a high place at the front door of the city hall. The passing of the parade took one hour's time. The whole town was on foot, at least 50,000 to 60,000 people. The houses were adorned with flags. So Libau honored the pastor of the President of the United States. The feeling of thanks was still fresh because of the proclamation of the recognition de jure of Latvia by the United States Government, which had taken place two days before Dr. Abernethy's arrival in Latvia.

Early in the morning of August 1 our guests made a motor car trip in the country to Sakas, a center of Baptists. There was a nice meeting partly in the open air, partly in the local Baptist church adorned with flowers. The country folks were very happy to meet the gentlemen and brethren in Christ. The trip was continued with the motor car to Windau. On the road we passed many arches with inscriptions welcoming the Americans. In Windau the heads of the town organizations and leaders of the Baptist churches gave a dinner for forty distinguished persons. A great assembly, about 3,000, crowded in the Baptist church, where the Lutheran pastor and some heads of the military and communal organizations made speeches of hearty welcome. The harbor master arranged a round trip in the port. Our singers sang hymns at the boarding of the vessel. The singing drew people to the banks of the river. The singers bade farewell at the railroad station for an hour before the train started. Many people gathered round about, and so the gospel and good tidings were spread abundantly. On August 2 in Riga Dr. Abernethy was given audience by Mr. Meierowitz, the prime minister of Latvia. The afternoon till late in the night both brethren spent in the seminary church with the students in the classrooms. At five o'clock they had tea with the leaders of the Baptist work, where the president of the Union, Rev. P. Laubert, made a speech thanking for all the help and sympathy the Lettish Baptists have received from the American and English Baptists. At seven we had in the seminary church the final farewell meeting. Many inspiring speeches were offered and the joy was indescribable. The visit of these brethren attached new significance to the work of our seminary in the minds of our church people.

On the occasion of this visit of Dr. Abernethy and Mr. Sheppard to Latvia, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke sent a most affectionate message of greeting in which he said, "May rich blessing attend the visit of our honored brethren from America, and the churches receive reinforcement of spiritual power through their presence. It is a delight to realize in these days that we have in truth a Baptist world fellowship, that we are no longer isolated by dwelling in different countries, but are rendering our service as one body on behalf of the kingdom of our God and his Christ. Your visitors will speak on behalf of the Baptists of the United States and will express their good will and brotherly concern. Be assured that they speak not only for the American Baptists, but speak also the things that are in the hearts of Canadian and British Baptists."

The newspapers of Latvia gave us extraordinary publicity and published many fine articles about the visit and the addresses of our guests. Stenographers have taken down their messages and they will be published so that their golden words will not be lost for the people who could not attend the meetings. Long will Latvia remember these great days and the wonderful visit of our brethren from America.

Riga, Latvia.

The Word Is Life

AMONG the Golah tribe in Liberia there was a chieftain named Dowodowda. He was intelligent and had an inquiring mind. His body was covered with the charms and fetishes of his tribe. In his heart was a longing for something he knew not. He consulted all the witch-doctors of his tribe and other tribes, but they could not help him.

Finally a Mohammedan missionary came to his people and instructed them in the Mohammedan faith. This was a step higher than anything Dowodowda had known before so he became a happy Mohammedan convert. It was higher than heathenism, and the poor chief thought that at last he had found that for which his heart sorely craved.

He learned the Arabic language in order to read the Koran. It was not long before he had mastered this difficult language and memorized the Koran. Then he made that long journey across the continent of Africa to Mecca—the goal of every devout Mohammedan. He was charmed by his newly found faith and its teachings, but away down in his heart of hearts there was still unrest and starvation.

About this time the American Bible Society sent a donation of Bibles to the Methodist Episcopal missions in West Africa. There were included in this gift Bibles in both the English and Arabic tongue. A copy of John's Gospel in Arabic fell in Dowodowda's hand through a converted Golah man; and as Dowodowda read this beautiful love story as recorded by John the scales fell from his eyes, the light shown into his heart, and with gladness and great rejoicings he exclaimed, "Hallelujah! I have found that for which I have so long sought, for which I hungered and thirsted, and now I am satisfied."

Then this converted man made a long journey to the mission station to ask for a copy of John's Gospel, that he might have it as his own. Not only was this given him, but also a copy of the Bible in Arabic. As he sat examining the contents of his gift, his eyes fell upon that verse in the first chapter of the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans, which reads, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "Thank God," said he, "I do believe and my soul is satisfied, for this blessed gospel of Christ satisfieth unto the uttermost—even me, a Golah man."—Central Christian Advocate.

crush the nats! Oh, bless those Intermediates, each and every one—look Dick, just see this darling doll! And this splendid scrapbook! And this marvelous top. Yes, this will crush the nats! This will crush the nats!" (Until an eavesdropper might think that nats were touchable, see-able, crushable gnats!)

But in spite of their invisibility I am sure you can guess how the Nat Trap had the desired effect upon them, when the pride of possessing a doll made little Miss Sugar-And-Spice say quaintly: 'I tell you how it is, now that I have this white folk's dolly. I wouldn't be surprised if Mamma Faraway's God would guard me with a special, all the same as He guards her.' And nat number one was trapped!

The lovely part of it is that another year has rolled around; summer is again before us; other evil spirits over in China and in Africa and in India still need trapping; other missionaries are wishing and hoping and praying that other Intermediates (and Juniors and Primaries) will bait such a trap for them! Which is such a perfectly obvious hint that I imagine every ship that sails in September will have a box in its hold—for you have part of the bait in your home this very minute. Haven't you?

thought I was. For me the service was a very beautiful one, I am so glad that I am a member of the church, and if I can't be of much service to the church I can be a beautiful Christian for others, to help them. The pastor gave a sermon that opened many people's eyes and if it didn't they were of a wholly blind nature. . . . My longing for the future is to be a missionary in China, or I would like to go through some of the hospitals where they keep disabled soldiers and tell them about Jesus, or get in some children's hospital and save them for Jesus. I hope I can always serve Him in some way.

Your friend,

EDITOR'S NOTE: A letter six weeks later includes the following paragraphs: "My faith and love for Jesus is growing more every day. . . . Last Sunday evening just before church was to close the pastor gave them a chance to give their hearts to Jesus; my cousin, F—, her mother, and brother C—, were converted. F— is so happy. That was one thing that caused me to trust Jesus more, that part of my prayers are answered. The most comfort I have when I am in trouble is to take it all to God in prayer. . . . It makes me happy to know that I have some one I can always trust and can always look to for help."

The three for whom she had prayed and worked so faithfully have since all been baptized and are members with her in the church where she found Christ. If all this blessing could come to her in less than five months, who can forecast the riches of God's grace to her through the years to come!

this law. The law will not be adequately enforced till we have this active and convinced public opinion. Prohibition will not be safe till it is grounded in the intelligence, the conviction and the life of the people. Adapting the striking words of Mr. H. G. Wells, we may say that "History more and more reduces itself to a row between education and catastrophe."

Church in Germany

federations can become a blessing for the whole of Christendom. With heartfelt thankfulness we have noted during the past years that streams of brotherly helpfulness have flowed into our land not only from the National Lutheran Council and other Lutherans, but also from prominent churches of the Federal Council.

"The only hope for a torn world is that all nations may bow under the mind and will of the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ, our universal Lord and Saviour. You will understand, honored sirs and brothers, if we for truth's sake sincerely acknowledge that under the pressure of our present condition we look to the future with heavy hearts.

"With you we are convinced that the outer and inner burdens which cause our nation and other nations to sigh have their roots in the fact that the spirit of Jesus Christ, the spirit of truth and love, has not become the moving power in the lives of men and nations. Thus we consider this time of darkness in which we find ourselves as an urgent call of God to the hearts of all people to seek with renewed earnestness that which serves the peace of the world. We are convinced that all the Christian churches should follow this call of God in the spirit of brotherliness and truth by unitedly seeking to uplift the life of mankind with the renewing power of the gospel."

Council consists of the president or chairman and secretary of each group and all matters pertaining to two or more groups will be referred to the Council. Thus all overlapping will be avoided and a much more vigorous program for all the young people of the church can be carried out.

There is available a vast amount of excellent literature on devotional, biblical, social and missionary topics. A worker's library will be most helpful to the young people. This may well be a part of the church or church-school worker's library. The American Baptist Publication Society will always gladly give suggestions as to the best books and will furnish or secure the same for any individual, group or society. The young people's pages of THE BAPTIST edited by Dr. James Asa White are full of valuable suggestions.

Every program of young people's work must start with the devotional meeting. And the young people do respond to these meetings. The strong emphasis of the Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. movements on the devotional development of the young people has been the secret of much of their success.

But our young people are also social beings and require social entertainment and development. In these days of so much commercialized play and entertainment our Christian young people have a great opportunity and obligation to lead in a great constructive program of social-ability for the youth of the community. There are many valuable books that help. But we need trained leaders and social committees that will look upon their task as a Christian service of the first importance. The social life of the society or groups of young people in the church may be made to minister in the highest way to the glory of God.

In a correlated program for all the young people's work of the church the Bible study of the church school will be supplemented by classes of a more devotional study of the Bible and training in leadership, mission study and the like. If a church school of missions is conducted the young people will do best to join in and have their classes meet as a part of the larger group.

Just a suggestion for the Junior work. In Judson Memorial church last year our Juniors met in three sessions. They met as Junior department of the church school at 9:30; attended morning service of the church at 10:45, occupying the front pews and remaining for the worship period, which included a sermonette. They then retired to their own room during the singing of a hymn at 11:15 and met as the Junior Society until 12:00 and closed their program in time to go home as the church service closed. A very competent leader with one or two assistants made the last period very valuable. We had about 100% attendance at the three sessions. A similar program will be carried out this year, though we have changed the time of the church school to 12 o'clock.

the best they can, to make it possible for them to do their best by giving them the special instruction that can be given through such a class, and by assigning individual members of the class to serve as teachers in particular departments, and furnishing them with such definite materials and information as will acquaint them with the work of that department. We must capitalize the good will of these volunteers and we must capitalize our good sense as well and give them the specific help they deserve.

Thirdly, careful plans ought to be laid at once for the regular monthly conference of teachers and officers of the school. This conference should be a time for deepening fellowship and strengthening the spirit of good will, a time also for very earnest prayer and frank and fearless facing of all of the needs of the school, and the transaction of such business as may be necessary. But it ought, particularly to be an occasion for study by departmental groups, a study of those phases of the school work in which the group participates as a group, such as matters of worship, attendance, and discipline.

Finally, a community training school has particular advantages for active Sunday-school workers, because of the stimulus and inspiration of the fellowship afforded and the opportunity given for the exchange of experiences. It is usually the case, too, that through such a school the best instruction that is available in the community can be offered to all, and by means of it all our Sunday-school staff of teachers and officers can become pupils and avail themselves of such instruction as will enable them to keep growing, and defend themselves against mental laziness.

The needs of our churches and communities are such as to demand our best. The challenge is one that comes straight to the hearts of our Sunday-school officers and teachers. If you fail, the church fails. Your devotion and intelligent loyalty to your task can guarantee the bringing in of a new day. Our Saviour and the world he died to save, are waiting for determined dedication to this task.

Baptists as a World Power

By P. W. WILSON

TO any one who recalls what were the splendors of ceremonial religion, Catholic and Protestant, which once adorned with a divine sanction the banished thrones of the Old World, it is indeed strange to be told that Warren Gamaliel Harding, Charles Evans Hughes and David Lloyd George should belong, all of them, with John D. Rockefeller, to "a sect" once so despised, so persecuted and so poor as the Baptists. Let Lady Sneerwell cease her ribaldry at the staggering thought that of these four men, sons of the Baptist churches, the first is the elected head of a sovereign state, wealthier by far and not less proud than was the France of King Louis XIV; the second is his elected sovereign's Minister, charged with responsibilities which would have surpassed the utmost ambitions of a Richelieu; as Prime Minister of England, the third is endowed with a prestige compared with which the pretensions of Cardinal Wolsey sink into insignificance; while the fourth, as monarch of commerce, has founded, like the Medici or the Rothschilds, the richest family in the world and administers revenues which but yesterday would have been envied by many a first-class state. All these are Baptists, and between them they are ruling, under democratic sanctions, one-third of the human race. It means that over the palaces of emperors, the castles of the nobility, the mansions of the merchant, the fortresses of the militarist, the colleges of the erudite, and the cathedrals of the ecclesiastics, those humble folk, who were immersed in the chilly yet soul-cleansing waters of the River Jordan, who prayed the more zealously in their chapels because they were excluded from parliament and the universities, who were too Puritan even for the Puritans, have at last established their civic claim. He hath indeed put down the mighty from their seats and hath exalted them of low degree. The stone which the builders of modern civilization so contemptuously rejected, the same has become the head of the corner. For the first time this year, so it seems, the Baptists of the United States are more numerous than any other Protestant communion. The dissenters from an old nation have become the very essence of a new nation; and it is marvelous in our eyes.

Such an achievement of prosperity, commercial, political, social, is unparalleled.—P. W. WILSON, in the New York Times.

Esthonian Baptists

English representative, James Lees, spoke, his theme being "England for Freedom and Education." Greetings were read from England, Canada, America, Germany, Latvia and other places, including a letter from Dr. Shakespeare and a telegram from Dr. Rushbrooke. Then each delegate spoke. Several of these were men who had been imprisoned many times and had been put in chains because of the preaching of the Gospel. Pastor Laas, as one of the first Baptists who had suffered so much, was so overwhelmed that he could only speak like old Simeon: "Now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation!"

We now have sixteen students in our Seminary, all eager to learn. Please remember the Seminary in your prayers. All our churches and all our students are blessing you in their souls. May the Lord bless you and your country!

Our Book Shelf

The Forgiveness of Sins, by George Adam Smith. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

A new edition of a collection of fifteen sermons by a master of Hebrew exegesis and Biblical interpretation. The first sermon gives the title to the book, which includes a wide variety of themes.

The Life of Robert Laws of Livingstonia, by W. P. Livingstone. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $3.00.

The last half century has witnessed amazing changes in "The Dark Continent," and this fascinating story of Robert Laws covers almost the whole of that period; for Dr. Laws arrived in 1875 at the mouth of the Zambesi River, just past twenty-four, bound for the heart of Africa to build on idiom, characteristic of Jewish Hellenists, David Livingstone's well-laid foundations.

The great mission known as Livingstonia, maintained by Scotch Presbyterians, is for the most part of the history of Dr. Laws; and that history has been written with skill and affection by the gifted secretary of the foreign mission society of the United Free Church of Scotland, Dr. Livingstone, to whom we are also indebted for the thrilling stories of Mary Slessor and Christina Forsyth, both Scottish missionaries to Africa.

The Life of Laws is a closely-printed book of nearly 400 pages, with some sixty illustrations and maps. The scene of the story is the region around Lake Nyasa to the west and south, in British Central Africa. There is material here for many a delightful and exciting evening's reading during the coming winter.

Intensive Powers on the Western Slopes, by Lemuel Call Barnes. Philadelphia: The Judson Press.

In a little book of fifty pages, delightful to read and finely illustrated, Dr. Barnes, Field Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, has disclosed a vision and sounded a warning concerning the Great West of our country. It is an astonishing piece of work for a man who never, as far as we know, lived in the region of which he writes with so splendid insight. Dr. Barnes has for many years crossed again and again the plains and mountains of the land whose potential resources he estimates, and he knows his subject as few genuine Westerners know it.

Holy Ground, by T. H. Darlow. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

Dr. Darlow, who is literary editor of the British Bible Society, works out a series of spiritual messages based on the analogy of the Holy Land and the Christian experiences which he terms "the spirit's Palestine." The Well at Bethlehem, The Cottage at Nazareth, Bethel, The Upper Room, and other sacred places, serve to interpret the holy land of the soul. In view of improved conditions in the book publishing business the Doran Company are bringing out new editions of a large number of valued religious books long out of print. "Holy Ground" is one of this group.

Footsteps in the Path of Life, by Marcus Dods. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

"He was a Christian," said W. Robertson Nicoll of this devout and scholar Scot; and his fine Christian mind and soul are revealed in this series of meditations and prayers for each Sunday of the year. The book first appeared in 1909, and comes now in a fine new edition.

Grace, by Lewis Sperry Chafer. Philadelphia: Sunday School Times Co. $1.50.

D. L. Moody would have found much to rejoice in, in this book, with its fidelity to the word of God, its exaltation of the theme of grace, its reverence for the personality and work of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Chafer has aimed his work directly at "Modernism": "That the leaders of modernism are unregenerate men and therefore themselves spiritually blind is self-revealed by their attitude toward that truth which forms the only basis upon which, according to the Scriptures, a soul may be saved."

A Literary Guide to the Bible, by Laura H. Wild. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $2.00.

Miss Wild has had a large experience, scholastic and practical, to qualify her as a teacher of the Bible. A graduate of Smith and of Hartford Seminary, service in a Y. W. C. A. secretaryship and in a pastorate in a Congregational church led up to college work until she came to Mount Holyoke College as professor of biblical literature.

The conclusions of modern biblical criticism are assumed, and the larger part of the material concerns the Old Testament. The nine major divisions of the book are: Folk-lore, Story Telling, History, Hebrew Poetry, Dramatic Literature, Wisdom Literature, Oratory, and Essay.

An exquisite verve and charm characterize these discussions; and while the main purpose of the author is to reveal the beauty and power of the Bible as literature, its spiritual value is by no means incidental. The preacher will find much of practical help in interpretation, teaching and utterance. In discussing oratory Miss Wild says: "The first five minutes of a speech are the most precarious minutes in the whole address. Before the speaker opens his mouth attention is anywhere except upon what he has to say; of course, because he has not said it. Eyes have been upon him, his dress, his features, his manner. As he stands up attention is still upon him, not upon his speech. What he must do in that first five minutes is to turn attention away from himself to his words, to the thought he is presenting. . . . Some vigorous and forceful method must be employed by a speaker to shake the attention of his audience loose from eye perceptions, apply it to ear perceptions and hold it there."

"It Is to Laugh"

A sportsman engaged an old French Canadian as his guide. Happening to notice a clump of cranberry vines, he asked the old man what they were and whether they were good to eat.

"Good to eat? Well I guess yes, you take that little cranberry and stew him and she makes just as good applesauce as prunes."—Capper's Weekly.

Two girl friends became engaged to be to be married. Upon meeting each other one day, one said to the other, "I hear you are engaged to be married."

The other replied, "Yes, I'm engaged to a doctor, and when I marry I will be well for nothing."

"I am engaged to a minister and when I marry him I will be good for nothing!" retorted the other.—A SUBSCRIBER.

A little boy called on his aunt who lived next door, allured by certain savory smells.

"Hello, Aunt Sue," he greeted her, "nice day." Then after a minute's embarrassed pause, he came to the point. "Aunt Sue, I smell somethin' that smells like first-rate pie with raisins in it."

"Yes, Billy, I have some mince pies, but they're for company."

He pondered this and then suggested hopefully, "I came to make a little bit of a visit myself."—Judge.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

THE MUSIC OF THE MODERN CHURCH

The Protestant churches of the world are facing today the fact of their inefficiency. They are awakening to a new era that is demanding of them new and broader interpretations, larger vision, new methods and alignments—a necessity for universal good-will, cooperation and Christian unity. The leaders of Christian thought are today stressing new imperatives. Our music must keep pace. It must do the same.

The value of singing to a church or Sunday school depends upon what they sing and how it is sung. If the list of songs is limited to a few hymns the singing will be perfunctory, particularly if they have little present-day significance. Those sung in many of our churches and schools are of the different type, or have become so from monotonous use. The time given them is practically wasted, indeed, worse than wasted.

The purpose of singing is to please, arouse, instruct and inspire. Congregational singing may be made the most potent influence of Christian growth and culture. There is no more important adjunct to a church or school than a competent committee on music whose aim will be to attain these results. We must have singing. The success or failure of most services depends upon the what and how of singing.

Probably the majority of congregations of our country are now singing hymns that possess nothing of conviction or inspiration. Some of the tunes are popular but they do not carry the spirit of religion. In no way are they profitable. Their influence is not good.

Accredited editors and publishers of church and Sunday-school music are announcing new hymnals that voice the needs of today. Let us be wise and use, at whatever cost, the best to be had with the best of leadership.—J. H. FILLMORE in The Choir.

TURNING PAGES

It is surprising what a lot of noise can be made by a single sheet of paper in the process of turning over a page. In a choir that is aggravated by the fact that, when the time has come for one member to turn his page, it has also come for every other one, and the noise of the single page, annoying as that was, is at once raised to the nth power by the combined efforts of all the other copies also to be heard. A little practice can easily do away with all that confusion, for it is entirely possible to turn a page without the slightest noise. And it ought not only be done in a manner inoffensive to the ear, but also inoffensive to the eye. It can be done very clumsily, and it can be done very gracefully. It pays to do it just right.—Choir Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From the A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston, Mass.
My Fiddle is Singing.....Bartlett ($5.00)
Midnight.....Milligan ($6.00)
Down to the Crystal Streamlet.....Grant-Schaefer ($6.00)
Three songs which while markedly different in type and statement yet agree in being highly individual and characteristic. The Bartlett song is a sympathetic setting of a clever poem by Joseph Campbell, the idea of the singer as a minstrel being deftly handled. The vocal line is attractive and pleasing, and the piano background is quite simple. "Midnight" is from a set of three songs (published separately) issued under the collective title of "Algerian Love Songs." If the other two songs are up to the level of the one listed above (and Mr. Milligan has a habit of self-criticism which makes for such a standard) this set of songs will win a high position in the output of the season. Mr. Milligan takes fine advantage of the suggested oriental color of the poem, and has produced a most interesting and delightful song. And it is a real "song", not a piano solo with incidental vocal recitatives!

The selection by a former Evanstonian, Mr. Grant-Schaefer, is likewise one of a set of songs: this from five delightful numbers issued under the collective title of "French-Canadian Songs." The melodies are folksongs of the habitants of Quebec, arranged with appropriate piano parts and elaborated somewhat by this excellent composer. The song titled above is fascinating in its melodic curve. The entire set will afford a fine supply of out-of-the-usual concert selections. This is the only one issued for two keys, the others are for medium voice only.

From the Rodeheaver Co., Chicago, Ill.

Emmanuel.....Beirly ($1.10)
Sub-titled as a sacred oratorio, this large work by Dr. Alfred Beirly, should prove of decided value to choirs requiring extended works of not above medium grade of difficulty. The music is tuneful and straight-forward in type, not of any great individuality and circumscribed as to harmonic vocabulary—the feeling is largely diatonic; but its melodic interest, the variety of vocal combinations used, and the absence of any serious difficulties should assure the work a wide usage among the volunteer choir fraternity. Most of the separate numbers can be used as independent anthems or other selections, thereby adding to the value of the work to the average choir; the stewart binding used will also be a favorable point.

The Gospel in Salvador

By WILLIAM KEECH, General Missionary

MUCH of our educational program is as yet in project. The school in Santa Ana, which is under the auspices of the Woman's Home Mission Society is making splendid headway and thus far has fulfilled our most sanguine expectations. During the present year there are 173 scholars and many applications have had to be turned down on account of lack of accommodation. The school edifice is already proving far too inadequate for the needs.

There should be a primary school established in all our chief centers, for the children of our believers are subjected to all sorts of insults and petty molestation on account of their religion. There have been cases where the teachers of the public schools, which are generally under Catholic control, have refused to teach the children of Protestants. In other cases the children are marched off to mass or are taught the catechism with the others; on account of these things a number of our people refrain from sending their children to school at all. There can be no doubt as to our responsibility toward these children and their parents who have been converted to evangelical Christianity. Native teachers must be trained for this work before we can begin to fill this simplest and primary educational need.

A fine site has been secured in San Salvador for the training school, which we hope to see built and in operation in as brief time as it is possible. The ultimate success of all our work depends on this.

We now have three of our young men in the seminary at Saltillo, Mexico, training for the ministry and two more are expecting to go this coming year. We are glad to be able to send these to the seminary but we hope to see the day when they may be trained in their own country and among their own people.

The churches are catching the vision of their responsibility and the task of evangelizing their own countrymen as never before and to this end a large volume of prayer and intercession is going up and much individual effort is being put forth. We would enlist the prayers of all our readers on behalf of this spiritual movement which is in progress. God is evidently breathing upon the people and our hearts are full of expectancy.

As I write we are in the midst of a special mission which is being held by the Revs. H. Strachan and Juan C. Varetto who are traveling the whole of Latin America on a special evangelizing tour. Meetings are being held in tent or theater or wherever is most appropriate to accommodate the crowds that gather. Hundreds of people of the most intelligent classes are listening to the gospel night by night who perhaps could only be reached in some such way as this. Mr. Varetto is from the Argentine Republic and was a worker under the Southern Baptist Convention. He gives forth the gospel in its purity with great power, and the people listen to his message with intense interest. All the missionaries and churches are co-operating in this campaign which is proving the timeliness and opportunity for bringing the masses of Latin America to a knowledge of the gospel.

Our churches have been enriched greatly by the visits of Dr. A. T. Fowler of North Orange and the Rev. C. S. Detweiler, as also the Revs. H. B. Dinwiddie and L. L. Letgers, who came to us upon invitation during their visits to Central America.

The Training of Christian Guides

Negro Colleges and Seminaries supported and assisted by THE AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY and the WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY have sent out as Christian guides:

5,000 Ministers
10,000 Teachers
300 Pharmacists and Dentists

700 Physicians
150 Lawyers
Innumerable Welfare Workers

The General and Woman's Home Mission Societies are largely supporting ten Negro schools: Storer, Virginia Union, Hartshorn, Shaw, Mather, Benedict, Morehouse, Spelman, Jackson, Bishop. The two Societies are assisting six schools which are chiefly supported by Negroes themselves: Florida, Selma, Coleman, Arkansas, Roger Williams, State.

LEGACIES and ANNUITY AGREEMENTS have provided funds for these institutions. What better way to make a memorial gift?

The Education Department of The American Baptist Home Mission Society is a safe administrator of funds for those who desire to advance Christian Education in Mission Fields of North America.

Before the end of 1922 this Society will have $1,371,000 of endowment funds for its Mission Schools. This is only a small part of the much greater sum that is needed.

Education That Is The Handmaid of Evangelism

In addition to our schools for Negroes The American Baptist Home Mission Society's educational system embraces:

The International Baptist Seminary in East Orange, New Jersey, where missionaries are trained for work among the racial groups in America and Europe.

The Spanish-American Seminary at Los Angeles, California.

Bacone College, Muskogee, Oklahoma, where education and evangelism go hand in hand in the moulding of young lives representing twenty-three Indian tribes.

El Cristo College, one of the leading institutions for the training of Christian workers in Cuba.

Schools for the training of Christian leadership in Mexico and Porto Rico.

NOTE—In Jamaica, Haiti and Nicaragua we are answering in a small way the urgent calls for a better trained ministry. Funds must be provided to enable the Society to meet this demand fully.

God Calls

NOT often does God summon his servants with trumpet and drum. Significant endeavor and high devotion do not come forth at the acclaim of the throng or the promise of quick rewards.

In the solitude of Midian, Moses knew the call of his countrymen; Paul at Troas saw Europe's need visualized in a single man; Wendell Phillips knelt at his bedside and dedicated himself to the black millions; Judson, in the shelter of a friendly haystack, felt the heartbeat of India.

God calls in the great inarticulate needs of the human family, in the dumb suffering of little children, in the grind of poverty, in the long dreams of youth, in the sorrows and hopes of life. Deep calls to deep. God calls by the statesman's hope, by the glorified vision of what the world may become through the plentiful healing that is in Jesus Christ.

Fresh from the Field

During the vacation of Rev. N. F. Jones, pastor Hyde Park Church of Cincinnati, Rev. B. H. Payne, of Mt. Washington, supplied the pulpit.

Rev. M. E. Dodd, pastor of the First Church, Shreveport, La., has his own broadcasting station and sends out messages throughout that area. He feels that this may perhaps help to solve the shortage in ministers in the small pastorless churches.

Rev. H. C. Leland, whose fifty-third annual subscription to The Standard and THE BAPTIST has just been received, last month concluded his service as acting pastor of the First Church, Rock Island, Ill., and is ready for other service of a similar nature. He may be addressed at his home in Dixon, Ill.

Miss Mary Cressey, principal of our Woman's School, Ningpo, China, has reached home for a year's furlough. She is with relatives in Sioux Falls. Miss Viola Hill, Santa Ana, Cal., sailed August 24, for China, after a year at home and will take charge of the school at Ningpo, during Miss Cressey's absence. Miss Emma Irving, after a year's furlough, also sailed on the "Empress of Canada," Aug. 24, to resume her work in China.

Rev. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, Chicago, who received an urgent call to the First Church, San Francisco, last April, has been West and has decided not to accept. He reports that the San Francisco church is united and offers a great opportunity to the right man. He speaks in glowing terms of the work being done by Pres. C. M. Hill and Superintendents C. E. Tingley and C. W. Brin-stad.

Charles S. Macfarland, secretary of the Federal Council, is in Europe to attend the meeting at Copenhagen of the World Alliance for International Friendship and other important conferences. He will convey to the queen of Holland, the king of Belgium and the president of France invitations to attend the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the Walloon and Huguenot settlements, to be held in the United States next year.

Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, who, with Dr. Carter Helm Jones, is on an evangelistic preaching tour in Czechoslovakia under the auspices of the Foreign Mission Society, writes that Dr. Jones and he are preaching to immense audiences several times each day. The various towns in which they are preaching are having difficulty in finding halls large enough to accommodate all the people who desire admission. Scores are confessing Christ every night. During one recent week there were thirty conversions on Tuesday evening, more than forty on Wednesday evening and more than fifty on Thursday evening. Dr. Taylor writes that these decisions are genuine and sincere, for extraordinary care is taken so that the new converts understand the seriousness and meaning of their decisions.

In the absence of the pastor of the First Church, Seattle, the United States army chaplain, Frank C. Rideout, of Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, supplied the pulpit on a recent Sunday as did also Dr. G. Clifford Cress, secretary of the Montana Convention.

The church calendar of the First Church, Oakland, Cal., states that Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth Hobart will sail September 7, on the "Empress of Russia" from Vancouver for Swatow, China. They will find their hearts and hands full on account of the great storm which has devastated that city.

Bahaism, an exalted code of living which as a religion has gained several million followers in the different parts of the world, is facing a split. The most influential followers of Bahai are probably in the United States and England. Others are in Persia, India, Afghanistan, Russia and Japan. The religion requires followers to give 19 per cent of their earn-Royal J. Montgomery, director of religious education for the Congregational churches of Iowa. A paid registration of more than 100 is now assured.

A chart prepared from the records of Cook County, Illinois, by Peter M. Hoffman, coroner, indicates that there were 91,822 premature deaths in the county in seventeen years. The chart shows the age, sex, color, occupation and cause of death. Automobiles in 1905 caused five deaths; in 1921, 606. Alcoholism during the period caused 1,655 deaths. Sixty ministers were the victims of fatal accidents.

Rev. Frank William Lorimer, pastor of the Harlem Church, New York, and Miss Faith Moors Williams were married August 21. Rev. Addison B. Lorimer, pastor of the Central Square Baptist Church, Portland, Maine, father of the groom, performed the ceremony. Mr. Lorimer is now a member of the senior class of Union Theological Seminary.

From This Day On

*From this day onward Thou art mine,
Brother beloved and King divine,
From this day on.*

My food I'll get in serving Thee;
Thy thoughts shall be as eyes to me.
I'll live and breathe to sing Thy praise
From this time onward all my days.
Thy feet I choose, the world resign,
For Thou, from this day on, art mine,
Brother beloved and King divine!

To Thee I offer child and wife,
My home and all my worldly life;
To Thee this body, too, I bring,
To Thee surrender everything.
My very self henceforth is Thine.
O take it, Lord, for thou art mine,
Brother beloved and King divine!

My thoughts and words are all of Thee,
Thou—Wisdom, Joy and Liberty.
Now Thee and me no rift can part,
One not in semblance but in heart.
Set free am I and for me shine
The joys of heaven, since Thou art mine,
Brother beloved and King divine!

*From this day onward Thou art mine,
Brother beloved and King divine,
From this day on.*

ings to their leader for schools, orphanages, poor and other charities. The rift is caused by a dispute over succession in leadership.

A week of intensive training has been planned for the workers of the First Church of Grinnell, Iowa. Course A is the "General Principles of Teaching," for all teachers and prospective teachers. Course B is the "Duties of Church Officers," for all officers and prospective officers. Course C takes up the matter of "Story-Telling in the Modern Program of Religious Education." There is also planned a normal class for leaders of mission study groups for a school of missions later in the winter. Inspirational addresses in connection with the week of training will be given by the director of religious education of the Iowa Convention, Rev. U. N. Witter, Dr. G. W. Cassidy, executive secretary and Dr.

According to the report from the Washington office of the Federal Council of Churches, there was raised by the churches of America during the last respective fiscal years, at least half a billion dollars. Of the total raised, the combined Methodist bodies lead with $130,730,479. The Roman Catholic Church is second with $75,368,294. The Baptists are third with $60,798,534. These figures cover all expenses including benevolence.

The Bethel Institute, St. Paul, Minn., announces that it will begin a Bible and missionary training course to be conducted in the English language in the Bethel Theological Seminary, Oct. 5, 1922. The purpose of this course is to deepen the spiritual life of the young people who enter the same and train them for more effective and faithful Christian work. Special emphasis will be laid upon direct Bible study and practical methods of Christian work which will fit them to become missionaries, evangelists, pastors' assistants, etc. Fuller information can be secured by addressing Pres. G. A. Hagstrom.

American delegates who attended the meeting of the International Committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches held in Copenhagen, Aug. 5-11, were favorably impressed by the friendly spirit that prevailed throughout the conferences of representatives of twenty-five different countries. Nearly 200 delegates were present, including about a score of clergymen from the United States. Dr. Deissmann, the leading German representative and Dr. Monod of France beat out their differences of opinion courteously in open conference. Deissmann admitted that his countrymen had made great mistakes. They had not realized what war meant, but now they knew; their sufferings had taught them a great lesson and people and government alike were unanimously for world disarmament. Among the definite steps taken to minimize international ill-will was the appointment of a committee to deal with educational textbooks for the purpose of preventing the installation of racial prejudices in the minds of the rising generation. Dr. Alexander Ramsey, of England, was appointed international organizer for the World Alliance. He will start work immediately, visiting every European nation except Russia.

We Need the Degree and Fee

"I have the honor," says a recent writer, "to bestow upon the editor a merited degree. Step forward and receive the coveted cape. . . . You are worthy to receive the P. J. (Patience of Job) as shown in your dealings with backward subscribers like myself." He paid. Read that date label on your paper. Do not bank too much on the degree for even Job showed signs of impatience.

Draw Your Own Conclusions

THE BAPTIST has never had such a whole-souled interest as that manifested since the convention in Indianapolis. A glance into our subscription book will tell an eloquent story. The subscription receipts for June, 1921 were $3,194.06, for June, 1922 $3,244.32; July 1921 $1,751.69, and July 1922 $2,848.86; August 1921 $1,726.74 and for August 1922, we received $4,107.71. This shows a most wholesome subscription situation. We have paid all our bills promptly. We have released the balance due on budget allowance for 1921-22 and have made no call upon that authorized for 1922-23. If the churches continue to show the same interest we will come to Washington as a self supporting institution. Let's!

Good News From Ireland

"Inasmuch as the Indianapolis Convention refused to sell THE BAPTIST, I came right home and got busy to increase the circulation. Inclosed is a list of new subscribers."—Mrs. H. F. Ireland, Van Wert, Ohio. There were ten new subscriptions. This spirit accounts in no small measure for the financial report which appears in this kollum.

Getting "Rested" After Vacation

A Chinaman watching a group of Americans at a pleasure resort remarked, "How hard these people work to play." Thousands of Baptist church members have been "working to rest." Our church work has been more or less interrupted by the vacation period. Our folks are now getting home and after a week or two of after-vacation "rest" will be ready once more for their church tasks. One of the important items of the fall work is a carefully planned campaign for an increased list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and Missions. We have already received scores of requests for lists and sample copies for the every-family canvass in September. Better send in your order at once.

We Admit The Charge

"I want to congratulate you on the splendid recent numbers of the paper. It seems to me that you are doing real constructive work and I am especially pleased with the page headed 'The New World Movement.' I feel confident that our Baptist people will go forward now, because unity of action rather than diversity of beliefs is being emphasized and I am sure you are a factor in bringing this to pass."—Mrs. H. E. Goodman, Administrative vice-president of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

American Cheer-Bearers to European Baptists

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

REMARKABLE reports from Europe are now being received at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Society regarding the evangelistic preaching tour of Dr. Frederick E. Taylor and Dr. Carter Helm Jones through Czechoslovakia, and the special fraternal mission of Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard to the capitals of Europe. Everywhere these representatives of Northern Baptists have been facing immense audiences in halls packed to capacity, have been receiving extraordinary courtesy, have been enjoying unusual hospitality and have been bringing cheer and encouragement to the Baptist cause in Europe.

In THE BAPTIST of September 2, Rev. J. A. Frey described the visit of Dr. Abernethy and Mr. Sheppard to Latvia. Similar experiences greeted these two members of the Foreign Mission Board during their visit to Poland. Rev. K. W. Strzelec of Lodz, in a report, mentions particularly the service rendered by Mr. Sheppard, a well known lawyer of Lowell, Mass., and a member of the Foreign Mission Board, who accompanied Dr. Abernethy entirely at his own expense. Mr. Strzelec writes:

"Mr. Sheppard brought to Poland some conception of uniting loyalty to Christ with a profession which the people here thought to be impossible. For the first time in Polish Baptist history a lawyer has spoken in a pulpit about faithful discipleship in the Master's cause. Everybody who heard his testimony has changed his mind about his profession. One of our preachers never saw a converted attorney. After hearing Mr. Sheppard he remarked: 'A profession does not make the man, but the man makes the profession! Mr. Sheppard inspired our laymen to a more consecrated life and work for the kingdom.'"

After stating that Polish Baptists had been preparing for weeks to receive these messengers of the Foreign Mission Society, Mr. Strzelec describes the meetings that were held in the city of Danzig, in the city of Lodz and in Warsaw, the capital of Poland.

Important Officials Here

Everywhere large audiences were present and many had to be turned away. In Warsaw, one of the largest halls was crowded to capacity and important officials of the government were in the audience. In speaking of the messages, Mr. Strzelec writes:

"Dr. Abernethy's message was a greeting from the great body of Baptists across the ocean, an exhortation to be loyal and devoted to Christ, to be persevering in the faith, to be true to the gospel in all trials and to be persistent in working for the kingdom of God. The assurance that he gave that behind the small groups of Polish Baptists there were millions of Americans devoted to Christ, praying for them in their homes and in their churches, cheered every believer in Poland and made a deep impression upon the public. We believe that God has directed our Foreign Mission Society in sending these two brethren to greet and cheer the small groups of believers here in Poland."

In Czechoslovakia, Dr. Jones and Dr. Taylor have had some remarkable experiences. Their busy days have been so crowded with meetings, interviews and travel—sometimes extremely inconvenient and uncomfortable—into the more remote villages, that they have had little time for extended correspondence and reports of the results of their meetings are only now being received. Under date of July 27, from Kosice, Slovakia, Dr. Jones writes:

"In our first town we found a faithful band of Christians led by a heroic pastor, Jeno Stumpf, and his devoted family of wife, two daughters and two sons. This man, who had suffered great persecution on account of his Baptist faith, now has the confidence and respect of the whole community. In the next town we had a remarkable meeting and the opera house was packed to capacity, many standing and scores turned away. Our messages were heard with great interest, and I feel as if we were on one of Paul's missionary journeys to the Gentiles."

Under date of August 11, written at Vsetin, Moravia, Dr. Jones writes:

"In Bratislava we had an extremely busy Sunday, both of us preaching in the morning and again in the evening, while in the afternoon we had a special meeting with the new converts and seven were baptized. At the evening meeting there were twenty-seven professions of conversions. At Brno we had two immense meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday nights in a large theater, again packed to capacity. On the first evening Dr. Taylor spoke on the meaning of the Christian life, while I spoke on the relations of Baptists to civil and religious freedom. On the second evening we both preached evangelistic sermons, after which the invitation was given and more than fifty came forward, thus before that immense audience making their decisions to follow Christ. Among them were old men and women, young people and several soldiers. Before the crowded house I addressed these new converts, explaining the meaning of the decision that they had made. We repeated this experience here at Vsetin and had thirty conversions at the close of the meeting. Tonight we have the largest hall in the city and both of us will preach evangelistic sermons. Perhaps I had better send for Mrs. Jones and remain here in Czechoslovakia and continue preaching!"

WE hold a man to be really a Christian when we believe we have ample evidence that God has revealed himself to him in Jesus Christ, and that now the man's inner life is taking on a new character through his communion with the God who is thus manifest."—E. HERMANN in "Communion with God."

Dr. Taylor's Letters

Several letters have come from Dr. Taylor, all of them written in his characteristic style of brief, vigorous, trenchant sentences. Limitations of space will permit only a few extracts from this interesting and inspiring series of letters:

"The schoolhouse was packed to suffocation and we had a good meeting. In the afternoon sixty-one professed conversion and requested baptism. A year ago there was only one Baptist in this place, when the present pastor came and began work. Now there are sixty church members and sixty more are waiting for baptism. We saw the foundation for their new church building, which will be ready for occupancy in a few months. They have a beautiful site on a hill overlooking a dozen villages. Thus there will be at least one Baptist church here that can be seen by everybody for miles around.

"Last night at Jedlind, two hours from a railroad station, in the heart of the mountains, we had a great meeting and at least seventy-five came forward to confess Christ.

"At St. Mikirlos we had two largely attended meetings and the people were extremely grateful for our coming. The hall last night was crowded to the limit and people were standing far out on the outer steps. Many came forward asking for prayers at the close of the service. The people are pathetically kind, they will do anything for us.

A Jew Physician Interprets

"We had a great meeting in the opera house at Mukocin last night. Every inch of space was occupied. Breathless interest for two hours. The interpreter we engaged failed to arrive, and we were interpreted by a Jew physician. He got more gospel through his system than he had ever heard before.

"We had a fine meeting in the hall in Kosice last night. As people of two races—Bohemian and Magyar—were present, we had to be interpreted into both languages. The Baptists are a small company, but they are greatly encouraged and have decided to buy a lot and build a house of worship.

"It is 11:30 and I am tired out, but I must send you a line. I believe our mission has already paid big dividends and will yield results for a long time to come. The preachers have been encouraged, the churches have been quickened and hundreds of souls have professed Christ, thousands have listened to our messages, and the principles for which Baptists stand have been made known to the public as never before. This afternoon at Praha we had a very tender farewell service. Dr. Jones and I were presented with beautiful watch fobs with a medallion of John Hus, surrounded by Bohemian garnets. Each was engraved 'A Memorial of Your Visit in 1922.'"

Thus these representatives of Northern Baptists in America have brought cheer and courage to the hearts of our denominational kinsmen in Europe. Our Baptist brethren there have been aided and stimulated. Ties of fellowship and association have been formed and they have been helped, not only in their fight for religious liberty and for popular recognition, but they have been aided also in reaping a harvest from the seed which these faithful missionary pastors in Europe have been sowing in recent years in the midst of trials and persecutions. The task which Drs. Jones, Taylor and Abernethy and Mr. Sheppard have performed will prove to be of the utmost value for the future of our Baptist work in Europe.

The Baptist

Who Makes the New World Movement Move?

WHO makes The New World Movement move? The missionary in West China or on the Congo watches for the little packet-steamer or the post-runner to bring the mail. There is a letter from New York. It glows with promise. The long-hoped-for expansion of the work on the station may soon be realized. The missionary goes about his work of preaching, healing, teaching. He is keeping the New World Movement moving. He takes the impulse that comes from the home office and pushes it out among the villages under his care. But who makes it move?

A faithful clerk in the early morning in crowded New York opens a bushel of letters, sorts them over and places them on the desk of the general director of the Promotion Board. What a variety of appeals, announcements, promises, complaints, suggestions, from pastors, missionaries, college presidents, state secretaries, colporters, laymen, women and young people. And the general director distributes the mail to his co-workers, calls in his stenographer, arranges conferences, and the busy days fly on in New York—he is keeping the New World Movement moving. The wave of activity strikes his desk and he passes it along. But who makes it move?

Out in a western state an eager, energetic man rolls down his desk, pins a note on his door stating that he will return next day; boards a train and in response to a call spends an afternoon and an evening with a little group of leaders of the Average Baptist Church of Typicaltown. He is there to talk about the New World Movement. It is moving, but the beat of its heart is not strong enough. In far-away Ningyuan, in China, work has ceased because the New World Movement isn't moving there. Among the Indians, in the crowded cities, on the campuses of struggling little colleges there is dismay and discouragement because the New World Movement doesn't move. Who makes it move? The state director? He passes on the news items from the fields, he visits the churches, he pours out his heart in kingdom addresses, he suggests associational programs, he circularizes the pastors, he counsels with the godly women. The pulse beat of the New World Movement lives in his busy daily life and he passes it on around his state. He keeps it moving. But who makes it move?

The state director is now at Typicaltown. He meets the benevolence treasurer of the thriving Average Baptist Church. The treasurer is an energetic soul. He is saturated with kingdom zeal. Every month he solicits payments on the pledges. Every month he sends his remittances to the state office. He is one with the missionary on the Congo and the general director in New York and the state secretary. He is keeping the New World Movement moving. But who makes it move?

There is a missionary committee in the Average Church of Typicaltown. On the evening of the state secretary's visit this committee meets for supper. Their records are there—a large envelope full of miscellaneous papers, a little leather-bound book, and a few cards held together with a rubber band. The visitor is interested in these cards. There are thirty-four of them. They are dated May 2, 1920. Yes, every one of them. They represent splendid loyalty to Christ's kingdom. The committee chairman elaborates upon them. One is the pledge of a high-school boy whose home is a very modest one, and who works on Saturdays to meet his pledge. One is the pledge of a leading merchant who never gave one-tenth this sum to missions before he signed this card. Several are the pledges of women whose husbands are not churchmen and who discourage all missionary giving. Here is the largest pledge of all. It is signed by a man and his wife. They must be the wealthiest members of the church. No, the man is a superintendent in the factory. In 1920 they were planning to build their new home. For a year they had been working on the plans at night after the children were in bed. But the New World Movement came along and they deferred their building. They have never known Christ better than in these two years. What a glorious experience to hear the story of these cards.

At the close of the supper a happy announcement is made. The chairman of the missionary committee and the pastor have arranged to have all the supporters of the New World Movement meet the state director at eight o'clock. Soon they begin to come—the signers of these cards. Here is the high-school boy and the merchant and the superintendent and his wife and the loyal women. Here is an old, old man and here is a very little girl. After a pleasant time of introductions and getting acquainted the pastor speaks. Addressing the visitor of the occasion he says, "These are the best Christians that I have. They do their full duty. They support our Bible school. They visit the sick. They read the denominational papers, they aid in revivals, they know their Lord. From the youngest to the oldest their loyalty is undimmed."

The state director can scarcely wait for his invitation to speak. "I have made a discovery tonight," said he "For weeks I have been asking myself 'Who makes the New World Movement move?' This unique little gathering tonight has made the answer clear. It is not the missionary on the field, nor the general director in New York, nor men like myself traveling about the states, nor the missionary treasurer of the local church. We all keep it moving, yes indeed. But the individual giver in the local church, one cannot go back of him save to find there his God in whom we all live and move and have our being." Then the state director laid before the church the suggestions of the General Board of Promotion given in their annual report at Indianapolis. The key-word of the suggestions was "Personal Responsibility" and the text for the year "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" And then for two hours these kingdom builders of the Average Baptist Church of Typical-town faced the facts. Here were some of them. No pledge cards had been signed since May 2, 1920, although many new members had been received since then. Many were giving to the local support of the church who were not contributors to the New World Movement. Mission study had been neglected in the Bible school, the woman's society and elsewhere in the church. Out to the ends of the earth with a strong sure beat will the New World Movement move when every member of every church with the prayer upon his lips "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" feels his personal responsibility which cannot be delegated, calling him to lay aside upon the first day of the week as God hath prospered him.

"Cranking Up"

WE live in an age of inventions, but up to date no one has come forward with a "self-starter" for church work. In ninety-nine out of every hundred active churches it is still necessary to hold rally days in the Sunday school, young people's society, woman's circle and the public services. Here and there a church advertises, "All services as usual" but nevertheless we know that there is an easing down in church work during the summer months. Even the stay-at-homes "want a little rest" and take it. It sometimes requires weeks and even months to get under normal headway.

It is to the credit of the churches that so many of them early in the fall make studied efforts to concentrate their working forces in order to take up with vigor the tasks for which they exist. Through preaching, publicity and prayer they may well seek to secure the largest possible percentage of the membership of the local church for definite service.

The minister is expected to "crank up" the machinery. The whole congregation may be snugly seated waiting for things to move but in the meantime Mr. Minister may be found sweating and cranking. Here is where the self-starter would come in handy. It would be safer for the minister and perhaps insure a quicker get-a-way. But as we said at the beginning no self-starter has yet been invented. It is still necessary to "crank up" the church machinery, though it is a hard and somewhat dangerous task. There is always danger of "back fire" and many a parson has found himself covered with sore spots caused by ill-advised effort along this line.

Mr. Minister, will you suffer a few words from us? You know that we who sit in the pews put first things first. First things with us are the things we want to do more than we want to do some other things. These commanding interests may lie in our business or rotary clubs, chambers of commerce, farmers' clubs or women's clubs or one or more of a thousand and one fraternities. We may find our time consumed in the good work of the church federation, the Sunday-school union, the Red Cross or the Y. M. or Y. W. C. A. or the Christian Temperance Union. We may feel that the Boy Scouts or the Camp Fire Girls offer a greater field for service than any task in our own local church. You may occasionally find us in the church to listen with more or less interest to a sermon but you will not have our time and whatever talent we possess unless it is made plain that in the church—our church—there is work to be done as vital, as far-reaching, and as congenial as that we find in other groups.

The work of the churches is 99 per cent volunteer service. The men and women who put in their time and crowd their already over crowded lives with new tasks must feel that by taking on the extra service they are serving God and their brethren in a most genuine way.

Few of us are interested in merely seeing the wheels go round. You may start the motor but we want the whirling machinery geared to some more worthy task than simply that of keeping the church doors open, or conducting services in a kind of private chapel for the saints. We want in some way to have our eyes opened to the gigantic task of the churches of Christ in these days when civilization itself is in peril.

Mr. Lloyd George in his recent address to the leaders of the Free Churches of Britain made it clear that he conceived it to be the task of these churches to lift the people out of the selfish materialism into which they have fallen since the war. He challenges the churches to destroy the war spirit which still lives and will live so long as nations and individuals seek to live unto themselves, and for themselves. In our own country we know that the churches must help stem the tide of lawlessness which threatens the foundations of our nation. We cannot wash our hands of the responsibility for the industrial strife which is everywhere in most exaggerated forms—strikes and lockouts, picketing and injunctions, hatred and bloodshed. Our churches are not capitalistic bodies. Baptist churches, it is true, are for the most part made up of the common people. We have, however, in most churches some rich and some poor and we should more than dwell together in peace. We should promote peace based upon justice and equity.

This is not an appeal for you to preach a "Christless social gospel." There is no such gospel worthy of the name. It is a plea for you to help us see him in a light which is brighter than the noonday of our material suns so that with new purpose we shall ask, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Many of our churches need just the leadership and inspiration the army of unrelated workers can give. In "cranking up" for the work of the fall and winter is it not possible to enlist with the old workers—the faithful few—a new body of men and women who love God and their fellowmen and who have felt that in order to render a practical service to their own day and generation they must give their time and talent to movements and organizations may of which are but loosely related to the work of the local church?

A Baptist Theology a Progressive Theology

THROUGH the kindness of a friend, there has come to our desk a copy of an address on "Our Denominational Outlook" by Dr. Augustus H. Strong. The address was delivered at the general denominational meeting in connection with the Baptist anniversaries at Cleveland, Ohio, Thursday morning, May 19, 1904. Our readers will recall that THE BAPTIST printed serially the last course of lectures delivered by this stalwart Christian thinker. To read the address one would think that it was written with our present denominational situation in mind. "Do we Baptists still hold to the belief and practice of the fathers, or have we departed from the faith and turned aside to a science that is falsely so called? My reply must be a qualified reply. I maintain that the great Baptist body still holds to Jesus Christ its head; still stands for his deity and his atonement; still insists that the church shall be composed of regenerate persons; still claims that the constitution and ordinances of the church shall visibly picture and express the inward union of believers with their divine Lord. But I hold at the same time that there is progress in our Baptist apprehension of the truth; that it is duty to accept the new light that true science gives; that the formulas of the past need some revision in order to satisfy the demands of the present time; yes, that the impulse to this revision is itself divine, an impulse from Christ himself, whose Spirit is promised to guide us into all the truth. It is our advantage that we have no authoritative creed to define our theology once for all; and this ensures us freedom and right of development. A creed expresses one age and set of thought; the Bible is of many ages, minds, purposes. Accepting it as authority, we still affirm the duty of bringing out of that treasure things new, as well as old. A Baptist theology must continually seek the truth, must keep abreast of public intelligence, and must be a progressive theology. The guarantee that it will not ultimately run to wild extremes is furnished in the total teaching of the written word, and in the continued influence of the Holy Spirit."

Even Methodists Are Human

THE editor of the Pacific Christian Advocate says of Dr. A. G. Kynett: "No living man knows better either the philosophy or the history of Methodist church extension." In a communication in that journal Mr. Kynett writes as some of our own secretaries might do:

"It is evident that when the Centenary canvass was made a number of zealous promoters without any authority whatever made promises to churches that if they would subscribe so much to the Centenary they would get back so much, and a number of times the charge of bad faith is made against the board because it neither can nor does meet such unauthorized promises, which some churches interpret as binding contracts. It happens sometimes that when we ask for the names of the parties who made the promises we get very indefinite and evasive answers.

"As you know, from the beginning the executive committee instructed the various officers of the board itself to make no promises as to what the executive committee would do.

"In the portion of the work committed to my care I have had occasion several times, when threats were made that if our board did not make certain donations of a certain amount, that the Centenary subscriptions would be withheld and turned to the use of the local church, to call attention to the fact that the promises were unauthorized and ask who made them. Then, to show that the receipts of the board from the Centenary were only about 40 per cent of the amount received by the Centenary and that our board had absolutely no authority to consent that Centenary subscriptions should be turned to the local uses of the church."

Is It True Baptistically?

IN the conference recently held in Copenhagen for promoting international good-will Dr. Jowett, according to the Christian World, brought the delegates face to face with the spiritual principles which should guide them as Christians. "Dr. Jowett declared that behind material disarmament was the deeper, more serious and difficult matter of disarmament of the mind. To uproot the prejudices out of which misunderstandings arose would do more to make armaments unnecessary than the activities of the governments. The greatest enemies of peace were lurking fears and suspicion. Their biggest antagonists were illusions. Where did this envy, jealousy and suspicion come from? In the first place it was bred and nourished and cherished in our daily press, by its suppression of facts and perversion of facts, and by statements fashioned by the financial interests and not by moral ideals. He had spent six months recently in the south of France, and saw his fellow-countrymen through the French press and did not know them. When in the United States he saw England through the medium of the American press and did not recognize his fellow-countrymen. If his French friends were in England just now they would not know their own land as reflected in the English press. The first thing they had to do was to look beyond the press and right over the press and look at the people themselves."

We cannot refrain from asking a question or two. How much of our present denominational confusion is traceable to Baptist editors? We know that sections of the secular press foment suspicion. This is their stock in trade. They come honestly by the name—yellow journals. If we could hear from "the people" would they charge that our differences chiefly concern the ministers and would they indict the religious press for keeping mooted questions alive?

The Child and the Present Christ

An address delivered at the International Sunday School Convention.

By BISHOP EDWIN H. HUGHES

CITIZENS of Boston in recent months have engaged in a debate concerning two statues of Phillips Brooks. One statue is a plain representation of the great preacher, standing alone on a vast pedestal. The other statue, designed by St. Gaudens, is located by Trinity Church in Copley Square, where it has stood for a period of years. It presents Phillips Brooks clad in clerical robes and standing in his pulpit. Behind him is the figure of Christ, as if indeed the Master had insisted on coming to the sacred desk with his mighty servant. Many artistic critics have preferred the later and simpler statue to the St. Gaudens representation, and the discussion has not always been without warmth. But, whatever the final result, we may well hope that the spiritual meaning of the older statue may not be lost.

The man who teaches the truth of Christ can be at his best only in the presence of Christ. For, after all, in our holy faith there has ever been a strange identification of Christ with the gospel of Christ. It is not wrong to say that he is his own gospel. The Mohammedan does not say, "I live; yet not I, but Mohammed liveth in me." Yet millions of Christians say that wonderful speech about their Lord. In a poor plagiarism of our Christian hymn, Buddhists have been trying to sing:

"Buddha, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

It is safe to say that this weak copying of our singing faith will not long feel at home with the religion of the Buddhists, while Christians will continue to chant the gospel of a present Lord.

"I am with you"

We are warranted, likewise, in saying that his presence is promised in a peculiar way to those who teach his truth. The faith that Christ enters the teaching desk with his own delegated teachers is older than St. Gaudens' statue of Brooks; and that same faith will outlast all stone and bronze. When Jesus said on the Bethany hill, "Go and teach all nations," he said also, "I am with you." The presence of Christ was to be with the truth of Christ. One of the poets of America has said that he never understood some of Tennyson's poems until he heard Tennyson himself repeat them. Then the poet laureate of England transferred the accent of his heart to the rhythm of his lines and made their meaning plain. The Word is a feeble parable for our gospel. The presented faith has a present Lord.

But if this blessed article of our Christian creed has meaning for all sincere teaching of the truth of Christ, it must have special meaning when the truth of Christ is brought to its most hopeful and fertile field—that of childhood and youth. When we were little people we often sang a hymn whose first verse was:

"I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How he called little children as lambs to his fold,
I should like to have been with him then."

The longing of that hymn is a natural one. If, as we are older, we become more religious, we do not recover from childhood's desire. It

What Can A Little Chap Do?

WHAT can a little chap do
For his country and for you?
What can a little chap do?

He can play a straight game all through;
That's one thing he can do.

He can fight like a knight
For the truth and the right;
That's another good thing he can do.

He can shun all that's mean,
He can keep himself clean,
Both without and within;
That's a very fine thing he can do.

His soul he can brace
Against everything base,
And the trace will be seen
All his life in his face;
That's an excellent thing he can do.

He can look to the light,
He can keep his thoughts white,
He can fight the great fight,
He can do with his might
What is good in God's sight;
Those are truly great things he can do.

Though his years be but few,
If he keeps himself true
He can march in the queue
Of the good and the great,
Who battled with fate
And won through;
That's a wonderful thing he can do.

And in each little thing
He can follow the King—
Yes, in each smallest thing
He can follow the King—
He can follow the Christ, the King.
JOHN OXENHAM.

does not depart; it is simply changed into a more spiritual prayer. There is no need of a journey back over the centuries to Judea. We say with Whittier:

"Faith has still its Olivet,
And love its Galilee."

But it is significant that this longing for Christ's nearer presence brings us into the presence of childhood. Somehow the child leads us into the presence of Christ; and somehow Christ leads us into the presence of the child. When Jesus comes to his disciples in their more reverent mood, he sets the child in their midst. When the little child comes to us in our more reverent mood, he sets Christ in our midst. It is precisely this double fact that is the hope of our world.

Christ and the Children

Some weeks ago I made a study of our Lord's life with a view of discovering the promises of his presence with us and the conditions of their fulfilment. I found many such promises. They are sprinkled liberally in the blessed records. But my mind and heart finally settled on one promise that seemed most comprehensive and definite—that word of Christ in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." I rather rejoiced that it was found in Matthew. Had it been found in John, some scholarly hand might more readily have waved it off into symbolism. In a way, it is rather an abrupt word. You wonder why it comes just there, and what relation it bears to the previous speech of Christ. When you go back to the beginning of this discourse you find Christ with the child; and, as you follow the discourse through, the child appears and reappears and reappears again.

It all begins with the question of the greatness of the kingdom. The answer of Christ is, "A little child." I think that those of us who are parents must often try to imagine the scene—the child with wondering eyes, now looking on Christ and now on the disciples, but mostly on Christ, returning for a cure of bashfulness, to the face and perhaps to the arms of the Lord. Then that child, with all other children, finds lasting peace in the proclamation of the Master. What amazing things he says:

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

"Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me.

"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father."

"Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

These words are the great prelude to the promise of Christ's presence. He ends it all by saying: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." It sounds much like a description of a Sunday-school class. When I thought of it in this light, I caught the vision of hundreds of thousands of faithful men and women in all the world, each sitting in the midst of the children. Then in each group I saw "the form of the Fourth"; and I felt that I had the authority of the Master for giving this special interpretation to his promise.

The point, then, is that Christ is present in a special sense when eyes of spiritual love are turned toward the child in the midst. Nor is this merely a theory gained by a forced exegesis of the Gospels. It is a theory and an experience. This is not the time to give the emphasis to its wider social application; and it is certainly not the time to make any

God Steers

"Of that great change," R. L. Stevenson once wrote about some crisis in his life, "which turned me from one whose business was to shirk into one whose business was to strive and persevere—it seems as though all that had been done by someone else. I was never conscious of a struggle, nor registered a vow, nor seemingly had anything personal to do with the matter. I came about like a well-handled ship. There stood at the wheel that unknown steersman whom we call GOD."

attack upon the Supreme Court of the United States for its recent decision with reference to child labor laws. But it is a good time to say to all our parties and people that when we shut the child in mill or factory or mine, we also in some real way shut Christ out of our American life. Let me not unduly amplify your passion and mine with regard to this gentle crusade. Yet let me say with ardor unrestrained, that when the United States secures fully the love and conscience of Christ, any mill owner or any mill manager who dares to hire little children in order that by paying them cheap wages he may secure larger dividends for greedy stockholders will be absolutely denied membership in any branch of the Christian church in America. Speaking industrially, Jesus sets the child in our midst, and his word about what happens to those who make the little ones stumble has its economic bearing.

Nor does the rule fail on the intellectual side. Dealing with childhood compels us to use "the simplicity that is in Christ." We are not always fair to the little people. We build our church services for adults and then complain because the children do not come. A Massachusetts clergyman began to preach a seven-minute sermon to children on each Sunday. This brief sermon led him to put away all big vocabularies and all complicated theological formulas, with the result that his older hearers made request that he preach to children all the time! When he did that, he preached to that childlike spirit which is everywhere a mark of Christ's kingdom.

The Unfailing Test

This brings the matter forward to a question of character. We have all had given to us many tests for judging people. We have been told that a squinted eye means a squint in the moral nature, and we have found that it is not so. We have been told that the person whose eyes wander when he speaks with you, and who does not look into your face steadily and frankly, is fickle in his loyalties; and we have found that this is not so. All these superficial tests fail. But there is one test that I have never known to fail: when you find any man or any woman in good and normal health who does not love children, you discover in due season that this man and this woman are mean and selfish and contemptible. Such a person is far removed from both the spirit and the presence of Christ.

The examples of this reaction, on the good and positive side, are many. The people who have given themselves grandly to the spiritual service of childhood and youth grow beautifully like our Lord. Arnold in England, and Hopkins in America, become as renowned for character as they do for power of instruction. They who meet with Christ in the presence of the child, and with the child in the presence of Christ, grow in the graces of our blessed faith. We usually find a character like this in each of our colleges, a man who comes down from the mountain of God, not knowing that his face shines. And in many of our towns we have such people—teachers of youth, who are canonized by all the people, because indeed such teachers, dwelling with the child, dwell also in the presence of Christ. For, after all, we must not forget that, when God would redeem our world, he came not through the broken dome of the sky but rather through the cradle of a little child. Our gospel cannot get on without a Bethlehem.

The Madison, Ohio, Baptist Church gets its folks to attend Sunday school and church services by using motor busses which during the week transport children to centralized public schools. Attendance increased 30 to 50 over the average before using the motor busses.

The Fighting Saint

Many fight poorly equipped, but need not. Every skirmish won opens the way for another.

By HORACE T. HOUF

THE fighting saint—it is a peculiar marriage of ideas, but if it be a happy one let it stand. I first came upon the expression a few years ago as the title of a little book by one of God's saints. I have recently been recalled to it by a fresh study of Ephesians 6:10-20. Surely the expression is one that the Apostle Paul would have liked. The ideas are in accord with his way of seeing things and he himself was something of a fighting saint as any one who knows the story of his life will readily believe. Recall how he wrote to the youthful but much beloved Timothy: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have run my course." Recall again the recital of the many things that had befallen him in his strenuous campaigning for the cause of Christ which was dearer to him than his own life (II Cor. 2:21-33). We may receive from him some admonition on the subject of Christian warfare and be sure that we are admonished by one who knows and has earned the right to speak. In Ephesians 6 he makes some helpful suggestions as to the equipment with which one should enter upon the series of conflicts that arise in campaigning for Christ. It is profitable to look at them in detail.

The Winner Must Fight

Upon the reading of these verses addressed to the Christian community at Ephesus the first idea that stands out is the suggestion of conquest. The Christian life is one of conflict. This was true in the days in which Paul wrote. It is also true in the days in which we live. Paul was entirely clear in what he meant. He did not mean that salvation as he had preached it to the Ephesians was consequent on any fight they might make. As to that he was unequivocal. That came by faith in Jesus Christ. Their initial arightment with God was by the grace of God coming down upon them from above. It was no achievement of their own. But having taken that step they were at once in the midst of an unending conflict. There were many things hidden away in the recesses of their own souls that they must steadfastly withstand. They must forsake the dark ways of superstition and of sin. The goddess Diana must be forgot. The frivolous ways of the theater and the race-course must be left off. The unspeakable hidden life of licentiousness must be given up. Against a whole pantheon of devils and demons must be mustered the power of the living God and a host of ministering angels. Out of the darkness they must press on into the light. It meant conflict. There was no escaping it. Without hesitation therefore the apostle warns them in no uncertain way. They are happy in their new-found faith. He rejoices with them. They can win but they must fight.

In our own time we may well think on this. The Christian life is a conflict. There are streaks, cross-grains, still discernible in all the children of God, streaks put there, it may be, by an inheritance we could not control. But the flaws are there. Being reborn has shifted them but they remain. Their power is somewhat broken but still they stay. What man or woman cannot, by seeking, find them out? One "To root out sin and the evil that is ever with us, this can only be accomplished by the divine power. It is not possible or within a man's competence to root out sin by his own power. To wrestle against it, to fight against it, to give and receive blows, is thine: to uproot is God's. If thou hadst been able to do it, what need was there of the coming of the Lord?"

—Marcarius the Egyptian.

saint finds a cross-grain that leads off in one direction and another in another. They are almost never just the same in separate lives but always they lead away from Christ. We must fight. There are foes within the citadel and we must be watchful lest at some dark hour they fling open the doors to the enemy. And there are habits we have acquired that also prolong our fight. It may be that we actually encourage them. In the desire to taste at least the slight savor of some evil thing we traverse the borderland of sin. The tang of the scented air secretly pleases us. We do not indulge, but we whet the edge of appetite and weaken our resistance. Again, those with whom we live and have to do are not always firmly set on the things of Christ. They twit and tempt us. We play into their hands. Our desire to please will not let us be unbending. We compromise and lessen our assurance of victory. We dull the edge of our influence. Or it may be that the entire ensemble of things about us is out of accord with the Christian way. Even at the risk of being considered protesters of an eccentric and stubborn sort we dare not just accept things as they are. The rules of the game may seem to be fixed. Most people are going it according to what seem to be the rules. But maybe the rules need to be changed. Maybe it is not a fair or winning fight as things now stand. Changes that are radical and thorough-going may have to be made. We may be the logical ones to say so and to help in making the change. In our day we cannot with eyes shut go dreamily along hoping that some day all will come out right. Such shallow optimism is not of the mind of Christ. There is need for fight. The saint with the mind of Christ and the will to see can discern several places where the battle must be engaged. Within and without are foes to the Christian life and the Christian enterprise and we must fight. It was ever so, and the end is not yet.

Poorly Equipped

To put on the whole armor of God, is Paul's next counsel. This implies that some to whom Paul wrote were fighting poorly equipped. Who among us would deny that is true also today? Of the multitudes who name Christ's name how few really are held firmly in the grip of the things of Christ! What a pitiable remnant are they who really do the work of the kingdom! Pitiable, but in numbers only for they are rich toward God. Where are the churches in which all are up and doing? Even in those which set the goal of having all at work, how far short they come! Many are fighting poorly equipped. For one thing many fight half-heartedly. They have given an assent to Christ but have got no farther. The soil is shallow. The stones are many. The thorns are persistent and everywhere. Such souls are unaroused. They jog along in their routine ways but do not live. They half hope that Christ holds them safe but they can not arouse themselves to enter into his campaign with resolve and persistence. Then some fight isolatedly. They are skirmishers only. Theirs is guerilla warfare. They are and they are not. They do and don't. They mean well but they are not tied-in. They don't keep step. It is sporadic and ineffectual. It may harass the enemy but never defeats him. Such are solitary souls that may be honest and sincere but they never arrive. They are apart from the main forces of the King and they do but little good. Then in our day many seem to be fighting skeptically. They are loyal with reservations. They are scrupulously careful about the way the issue is drawn. The nerve of their enthusiasm is cut because they are not sure. They believe they believe, but the way seems dark. They fight poorly equipped.

The Whole Armor

But best of all, Paul assures us that the whole armor of God is ours for the taking. We need not campaign uncertainly. We need not fight at our own expense. God, whose we are and whom we serve, attends to that. The whole armor of God needs but to be put on. Then Paul specifies: "Gird your loins with truth." Tie yourself about with the truth. Enmesh yourself in the truth and you are prepared for most anything. Perhaps here he means the truth in Christ, the Christian truth, the body of ideas and realities made fully known in Christ. Robe yourself in the body of Christian truth and you bind yourself about with the power of God. Or even the wider universal truth provided only it be the truth. For all truth is God's. And all truth will agree with itself and hold together. But fortify yourself with truth. Nothing less than that will suffice for bed-rock. Begin there. Let it be experimental truth so you can rest in it, but firmly fix yourself in the truth.

"Put on the breastplate of righteousness."

Righteousness in both New Testament senses. Guard the most vital parts of your life with the righteousness which comes from God by faith in Christ. Get out of self back into God and his grace. It is the armor of God you are to wear. But this righteousness by faith will become increasingly a righteousness in fact. God's righteousness through your faith will become your righteousness more and more. Your integrity will be founded in God. Wrap yourself up in that thorough-going righteousness that makes you beyond assault morally and spiritually. A good man is impregnable. God's provision is trustworthy and complete. "Saddle your feet with the gospel of peace." Rest securely and confidently in God for your salvation. Have no fear of his keeping. But let it also be a message of peace to those about you. Become a messenger of spiritual peace and fraternal good will. Carry this message wherever you go. Protect yourself against stumbling and needless hurt by your calm peace received as a gift of God. Make it help you over rough places and become a gospel to others where you are. Be wisely on-the-go for God. "Take the shield of faith." Only believe, only trust, and a multitude of foes will beat unmitigated retreat. Your belief in God through Christ will parry all the darts of those who seek your undoing. Your trust in Him will make you invulnerable. The shield is adjustable. It is movable as though alive itself. Attacks from many angles may be met if only you have faith. Believe God and stand fast. Trust God and go forward. Hold firmly to your confidence in God, in his knowledge of your needs, in his love for yourself, and in his determination that no sincere soul shall fall vanquished by the way. Shield yourself with faith, with trust, even when you can not see all the way ahead. "Receive the helmet of salvation." Defend your otherwise defenseless head with that. God wills it. He gives it. He assures it. Christ wrought it. Just receive it. Then live it. Your salvation is a bedrock certainty. It is as sure as God. You are God's and no enemy can pluck you out of his hand. Hide beneath your salvation and do battle as from a stone wall. "Wield the sword of God's word." God's word is the revealing of God's will. Take his word wherever you find it. Do his will without flinching. Armed with a confident knowledge of his will, go forward, fight, dare, live. Does it counter some worldly judgment? Stand firm. It is God's will. Must the campaign be launched? If it be His will launch it! Must half-way measures be rejected? Is it his will? Reject them. God's will is a weapon with cutting edge. It is aggressive. It attacks. Be sure He wills it, then go ahead. The Christian must be able to stand. But he must not stand all the time. He must be up and at it, the King's business. With the word of God's will he goes out confidently. For God goes with him. "The whole armor of God: girdle, breastplate, sandals, shield, helmet, sword." Such a warrior is well equipped.

In Touch with Headquarters

But all this equipping must be bathed in a fitting spirit. "Praying at all seasons." Otherwise the fighting saint may not be in touch with present orders. He may mistake the will of headquarters. Some things may have changed and he knows it not. He may otherwise forget that he is campaigning for Another and not himself primarily. His pride and foolish weaknesses may betray him into trouble along the way. Let him keep connection with headquarters unbroken, all lines up and messages going and coming. The prayerful saint can fight better. Otherwise his weapons will prove cumbersome and the battle may go adversely. "Watching with all perseverance." Keep alert. The enemy never sleeps. Intentions are good but those who sleep may awake too late. Be on the lookout always. Seek to hold fast every advantage. Be watchful for every chance to push forward. The living God goes before but his sons must share his purposes and keep awake in their pursuit. "For all saints and for me." It is "all together" or not-at-all. It has ever been so. God's warring children must war not with one another but with their common foes. In the local field of battle or all along the line, there must be one purpose and one army. Cross-firing is always disastrous. It demoralizes and defeats itself. We must go forward together. God wills it. Many fight poorly equipped but need not. The whole armor is for the taking. Many do campaign fully equipped. More could and should. Every skirmish won opens the way into another. Every battle bravely fought ennobles those who struggle. Toward the sunset quiet will come. Some may be fallen asleep but their dreams will be of victory. The fighting will last all day. But at evening God will reign upon the mountains. And all fighting saints will have their reward.

Roping the Boys into Sunday School

BY CHARLES A. STARR

IT does seem a little strange, lassoing boys, to get them into a Sunday school, doesn't it? First, it took the lariat and a man who could use it; then, too, it took the boys. But in a city like New York there is never a shortage of the latter. The man with the lariat was there, too far from the Western cow country where he learned to swing it.

Frank Bruno Gigliotti—he's a Reverend now—who did the lassoing was once much that seems incongruous with pastoral work or recruiting Sunday-school classes. As a boy he lived on a ranch up along the Dakota-Montana border, learning to ride, then to take part in the round-up and "big drive" to the railroad station. He could rope a steer or a wild horse with the best of the cowboys, and ride so well that when the owner of a string of race horses saw him at a rodeo he coveted the youth as a jockey and hired him forthwith.

He became a good jockey and rode many winning races in the West and Southwest and hung up records which stand. He learned some other things during that time, among which was to handle cards deftly. Satan thought he had him, but all the while God was preparing the cowboy-jockey for greater things.

One night Gigliotti passed a street meeting in the Northwest, where he was racing. A song and a sentence or two of the speaker's message lodged in his mind and though he passed on, at the next corner he turned and went back to the meeting, leaving a companion. That night he became acquainted with Jesus Christ.

Next day he quit his job as jockey, went East, found another job, then started a mission, prospering in both. He rose to the position of shearman in a steel mill at good wages, but his success in the mission attracted the attention of preachers and Gigliotti was sent to the Biblical Seminary in New York City to study for the ministry.

His spare time was too valuable to waste and he began street work for the evangelistic committee of New York City.

*DEAR God, I am a growing child;
Each day of living brings
A hundred puzzling thoughts to me
About a hundred things.*

*Sometimes it's very hard for me
To tell what I should do.
And so I say this little prayer,
And leave it all to You.*

*So now I need not be afraid.
For Love is near to me.
A Guardian Angel holds my hand
And helps my eyes to see.*

*When I am puzzled over things,
His help is sure and true.
You are my Guardian Angel, God;
I leave my life with You.*

—JOHN MARTIN,

In "Prayers for Little Men and Women."

His specialty was boys and young men. It will be seen that it was a perfectly natural thing for him to use the lariat on a group of boys fed up on lurid literature. They were startled to find a young fellow who could do the thing they had read and dreamed of, and it caught them in more senses than one.

He found another group of boys on a vacant lot with a deck of cards, saw that they did not know how to shuffle the cards and asked if he might not show them how to do it. Marvelling at his dexterity they were ready to listen to Gigliotti as he told of things much more worth while than card playing. Before they parted they handed over the cards, saying they would have no more use for them.

Another group was playing with dice. Gigliotti proceeded to show them how to shoot craps, for they were bungling. That was his bait to catch alive the fish he was seeking and that lot of boys is in another Sunday-school class.

One day on the street he struck an acquaintance with a young Dane—Gigliotti was always doing that—and finally invited him to visit him at the school. The Dane is there now as a student for the ministry. He has been called a genius by the head of the school.

This is but one type of the work which the evangelistic committee is doing in tents, shops, on vacant lots and on street corners, touching not only English-speaking folk, but almost every nationality under the sun. Meetings are held in five or six different languages.

Of particular interest to people in other sections of the land is the work among the foreign-speaking folk. Many of these come alienated from the religion of the homeland; some of them are avowed atheists, anarchists, Bolsheviks and red radicals of other sorts. There is a church made up almost wholly of former anarchists, several of whom are either in the ministry already or are preparing for it.

But more important is the vast number who have been won for the Master who have scattered throughout the country with a new hope and a new vision, no longer menaces or problems, but assets to the communities in which they settle. And numbers of them are back in their native lands as missionaries or preachers.

Thus the work in New York City touches all the country and even missionary fields, giving an interest in it far wider than the city limits. The evangelistic committee is the concerted work of the churches in behalf of those who do not attend the church services, being classed as "taking the church to the people and bringing the people back to the church."

To August 10, an aggregate of 175,751 people were reached through 1,441 meetings, held in seventy-two centers, in English, Polish, French, Hungarian, Chinese and Russian. Six tents are now in operation.

"Sunday School" Denney

By W. H. THOMPSON

ALLOW me to present a description of Rev. S. S. Denney—"Sunday School" Denney, as he calls himself; only seventy-one years of age; fifty-one years spent in the Baptist ministry; hearty and hale, rugged and keen—as he appeared when he came back to attend the annual meeting of the Ohio Association, which was held recently with the Zoar Church. This was the church in which he held a revival meeting more than twenty years ago with 104 conversions, the first fifty of whom were married men.

Country pastors of the present generation may be interested to know some of the secrets of Brother Denney's success as a country pastor in the hills of southern Ohio.

He had as adequate educational training as the schoolteachers, physicians, and lawyers of his day. He had not only the common-school course, but he spent three years in a select school. He entered Granville College, but after a brief term returned to the work of his churches, and took up private studies with the pastor of the Baptist church at Gallipolis. Twice a week he went with a load of produce to market at Gallipolis. After the marketing was done, he took dinner with the pastor, and spent the afternoon in study—Bible study, sermonizing, etc. He is a good singer of gospel hymns, and a writer of "careless rhymes," lyrics depicting incidents familiar to country folks in the hills.

Getting Along With Folks

He has a happy faculty of getting along with folks. The young people know he is human. He loves the children and they like him. He claims he has bought more candy than any other man in Southern Ohio, and given it freely to children. He can tell interesting stories with a purpose by the hour. He never stays too long at one home, eats heartily of every kind of food except chicken (!) and goes to bed without taking the burdens of the day with him. As a member of the F. & A. M. Lodge he is found worthy and well prepared.

His sermons are short and direct. He never had a "barrel," but has always developed new sermons for new days and occasions. His old friends say one reason why they like to hear him preach is that they never know what he will say next.

He trains his Sunday-school teachers, meeting them once each week, instructing them in the details of scripture interpretation, then helps them to apply the material to the various age groups.

His evangelism is sane. "He never cracks the shell of the egg to help the chicken out."

He has held "long-term" pastorates. He was pastor of one church twenty-seven years. He has baptised members of the fourth generation in two families. He grows up with his flock, leading them in their community projects. He keeps up with the times, always able to talk intelligently of the latest invention or device for the common good.

He equipped himself with the best means of travel in his parish, having a good saddle horse which took him over the hills in all kinds of weather.

He gave himself wholeheartedly to the work. Many a time he would leave home on Saturday afternoon to be gone over Sunday, then find his people ready for a revival meeting and not return home for six weeks.

Even now he is undaunted in spirit, a Macedonian call to a neglected mountain section in Pennsylvania has been answered and he plans soon to continue his work as a pioneer.

Current educational standards are higher, the community life is more complex, automobiles are here, and daily newspapers and radio-phones are available for country people, but they will hear him gladly if the country pastor of today will be a man "for such a time as this".

Baptist Missionary Chaplains

As Reported at the Indianapolis Convention

D R. L. C. BARNES spoke as follows: "To become a chaplain in these days is a great honor. With the help of the Chaplains' Aid the Northern Baptist Convention, in cooperation with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, has made it exceedingly difficult to get into the chaplaincy. Only men of most approved standing and character and ability can do so. Some eight years ago one of the chaplains said that they seemed to be disconnected with the denomination they represented, and he wanted to know if there was any way by which this corps of fire-fighters could be recognized by their brethren. Now we have come to a time, after our brother chaplains organized and made their appeal jointly, when we can recognize them. There are now twenty-one chaplains in the army to whom we have given the privilege, as they requested, of becoming chaplain missionaries. Within two months two-thirds of these chaplains have seized the chance to put themselves in this relation with those whom they love in our denominational work.

"How can our Home Mission Society take on thirteen new missionaries? Because the U. S. Government pays their salaries. But we are still able to make small appropriations to them out of the war fund to assist in special ministrations in this work."

Concerning the chaplain's work, Chaplain Ballentine said: "I am sure I consider it an honor and great privilege to represent the Baptist chaplains of the North, and to speak for a moment upon our new relationship with the Home Mission Society. . . . I would like to give you a brief glance of the chaplain's work. We are glad of the action that has been taken in regard to us. And I would like to enlist your sympathetic interest in the work of the chaplains as they labor in the United States army.

"On April 1, 1922, there were 179 chaplains in the army. Of these 25 per cent are Catholics, 70 per cent, Protestants, and 5 per cent are not identified with any denomination. There was a denominational balance established during the war which made it possible for every denomination to be represented among the chaplains. At the present time there are twenty-eight Baptist chaplains, fifteen from the North and eleven from the South, and two colored. Every chaplain is a commissioned officer. He is advanced by service, not by favoritism. After five years he becomes a captain. Six years more makes him a major. For a period of four years, one chaplain is selected as chief of chaplains. At the present time a very fine man is in that position. Many new features have been added to the chaplain's work. The chaplain's work is very much like that of a pastor. I am an ordained Baptist minister and a commissioned officer, and now I am a home missionary, a sort of combination, three in one. I am glad to fill these three positions. We work with the officers and their families and the enlisted men and their families. We have our problems. The chaplain must make himself a friend of the enlisted men, win their confidence, remove dissatisfaction, provide religious services. We conduct preaching services, Sunday school, and so on.

"What about the new relation that has been established? We are glad that the Home Mission Society wants to look upon us as its missionaries, glad to be so considered. Now we do not feel that we are isolated from the denomination and the churches; we do not want to stand apart, and we are glad you are not going to let us. We shall be glad to send you our reports and to tell you of our work. In behalf of the Baptist chaplains, we are glad to be one of you. The salary, however, is provided by the government. The government appreciates our service according to the number of years of service given. The government provides a pension. We want your sympathetic interest in the work of the chaplains and in the religious problems of the army. How many chaplains do you know? How many in your state? How much have you done? We thought it was a fine thing for a man to go and many churches gave up their pastors during the war. The same work is going on in the time of peace. We do not believe in war any more than the doctor believes in disease. We have the boys to minister to. They are kind-hearted. They come in for a period of three years, and in connection with their military duties, learn trades.

"I want to ask you to have in your heart a real appreciation in time of peace for the men who are willing to stand for you in the time of danger."

He that is down needs fear no fall,
He that is low, no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide.

I am content with that I have,
Little be it or much;
And Lord, contentment still I crave,
Because thou savest such.

Fullness to such a burden is
That go on pilgrimage;
Here little, and hereafter bliss,
Is best from age to age.

—John Bunyan.

Putting the "Teen Age" to Work

By MRS. WILLIAM DENT COOL

AS the summer days are over and we come to the fall months again and consider plans for our Sunday schools for the winter let us not forget that very important group known as the "intermediates" or "teen age" young people.

Looking backward we will find that our schools have lost the pupils to an alarming extent after they leave the junior department and this is the leak that must be stopped. Let us plan this year to do our best to hold the interest of this class of teen age boys and girls and make the Sunday school so attractive that it will not only hold those already in the school but bring in the young people of the community in ever-increasing numbers.

With the advent of the junior high school with its more advanced curriculum we must meet the need for a similar advancement in our religious education. The foundation laid in the children's division must be built upon and unless we have a worth-while program we cannot complain if we lose our teen age boys and girls to other schools which have such a program or worse yet to find that they have drifted away and are not receiving any religious education at all.

The ordinary program of a large majority of our schools is not one that has any appeal to the average teen age youth. They are beginning to think more of themselves and have a great desire to put their ideas into practice. We have talked a lot about organization and sometimes feel it has been worked to death, but experience has shown that organized departments, made up of organized classes in the Sunday school, have been able to show better results than the unorganized schools.

They Want Activity

In the teen age we can begin to use the young people themselves in the organization of the department, and the best results can be obtained by having the officers and committees from the members of the classes with a department superintendent and the teachers to direct and act as a necessary balance. Let the young people work out the program plans themselves and you will find that they will plan meetings that will be worshipful and educational to a surprising degree. Activity is what they want and need and we must provide it for them if we are to be successful. Lack of room and equipment are a handicap many of our schools face but this should not prevent any school from having an organized teen age department even if it is necessary to meet in one or two rooms. The teen age department may conduct the opening worship at least part of the time even if the older people do have to sit back and listen to them. Try it for a while and you will find no one would consider going back to the old order.

The classes should be organized by all means and these classes made responsible for the various details of the program, music, scripture, missionary story, special stunts, and so forth. In order to satisfy the natural desire to be doing something worth while, which we find so prominent in the adolescent youth.

The aim of the Sunday school is primarily to build character through a careful and systematic teaching of the principles of the Bible and the life of our Lord Jesus, and the use of this teaching in practical service. We cannot be too careful in the selection of teachers for this important character building period in the life of our young people. There are so many desirable courses in teacher training to be obtained that we should be able to secure better trained teachers every year. The youth is prone to compare his Sunday-school teacher with those in the public school and such comparison is often detrimental to the former. The preparation and teaching of the lesson on Sunday is a small part of the work of a successful teen age teacher. He must be on the job during the week and assist the class in putting over social times, hikes, athletics and other through-the-week activities. Again let the members of the class make the plans and carry them out with the teacher in the background as much as possible, making such suggestions from time to time as may be necessary.

Not many of our schools are provided with places suitable for class meetings and the teacher or parents of some member must be willing to open his home for the week day activities. Many of our public schools, even in the smaller communities, are provided with gymnasiums which can be secured for the use of the Sunday-school classes where the church has not made such provision.

With the recent merger into the International Council of Sunday Schools and Religious Education we have the strong denominational leadership and the vast army of Sunday-school workers brought together in one group, and we should be able to make rapid strides in all departments of our schools and to attain heights we have never before even dreamed of.

Let us rally to the support of our teen age young people and make their place in the Sunday school so attractive and instructive that we will not only be able to stop the leak so many of us are experiencing but will be able to reach a large number of the youth of teen age who are not now receiving any religious education. De Molay: An Order for Boys

By U. M. MCGUIRE

(The secular press has given wide publicity to the subject of this article. We have, therefore, asked Dr. McGuire to make a study of the movement and pass on the results to our readers so that they may be informed and we trust encouraged to give more consideration to the groups of boys, which in every community will respond to wise Christian leadership. Various organizations are doing good work for the boys and the churches should not be found wanting.—Editor)

A RECENT rumor that a suggested federation of secret societies around the Ku Klux Klan as a nucleus would include the order of DeMolay aroused much popular curiosity to know something about the Order of DeMolay. The essential facts are here briefly stated.

A few years ago, Frank S. Land, a member of the Masonic Order, of Kansas City, Missouri, secured a position for an orphan boy, who was entirely alone in the world and friendless. In order to encourage and help the boy, Mr. Land called upon some other boys, sons of Masons, to help make life pleasant for the little fellow. From this small beginning the group of boys grew into a club, which by and by requested Mr. Land's assistance to form a fraternity of some sort with a "joke" ritual for the fun of the thing.

Mr. Land saw better possibilities and he suggested a serious fraternity to teach good lessons and to base its ritual upon the life of some great man or martyr. The boys would have none of it, of course; for "boys will be boys." Do you think so? Then listen to this: "The boys requested that he read to them the lives of men who he thought would be fitting for them to use as a basis for their little fraternity." Yes, "boys will be boys," but what kind of boys? He found out. He read them brief sketches of the lives of several martyrs; but when he came to the life of Jacques DeMolay he got no farther, for the boys enthusiastically decided that their fraternity should be dedicated to Jacques DeMolay and should bear his name.

Now, this Jacques DeMolay, the student of history need not be told, was the last Grand Master of one of the greatest Orders of medieval chivalry of the time of the Crusades, the Templars. At the instigation of Pope Clement V and at the orders of King Philip the Fair of France, the Order of Knight Templars was suppressed, its wealth confiscated, and its Grand Master, Jacques DeMolay, burned at the stake. His execution took place on an island in the River Seine, May 18, 1314, while the bells of Notre Dame Cathedral tolled the evening hour of seven. With him died the most brilliant of the great knightly orders, that, since its organization in the year 1113, had thrown the glamour of romance over the Crusades and helped to preserve Europe from Mohammedan conquests. Walter Scott, in "Ivanhoe," gives an interesting sidelight on the decline of the Templars and the character of DeMolay.

The effect on that group of earnest Kansas City boys can be guessed. The Order of DeMolay they would have, and would be. And it was so. Mr. Frank A. Marshall, being invited to help in founding the Order, wrote an impressive and appropriate ritual in two degrees, and the Order was formally constituted in March, 1919.

In order not to conflict with the Boy Scouts, but rather, to follow up their work where they lay it down, the age limits for membership in DeMolay are from sixteen to twenty-one. Principles emphasized are love of parents, reverence, patriotism, purity, courtesy, comradeship and fidelity. It is emphatically not a Masonic organization nor a proselytizing agency for Masonry in any of its branches. It is organized solely to develop and improve the boy himself, and with no other purpose in view. Naturally,

Daily Bible Readings on the Promotional Program

The General Board of Promotion has just published a folder giving daily Bible readings for the balance of our convention year—September to April. They are based on the monthly topics suggested for the promotional program, and consist of a verse or short passage, with a suggestive thought drawn from it. The readings were prepared by Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, assisted by Mrs. Geo. W. Coleman, Miss Ina E. Burton and Mrs. Stacy R. Warburton, and will be a unique and timely help for devotion. They are free, and ought to be in use by every member of every Baptist church. Write to the director of promotion of your state, or to the literature bureau of the General Board of Promotion, at any of the following addresses: 276 Fifth Ave., New York; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

Better Baptist Church School Advance

By MILTON W. MCGORRELL

The effort for the Better Baptist Church School Advance is on during September. The first concentrated effort is to be made in the "Big Baptist Church School Week." The first meeting during this week is to be the workers' conference. Other meetings are to be the booster banquet and the church prayer meeting for the Sunday School.

Plans for the booster banquet include the following:

- (1) A working committee which shall be as representative as possible and include members of organized classes. A committee of not more than five will accomplish more than a larger group. The work of this committee includes supper arrangements, program and invitations.
- (2) The banquet should be given much publicity, and much effort should be made to have present every officer and teacher of the church school, together with all other interested workers.
- (3) The menu must mean banquet and not the average church supper.
- (4) An outside speaker should be invited to give the main address.
- (5) Some clever young people should be secured to make appropriate decorations. Short three-minute speeches may be made on some such topics as the following before the main speech of the morning is delivered—extension, efficiency, equipment, evangelism, elementary work, extras with main speech on Baptists at work in religious education.

One of the effective items in this "Big Baptist Church School Week" should be the church prayer meeting, if the pastor and deacons will agree to devote it to the work of the church school. If this cannot be done, then the superintendent may call a special Sunday school prayer meeting. Nothing much worth while can be done without prayer. "Without me ye can do nothing."

The crowning event of this church school week is to be the big rally day on Sunday closing the week of effort. The effectiveness of this will depend upon the amount of work put into it. Superintendents and officers should lead in this effort. How many schools can realize this ideal—every teacher calling on every member of the class before rally day? Advertising in plenty should be made in newspapers, on bulletin boards, invitation cards, flying corps of autos. The program itself should be attractive and culminate in resolutions to accept for the year the program outlined by the workers' conference. Detailed suggestions for these meetings will be supplied on registration with your director of religious education or the Publication Society.

The "Big Baptist Church School Week" ought to mean much in generating inspiration and ideas for the great effort to improve the church school.

SHALL not the heart which has received so much, trust the Power by which it lives? May it not quit other leadings, and listen to the Soul that has guided it so gently, and taught it so much, secure that the future will be worthy of the past?"—RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Fearless Faith and Fine Fidelity

By E. LEROY DAKIN
Pastor-Elect of Brooklyn Temple

The church is a divine institution with a definite, divinely designated and assigned task—the making known of the Gospel of divine grace. This must be the objective of all its ministry. This objective is realized only as folk are helped into that definite personal spiritual experience we call regeneration—that experience in and through which they come to know themselves as the redeemed children of God. Consequently, evangelism must be the soul of all the activities and programs of the church. Other organizations and institutions may carry on cultural, recreational and entertainment programs quite as well, or perhaps even better than the church; but no other organization outside the church of Jesus Christ is even attempting to work at the spiritual task of the church. The church can make use of cultural and other interests, but it succeeds best when it specializes on its specialty—the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The church need fear nothing but disloyalty to Christ. Education is the handmaid of the church. In the long run—and it takes a long run to show enduring spiritual values—"nothing can be done against the truth." It is ours then in fearlessness of faith and fineness of fidelity to give ourselves unreservedly to the fulfillment of the great commission of our Master. That is our perennial job.

Loyalty to Christ requires the use of all our resources in the achievement of his purposes and an unwavering confidence in his leadership and Lordship.

We are still in the early part of the rallying month: the month of "facing the task and rallying the forces of the local church (your church) for the season's work."

Dr. Tupper in the Near East

Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, of Washington, D. C., who is abroad on an official mission for the United States Government, writes to THE BAPTIST from Cherbourg under date of August 8 as follows: Dear Bro. Editor:—This afternoon I leave Cherbourg, France, for Constantinople via Paris and the Balkans. Arrangements have been made for me to make somewhat of a thorough investigation of affairs in and around the city of the Sultan; and then to visit the Trans-Caucasian region, Armenia, Syria, Palestine and countries further east. Every advantage has been afforded me, in my effort to present a report on my return to Washington, which shall be of practical and permanent value.

With fraternal esteem and regards,
Henry Allen Tupper.

Cooperation: A Prayer Meeting Meditation

"For we are laborers together with God" — 1 Cor. 3:9

By MRS. J. E. WARRINGTON

WONDERFUL opportunity! The dignity it adds to the daily task!

In any business relationship we choose for our partner that man who is wise, who is honest, who is trustworthy, who is morally clean, who is a man of large vision. And here Paul tells us we have opportunity to be laborers together with the great God who is all wisdom, all truth, all purity; who sees the end of the plan from the beginning. Can any man with a partner like that treat his fellow-man with anything but fairness, having a strong desire for his greatest good?

Then, too, this divine Partner has a desire for our good greater than any desire of our own could possibly be. Sometimes we have unutterable longing for some great good to come into our lives, but great as our desire is, it can not compare with his desire for us.

But man must do his share to make the partnership a success. When we have taken into our lives this wonderful Partner, when we have realized that he knows all about the business, we must of necessity trust his wisdom and judgment. Must not the composer of music trust the laws governing music? Suppose that the composer in originating and arranging a composition were to say, "Well, now of course there is a principle of harmony; chords resolve themselves according to a fixed law; but perhaps this principle and this law may not work for me this time. I shall bring in a saw and a hammer and a plane, and hire people to operate them in such a manner as to produce the results I am after." By any remote chance would the results be such a sound combination that people passing would say, "Listen to the music"?

Suppose a builder, instead of following the plan of the architect, were to experiment with the laws of gravitation and say, "This architect knows his business; he is the greatest in his profession. This time, however, he seems unreliable. I'll do a little planning all my own. I'll put more sand in the mortar and cement. I'll substitute lighter posts and beams. I'll use sun-dried instead of kiln-dried bricks."

"Absurd!" you say. Yes, it is absurd but not more so than to say, "Well, of course I know there is one great Architect who knows all about this building business, but he may be wrong this time. I can not quite bring myself to trust him here. I'll bring in Mr. Experiment and see what he says. We must use a little common sense."

On every hand we meet with this experience. We say, "Yes, God cares and provides for his children"; and then we proceed to fret and worry about our raiment and our food, or we refuse to follow the path he marks out for us, because of the seeming dangers and discomforts of the way. We forget the many promises, such as this:

"For I, Jehovah thy God, will hold thy right hand saying unto thee, Fear not: I will help thee."

The electric apparatus in a building may be beautiful and perfect, but unless we cooperate enough to push the button and thus connect it with the source of light it is utterly useless. How many of us are thoroughly equipped to do a wonderful work and yet are failures because we do not push the button which connects us with the source of power.

Take the simple act of washing the hands. Suppose the left hand should refuse to cooperate with the right hand and should say, "You do your washing and I'll do mine." How far would either of them be a model for cleanliness? But on the other hand suppose the left hand should say to the right, "You help me and I'll help you and both together we will wash the face." One sees at once that by hearty cooperation a much more efficient piece of work may be done.

In Amos 3:3 we find this bit of wisdom: "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Imagine the two feet with a difference of opinion as to where they wished to carry the owner! In the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians Paul gives a treatise on cooperation, where he speaks of the body being made up of many members—each necessary and important in the work of the whole. Then he tells us of the marvelous experience we may all have in possessing the love that fulfills all law.

Cooperation! Is there any angle of creation that it does not touch? It speaks to us through nature. Together the birds build their nests and together care for their young, each having a separate and distinct work but both necessary to the completion of the plan.

Together the bees store their honey, working in marvelous accord to accomplish their ends. Sun, wind, and rain work together to clothe the earth in vegetation. The rose is a perfect unity of color and fragrance and symmetry, each petal doing its part to produce this beautiful flower. To enjoy fully all this, man must employ in unity all of his senses.

Is it not a lack of cooperation that is the trouble with the world to-day? Nations at war with themselves and with one another; famine and nakedness prevalent in the land, when there is enough in the Father's house and to spare; pestilence and disease working destruction when there is enough wisdom and skill to destroy these evils. When men and nations and churches cease working at cross purposes; when we join forces for the uplifting and betterment of all; when the children of God have learned the simple lesson of brotherly love which makes every one a dynamic center of cooperative energy; then the kingdom of God will come and the Father's will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

A College President's Answer

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

SEVERAL weeks ago I had a letter from a heart-broken mother complaining that her son, a college graduate of the class of 1912, had lost his faith. She charged that Haeckel's works were used as textbooks in the college which her son attended, and quoted giving page and line from one of Haeckel's works.

I wrote to the president of the college in question asking him if the books were still in use, and whether it was representative of the textbooks in use. His reply was full and prompt. With his consent I am giving it publicity.

"I am glad you have written me so frankly. My heart goes out to any mother who finds her son does not share her Christian faith, for that faith is the most precious thing that life contains. I wish you might send me the name of the former student that I might talk, or correspond with him.

"As regards Haeckel—his book is not and never has been used as a textbook at —. Indeed the book could not be so used, as it does not contain the facts which all students of biology must learn, but merely a distorted and grossly materialistic interpretation of the facts. I have often spoken of Haeckel, in private and in public, as the most narrow and bigoted man of science of the last fifty years. His book is not regarded as authority today by any teacher of my acquaintance. Of course it is, and should be, in every university library, and the student in question may have been led astray by it, if he failed to read other books, equally accessible, which affirm a Christian view of evolution.

"If I could meet the mother I would ask her some questions. Did the boy bring his materialism with him when he came to college? Frequently I spend hours conversing with freshmen who bring to college a mass of doubt carefully concealed from their parents.

"If her boy had not come to college at all, would he have kept the mother's faith? The bank, or the store, are far more perilous to faith than is the college. Recently I called up a senior, about to graduate from —, selecting a Roman Catholic because I know the Catholics to be strongly conservative. I said to him, 'Has your college course in any way weakened your faith in Christianity?' 'Not in the least,' he replied. 'Why should it? I do remember I was perplexed for a few weeks in freshman year, when I heard the professor speak of the world as evolving through millions of years, for I had been taught that it was made in six days of twenty-four hours each. But when the priest showed me that "day" might mean "age," my difficulties all vanished.' I could send you many letters, if desired, showing how a college course has removed scores of religious difficulties—such as are created by reactionary speakers—and conserved true faith. But you, as a college graduate, need no proof of this.

"I believe that the proportion of young men in college who lose faith is very much smaller than the proportion among those who go into business. If you see fit to send me the name, I will correspond with the student and try to help him."

The Churches and the Tragedy of the Near East

By SAMUEL MCCREA CAVERT

IS IT conceivable that the American people will let the Armenians be massacred out of existence? Already, according to conservative estimates, nearly a million of them have been put to death since 1915.

Not only the Armenians but apparently all the Christian minorities in the Near East are in danger of extermination. Is it nothing to us? Through the Near East Relief we have given $50,000,000 for the saving of these people. Are we to rescue them from famine only to see them die under a vengeful sword?

It is nothing less than a moral tragedy that no great enthusiasm for the cause of these persecuted peoples has arisen in public quarters. No great leader has appeared to espouse their cause. Are we so suffering from the moral let-down after the war, so callous to bloodshed and destruction, that they no longer stir our hearts?

America is probably the one country which today has sufficient power and prestige to prevent the continuance of the atrocities against the Christian minorities in the Near East. At least the nations of Europe are not likely to take effective action without the moral support of America. According to latest reports, the proposal for an official investigation by British, French, Italian and American governments into the reported atrocities has now been given up. Are we so encased in insular provincialism that we do not feel our solidarity with our fellow-men in the Near East, to say nothing of their being our own blood-brothers in Christ?

Effective Action

The chief hope for effective action on the part of the American government lies in the creation of a great tide of public opinion, and the chief hope for creating such public opinion lies in the churches. Already they have put themselves squarely on record. Official resolutions were adopted in behalf of the Armenians, by the Presbyterian General Assembly in May, by the M. E. Church South at Hot Springs May 12, by the United Presbyterian Assembly, and by the Southern Baptist Convention at Jacksonville in June. The Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis adopted the following resolution:

"We view with profound pity and horror the extermination of the Christian peoples—Armenian, Greek, Syrian—now in progress at the hands of the Turks. At the conference at Versailles the United States was requested by the allied nations to assume a mandate for Armenia and to protect her faithful and heroic people. The Northern Baptist Convention makes a solemn protest against the ruthless starvation and massacre of the first nation to accept the Christian faith. We hereby petition our government immediately to adopt measures to secure united action on the part of the United States and European governments looking to the deliverance and security of imperiled Christian peoples in the Near East."

Not only through their own separate denominational organizations, but also unitedly through the Federal Council of the Churches have the Christian forces made their position unequivocal. Three months ago the Federal Council sent an appeal to the Protestant pastors of the country setting forth the salient facts in the situation and urging them to bring the influence of their communities to bear upon congress and the administration. A special memorial was submitted to the department of state in which the following declarations, among others, were made:

"The American public has given millions of dollars to save the remnant of this shattered race, in confidence that they will be given a protected home. This remarkable response to a nation's need will be lost if these promises are not fulfilled.

"America cannot escape her responsibility upon the ground of non-membership in the league. Our vast relief contributions—the cause of humanity—and our own moral welfare, require more than expressions of sympathy. Action is demanded."

What has been done is good, but it is only a beginning. We must make it too clear to be ignored that the Christian people of America are looking to our nation to assume its full measure of responsibility. Insistently and incessantly the churches must be creating a public sentiment that will lead not simply to investigation but to action.

No Compromise with Booze

By SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER

JUST now the Literary Digest, polling the country, finds indications of a respectable minority element, mostly in the cities, that would tilt the prohibition lid sufficiently to admit the use of light wines and beer as common beverages; and yet would retain national prohibition!

It can't be done.

This nation cannot exist half slave and half free, said Lincoln in his time. I believe it as true now to say that it cannot exist half "wet" and half "dry."

It will have to be the one or the other.

Liquor always has been a determined and shameless violator of the law, it is the world's most depraved and vicious lawbreaker. The saloon, when we had it, defied regulation. It would not be even halfway respectable. It would not obey the simplest rules dictated by common decency. It allied itself with everything that was demoralizing, vicious or rotten, in private or public life. In politics it cajoled and bribed and threatened. It prostituted government. It permitted nothing to come between it and its mission which was to turn out as many drunkards as possible. It had actually besotted the nation before, step by step, we began to rid ourselves of this curse.

If now we should make the sale of light wines and beer legal, how long would it be before we should have these alcoholic beverages "spiked"?

Conan Doyle on Prohibition

JUST before sailing for England, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle told a representative of the New York Times that he was returning to England a convert to prohibition, and added that he will advocate the policy for England. He said:

"I go back a convert to prohibition. I am a man who takes wine but nevertheless I think this generation might do a great thing to give up its comforts if by so doing it might save the next generation from the miseries of drinking to excess. There is little drinking here today compared to what there used to be. Today if you want liquor you have to go and find it. Formerly it came looking for you."

You may depend upon it their alcoholic content would not remain stationary.

The drinker would demand more and more "kick," and not even martial law would keep the booze sellers from giving it to him. The inevitable result would be—national prohibition on the statute book and in the constitution—but booze everywhere else for all who wanted it, and as long as they could stand up and drink it and had the price.

In this struggle with the dying drink traffic, the nation is now exhibiting the customary first phase of prohibition enforcement. Every prohibition state has had to pass through just such a marked reaction. The "wet" interests, of course, will make the most of it, it is their last hope. For the time being, judging from the Digest's poll, the "wets" appear to have won many by their treacherous light wine and beer propaganda. To this extent the Digest's poll is rather a startling demonstration of the strength of the "wets." Prohibition may as well recognize that the booze business is not yet dead. We must keep up the fight, until the pendulum swings back to strictly bone-dry prohibition, which it is certain to do, and "the cat dies."

A striking example of the laxity of the moment, is the exposure of the U. S. Shipping Board. To gain a few dirty dollars selling booze, this board did not hesitate to compromise the good name of the American people, dishonor their flag and debase their government in the eyes of the world by putting it in the humiliating position of violating its own laws and constitution. In order to gain a few more dollars to bolster up its merchant marine it has turned these ships into floating saloons at the very time when, through our Department of State, we have been sanctimoniously requesting the government of Great Britain to put a stop to booze-running under the British flag between that country and this!

Thanks to the shipping board, what a spectacle we are for an upright people and nation!

While with us a great effort is now being made to override the Volstead Act and restore wine and beer, foreign lands are getting ready to take the water-cure. Central Europe will have prohibition in a few years, reports E. L. Hohenthal, just returned from five-months' investigation in

ARE STRIKES ORDAINED OF GOD?

The assumption that strikes are ordained of God is of the same order as the belief that war is ordained of God. In each case adjudication is sought through an instrument purely physical in character. That war is the most expensive, the least intelligent, and in every respect an unsatisfactory method for the settlement of international questions is an established conviction among all thinking people today. The time has been when war apparently was inevitable. We are rapidly approaching the time, however, when all wars of the future will be classed as outlaw in character. The world at large has been compelled to pay too dearly for the settlement of national difficulties on that basis.

We may speak in like manner concerning the strike as a method of securing economic justice for any particular class of workers. In times past it has on many occasions been the only weapon at hand to use. By its employment some specific gains have been made for the workingman. Such gains are nothing like so great, however, as sometimes represented. Carefully prepared statistics would indicate that of the 2000 strikes per year registered by the department of labor, capital and labor win approximately one-third each, the other third are draws. Strikes are exceedingly costly to capital as well as to labor. Yet such expense is but a trifle as compared with the ultimate cost to the public. It is for this reason that the public looks with increasing disfavor upon the calling of strikes. So acute has this situation become that the calling of a strike is most likely to create prejudice against the organization which calls the strike without due consideration of the real merits of the case. At the recent national convention of the American Federation of Labor, a prominent official of the construction trades frankly urged that his fact be recognized in labor tactics and that a better way to promote labor's cause be found.

God has ordained a better way. In his book we read, "for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds." The forces which are fighting humanity's cause most insistently and persistently are spiritual in character. Only the leaders of our great labor organizations recognize and align themselves with these forces. Occupational groups susceptible of union organization form only 7 per cent of our total population. The importance of this 7 per cent none would question. Let this group recognize, however, that their welfare is so vitally related to the great common humanity of our nation that they can not cause others to suffer without suffering in turn themselves.

We permit no nation to exercise its prerogatives today at the expense of the well-being of other nations. Neither can we permit any group within our nation to flourish at the expense of the common life of the nation.

Humanity's problems reduce themselves to a common denominator in the demand for justice and fair play to all. To this end is the Christian church committed unless it be renegade to its founder. To this end is the American government committed, unless it become disloyal to the principles of its Constitution. Have we failed to invest the Railroad Labor Board with sufficient power to compel the railroads to abide by its decree? Let us correct the evil at its root. Are governmental officials biased to such an extent that the rights of labor are ignored and the desires of capital respected? Let labor make its power known at the next election.

The greatest forces of earth are quiet and unseen. The still small voice reveals the presence of the Almighty. Upon these forces, spiritual and unseen, operating always within and not contrary to established law, must the Kingdom of God depend for its advancement. Not through physical coercion but through a social consciousness educated to the requirements of justice, brotherliness and righteousness, will the claims of humanity receive their final vindication and ultimate triumph.

DOES OUR BAPTISTRY LEAK?

At our recent session of the East Washington and North Idaho Baptist Convention, held with Grace Church, Spokane, one of our greatest Coast preachers said we lose a great portion of our membership in the baptistry.

This suggests the necessity of an investigation to ascertain who is to blame.

Are newly baptized converts lost to the church through the neglect of the pastor and official members of the church?

"Jesus knew what was in man and yet loved. 'Yet,' do we say? Rather, 'Because he knew—he loved.' The only love that can save us to and for the highest is a far-seeing, deep-searching love that has penetrated to the worst. It is an unsafe and unwise idealism which knows not the deepest core of realism, and the only realism that is true to life is the idealism of Jesus, the love of God in Christ."

—Sidney M. Berry.

And being thus neglected and naturally timid they fail to enter into active work of the church because of the apparent indifference of the church.

We are made to wonder how much of this failure to pursue the Christian Life is attributable to unwise methods of modern high-pressure evangelists, inducing children and others to profess conversion and join the church without an actual experience of grace.

The writer believes that children may exercise saving faith and that at a very early age; and yet believes that many are induced to connect themselves with the church by those evangelists who are adepts at enumeration.

Another way to account for a portion of this loss is in the large numbers chopped from our membership by some of our churches—sometimes reported as "back door revivals." Such reports have been quite common in our associations.

One of the largest problems on our field is the ever-increasing number of unidentified Baptists who have removed from one community to another and have either come without a certificate of membership in the home church or have such certificate stored in the depths of the trunk and thus have no organic connection with our work.

May we not suggest a united effort to discover and align these with our work? Many of these were in other days efficient workers and would be much happier if they could be induced to give their lives afresh to the cause of the Master.

Let us turn on the searchlight and see who of us is blameless.

NOT A PROTESTANT MOVE

A correction please! First in THE BAPTIST and then in the Watchman-Examiner I have met the statement that the Beran Baptist Association was organized as a protest against some action of the Michigan Baptist Convention. This is totally false. Its organization does not affect the relation of the churches to the Michigan Baptist Convention nor was it occasioned by any action of that convention. Of the six churches in the new association two were formerly connected with the Jackson Baptist Association, three were connected with the Shiawassee Baptist Association and one, the one of which the writer is pastor, has for two years been unassociated. These churches are "big enough" to cooperate with all their brethren of like precious faith and they are too big to compromise the Word of God. The new association was not organized for purposes of protest; it was organized for congenial cooperative effort.

Echoes from Summer

(A Rally Day Exercise)

BY MARGARET T. APPELGARTH

IF YOU feel that in other years your Rally Day has been rather too formal and adult in its various features, there may be suggestions in the following program which will grip the imagination of your scholars and link summer experiences with the winter work of the school. The simplicity of the setting and the apparent spontaneity of the program should exert an influence all their own.

I. The Setting

1. Almost any store selling canoes will loan or rent one at this season of the year, but if an actual canoe is not available an astonishingly good imitation may be made from long strips of shaped and curved cardboard, secured end to end with paper fasteners and covered with shiny lining material, red or green. Cane or foot stools for the seats, a few gay cushions and a paddle will form a convincing outfit, in which should be seated two girls attractively dressed in white, with bright sweaters and sports hats.

Use two rolls of sapphire blue crepe paper on the floor for water; ripple it realistically against the sides of the boat and place the canoe side view toward the audience; one girl paddling in the rear should do so on side of canoe farthest from audience; her companion should recline in the canoe, facing her, propped up by pillow; she should trail her fingers lazily in the water!

2. The "banks" at the water's edge may be easily simulated by borrowed ferns and palms, or by boughs of trees set in buckets. It is behind these that the various speakers are to appear.

II. Program: "Echoes From Summer"

After an opening hymn and prayer, the short episodes may be given as follows, unintroduced—although it is desirable that a printed program should bear the titles of the episodes and the hymn.

1. Drifting Down The Stream of Life. (Senior Department.) Two girls seen seated in canoe, as above directed. Each should have a magazine in her lap, in the pages of which a copy of this exercise may be inserted to aid the memory, so that they may serve as "prompters" for the speakers also. For convenience we have named these girls Ann and Mary; use real names in presenting. (Be sure to face toward audience slightly, when speaking.) Ann: "You're working so hard, Mary, don't paddle for a while—why don't we just drift?"

Mary: "Oh, but I'm afraid of drifting!"

Ann: "Afraid of drifting? What in the world is there to be afraid of?"

Mary: "My dear, if you don't watch out

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

you may get where you least want to be! I've heard of people drifting along who actually glided over high waterfalls and were dashed to pieces on the rocks below, or maybe they drifted into a whirlpool and were sucked into their doom before they knew it, or possibly they drifted in water so shallow that they were hopelessly grounded and could make no progress at all... drifting is dangerous business! You never get where you want to be!"

Ann (dreamily gazing over audience) "Drifting... drifting... why, Mary, I honestly believe most of us are just drifting through life, anyhow; we go with the current, we do what the other young folks do, and think what the other young folks think, and like what the other young folks like! Pretty shallow, isn't it, to drift idly with the crowd?"

Mary (nodding) "Shallow for a time until you get in deeper and still deeper water."

Ann: "I suppose it's because it's so easy

My Prayer

Let me not die before I've done for Thee My earthly work, whatever it may be; Call me not hence with mission unfulfilled; Let me not leave my space of ground untilld.

Impress this truth upon me—that not one Can do my portion that I leave undone: For each one in thy vineyard hath a spot To labor on for life, and weary not.

Then give me strength all faithfully to toil, Converting barren earth to fruitful soil. I long to be an instrument of thine, To gather worshippers unto thy shrine; To be the means one human soul to save From the dark terrors of a hopeless grave. Yet most I want a spirit of content To work where'er thou'lt wish my labor spent;

Whether at home, or in a stranger clime, In days of joy, or sorrow's sterner time, I want a spirit passive—to lie still,

And by thy power to do thy holy will: And when the prayer unto my lips doth rise, "Before a new home doth my soul surprise, Let me accomplish some great work for thee,"

Subdue it, Lord! Let my petition be, "O, make me useful in this world of thine, In ways according to thy will—not mine." Let me not leave my space of ground untilld;

Call me not hence with mission unfulfilled;

Let me not die before I've done for thee My earthly work, whatever it may be.

—Congregationalist.

—you don't have to exert yourself, yet inch by inch imperceptibly you drift away until it's too late to be saved."

Mary: "That's exactly what I've just read in this magazine about the two ways to spell life: How when you're young you spell it life, with the "I" very large and conspicuous—I! I! I! (points to self) "I'm here to have a good time! I'm my own boss! I should worry! I! I! I! And then, when you're grown up and find what a failure selfish persons become, then you spell life I I F E, with the 'if' in giant letters—I! I! I! If I'd only known enough to have a goal in life! If I'd only begun right! If I hadn't drifted! If! If! If!"

Ann (nodding) "Do you know, I believe that's why we have Sunday schools, so that one day in seven we can stop drifting aimlessly along and learn to avoid rapids and whirlpools and shallows. In other words, have a guide in life!"

Mary: "Like the hymn that goes this way" (hums a bar of it), "let's sing it, Ann!" Both sing one verse, audience joining in chorus:

"Saviour, lead me lest I stray (lest I stray)

Gently lead me all the way (all the way);

I am safe when by Thy side (by Thy side);

I would in thy love abide (love abide).

Chorus: Lead me, lead me, Saviour, lead me, lest I stray (lest I stray);

Gently down the stream of time (stream of time);

Lead me, Saviour, all the way (all the way).

Note: Words and tune by Frank M. Davis may be found in "Church Hymns and Gospel Songs," Y. M. C. A. edition, published by Biglow and Main, New York and Chicago.

The girls stay in canoe throughout program, girl in rear paddling occasionally both talking to those on shore, for example:

Ann (sees two children coming up platform steps) "Good morning, children, can you tell me what I can do to keep from drifting?"

2. Digging Through to China (Primary Department) Two small children wearing rompers and sun-hats come dancing up the steps carrying shiny tin pails and sand shovels; in reply to the question they call: "Dig! That's what we're here to do: Dig! Just you watch!"

A deep box of sandy earth should be hidden behind a low clump of ferns and boughs, and the little boy should begin at once to dig energetically.

Little girl (leaning over to watch the digging, straightens herself and says to Ann): "I guess there's lots of things to dig in besides sand. There's the Bible, you know. I learned a little song about it in Sunday school once." (Sings to tune "Naomi"):

"Thy word is like a deep, deep mine,
And jewels, rich and rare,
Are hidden in its mighty depths
For every searcher there."

Little boy (looking up) "When I get to be a man I'm going to dig all the way through to China. Indeed I am!"

Mary: "It's none too soon to begin now, sonny!" (In aside to Ann) "He won't drift with such a goal!"

Little boy: "All right, I'll begin now" (Starts digging again.)

Little girl (clapping hands excitedly) "Oh, look! look! I really guess he's got to China already! See what he's found!"

Little boy digs up Chinese doll, which both children examine in spellbound fashion, exclaiming "See this!" "Look at that!" until they discover a scroll tied like a diploma to the doll's hands. (This scroll may be made of three or four yards of white or colored shelf paper, cut in strip about 3 inches wide. As the children unroll to its full length, facing the audience should appear in a column down the back of the scroll the 19 letters forming the words: "The New World Movement." Paint them in heavy black type in Chinese-y print, one letter above another. On the opposite side write the following, which the children read aloud:) "O honorable members of the Baptist Church, the heathen side of the world begs each of you to dig deep into your honorable pocketbooks and send us the gospel. For we are still waiting!"

Little boy (nodding wisely) "I guess some folks I know had better begin digging right away."

Little girl (importantly) "Let's go and tell them how money is just the loveliest kind of a spade to dig through to China and India and everywhere else!"

(Both of them scamper from platform and take up the Sunday school collection in their tin pails!)

3. Keep Your Eye on the Ball. (Junior Department)

A junior boy, in complete baseball uniform, carrying bat, now strides up on platform as if he meant business.

Mary: "Wait a minute, Champion Player! Can baseball teach any secrets to keep a person from drifting?"

Boy cocks his head on one side thoughtfully, raises his bat in position to strike, swings it once or twice, tentatively, gazing into space. Then brightens as he answers: "Keep your eye on the ball—that's the secret of baseball! It's the only way to play the game, for maybe there are other fellows on bases, see? And maybe they can't make a home run if you don't keep your eye on the ball and know which base you ought to make. For sometimes there's a man on every base, vaiting to see what you do! And you vant your side to win, don't you? You vant them all to get home, don't you? Well, just keep your eye on the ball, or you'll queer the game!"

Mary: A man on every base! Waiting o see what you do! You want them all to make home runs, don't you? Why, that's what the New World Movement is! A red man on first base, a black man on second base, a yellow man on third base—a white man safe at the home plate! But it all depends how the next white man plays, whether those others get home or not....we Baptists won't drift if we keep our eyes on the New World Movement ball."

Mary and Ann start the hymn "We've a Story To Tell To The Nations"; entire school to join in singing first verse, while from various parts of the room should come scholars dressed as Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Immigrants, Mexicans, Alaskans, Indians, etc. They gather at foot of platform and sit in a semicircle with their backs against it.

Life's Common Things

The things of every day are all so sweet—
The morning meadows wet with dew;
The dance of daisies in the noon; the blue
Of far-off hills where twilight shadows lie;
The night, with all its tender mystery of sound
And silence, and God's starry sky!
Oh, life—the whole of life—is far too fleet.
The things of every day are all too sweet.
The common things of life are all so dear—
The waking in the warm half-gloom
To find again the old familiar room;
The scents and sighs and sounds that never tire;
The homely work, the plans, the lit of baby's laugh;
The crackle of the open fire;
The waiting, then the footsteps coming near;
The opening door, your handclasp—and your kiss—
Is heaven not, after all, the Now and Here?
The common things of life are all so dear.
—ALICE E. ALLEN in Universalist Leader.

4. The Kings' Highway. (Intermediate Department.)

A Girl Scout, in uniform, comes on platform: "I couldn't help overhearing what you were saying about drifting, and I think there's a wonderful lesson to be learned from the hikes I've had this summer. For no matter how far I want to walk the only way to get there is to put one foot in front of the other and go forward. Standing still never gets me anywhere! But a step at a time gets me there every time, if I just keep at it. I guess it's the same plan in walking the Kings' Highway, step by step to help the people you meet there every day, whether they are blind or deaf or lame in their own Christian life. It's all in the thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah if you will open your Bibles and read it responsively with me!"

(Conducts responsive reading: Isaiah 35.)

She says: "Perhaps you are wondering what it is in the church school which will keep you from drifting, so I have brought you some worthwhile preserves! For S stands for Sermons: If you hear one sermon every Sunday that makes fifty-two sermons a year; so at the end of each year you ought to be fifty-two times better than you were at the beginning! But are you? A sermon is to the soul what a sail is to a ship: it helps you to get strength to steer to the proper port. Preserve the sermons you hear and feed on them!"

"C stands for Chart, and there is no safer chart to keep you from drifting than the Bible. Store all of it that you can in your memories. Preserve it on the walls of your heart, for the Bible is full of people exactly like yourself—Adam, who drifted away from a garden, because he was disobedient; David, who drifted away from building God's temple because he indulged himself wrongly; Peter, who drifted from loyalty to the Best Friend he had because he denied Christ; Ananias, who drifted away from generosity because he loved things more than God. You will read warnings about your own career on a dozen different pages of this wonderful chart—so study it carefully. Preserve it!"

"H stands for Hymns, which—next to the Bible—keep people from drifting away from God. Learn one hymn by heart every week; hum it as you work; begin every day with it until it lifts your thoughts to higher things.

"O stands for Others, and the whole secret of not drifting is to keep somebody else headed in the right direction. Make that little word Others the motto of your whole life. Don't spell Life with an I, I, I, or with an If, If, If; spell it—Others! Then the next O is Opportunity. People say opportunity knocks but once; so preserve it! For each new opportunity is like the rung of a ladder: to lead you up and up.

"L is for Leadership, if you are going to keep your eye on the ball, keep it on leadership. Everybody is a leader to somebody! It is a good plan to remember that the simplest daily action influences some one else for good or bad. We are all born leaders whether we know it or not, and every deed we do is preserved in some one's memory as a little product of ourselves—So be the kind of a 'you' you want others to follow.

"It is these six important things which you may learn to preserve in Sunday school. Stored up in youth against old age, preserved in time of plenty for time of want, saved up against the soul's rainy day. So come to Sunday school every week, and make this the best year of your whole life."

6. Closing Address. This will doubtless be given by the pastor who may care to use as a text Hebrews 2:1—"Lest happily we drift away," summing up these echoes from summer activities to show how drifting may be avoided:

- (1) Paddle your own canoe.
- (2) Dig!
- (3) Keep your eye on the ball.
- (4) Go forward.
- (5) Preserve the best.

OUR ISLAND NEIGHBORS

Prov. 8: 1-11.

CONQUEST MEETING

I. Our Island Neighbors

About 1,000 miles south of New York lies our largest island neighbor, Cuba. Less than 150 miles of ocean separate her from the southern coast of Florida. Four or five hundred miles eastward lies Porto Rico. Both Cuba and Porto Rico owe their present prosperity to the United States.

Prior to the Spanish-American war, Havana was periodically scourged by yellow fever, and was considered one of the most unwholesome cities in the world. The masses of the people in both islands were oppressed economically and socially by their Spanish rulers, and intellectually and religiously by the Roman Catholic Church. American doctors and soldiers introduced sanitation that completely wiped out the yellow fever; American government introduced a "square deal," resulting in better economic and social conditions; and American schoolteachers and missionaries brought education and the gospel to all who would take them.

Porto Rico still remains a territorial possession of the United States. Cuba has been granted independence, though Uncle Sam has, upon occasion, been obliged to exercise friendly authority to keep the wheels of government in steady motion.

II. Educating Baptist Leaders

The first Baptist church in Cuba was organized in 1886, by Alberto Diaz, a Cuban who found Christ in New York. It was not until the American flag waved over Havana, in 1898, that Northern Baptists began to send missionaries to the island, though the Southern Baptists had already a flourishing work there. After twenty years of intensive work the Baptist cause was considered sufficiently strong to be left in the hands of the Cubans, and the Northern Baptist missionaries were withdrawn, with the exception of those connected with Los Colegios Internacionales.

This school was founded as a secondary school at El Cristo early in the history of the mission. It has since advanced to the grade of a junior college. In this school have been trained most of the Cuban Baptist pastors, and it is largely due to the influence of this institution that we have today the strongest body of pastors of any mission on the island. Because these pastors have shown themselves dependable and able to develop the churches entrusted to them, the society no longer needs to employ district missionaries.

Los Colegios Internacionales is conceded to be the best school in all Cuba. It has a fine campus and modern buildings. They are, however, inadequate to meet the growing demands of the school, which now has an enrollment of 300 students in the academic, normal, and theological departments.

The public-school system of Cuba is still insufficient and somewhat inefficient. Consequently it is necessary to maintain primary schools in connection with town churches as feeders of the college. Over these schools there is an American missionary teacher furnished by the women's society, but many of them are conducted by our Cuban pastors. Some of these schools are largely self-supporting, the income from the pupils being sufficient to pay the teachers' salaries and incidental expenses.

III. Some Urgent Needs

The dark side of the picture of Baptist work in Cuba is our lack of equipment. One teacher says: "We have two of our schoolrooms in the church, and the other in the parsonage. It is not very pleasant for either the pastor or myself to see the church always out of order because it is being used as a schoolroom. Then we can't make a schoolroom as we should like to have it in the auditorium of the church. The room where we have our primary department is dark and poorly ventilated. We feel that an American school should make better provision for its pupils."

People are asking us to take their children to educate, both in the day-schools in the different towns and in the secondary school at El Cristo. Many are being turned away for lack of room. If we continue to turn away large numbers of applicants it will mean that the Catholic church will educate them after their own fashion. President Robert Routledge, of El Cristo, affirms: "The spending of $400,000 today in Cuba for educational work would more than double the efficiency of this Latin-American mission."

IV. Where Summer Smiles the Year Around

The little, almost rectangular island of Porto Rico enjoys perpetual summer, with an average temperature of 76 degrees. Its fertile valleys produce large quantities of sugar, coffee, oranges, pineapples, coconuts, grapefruits, and the inevitable tobacco. Nevertheless, because of the density of population, the ignorance of the people, and the oppressiveness of the Spanish government, the mass of Porto Ricans have always lived in poverty. The warm climate and the generous bounty of nature have made it easy to sustain life, and the dwellers in little palm-leaf shacks aspired to no more.

Porto Rico means "rich port." The name was given by Ponce de Leon, the first Spanish governor, to the settlement he established on the present site of San Juan, in 1509. The Spanish conquerors of the island soon enslaved and almost exterminated the natives by their cruel treatment. To provide laborers in their place African slaves were imported in 1531, and thereafter from time to time, until 1873, when slavery was abolished. Of the 1,000,000 inhabitants, approximately one-half have Indian or Negro blood.

V. An Island Without Religion

Along with the Spanish conquerors came the Spanish priests, who controlled Porto Rico for 400 years. Romanism had full power to show what it could do, not only for the dominant white settlers, but for the depressed races. The Inquisition flourished in Porto Rico. Until 1815, none but Catholics were permitted to live on the island. Even after that date, until the time of the American occupation, Protestants were at a great disadvantage.

The priests kept the fee for the marriage ceremony so high that only one sixth of the entire population could afford to be legally married. When the new United States Government legalized marriages performed by civil magistrates and Protestant ministers, the missionaries were often called upon to marry couples who had grown families.

When the territory was acquired by the United States only one public school was in existence. Abject poverty and dense ignorance prevailed.

Gradually even the forms of Catholicism fell into decay. The Catholic chaplain of the American Army in Porto Rico wrote to a Catholic journal: "Porto Rico is a Catholic country without religion; that is to say, there is little practical Catholicism here, and no pretended religion whatsoever. The clergy do not seem to have any firm hold upon the people, nor do they have any lively sympathy with Porto Rico or the Porto Ricans. Religion is dead on the island."

VI. A Church in Every Town

In less than four months after Porto Rico had become an American possession the Baptists had sent their representative there to make the island not only American, but Christian. In quick succession stations were opened at San Juan on the north coast, at Rio Piedras, a few miles inland, and at Ponce on the south coast. Thus Baptist work had its beginning opposite ends of the great military road which traverses the island.

Today, less than twenty-five years after the beginning of missionary work in Porto Rico, there is not a town without a Protestant church. The situation is strengthened by the fact that there is no confusion arising from two denominations working in the same town. In several large centers more than one denomination is at work.—Adapted from Service.

San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U. Notes

By BARON A. McLEAN

The San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U. Executive has made 70 visits and traveled in the neighborhood of 2,000 miles since its inception in office April 21, 1922. Last year we had but 26 at the Summer Assembly at Asilomar. This year an actual check-up on our visitation shows definite prospects of over 100.

A machine load of valley young people made the 600 mile trip to the University of Redlands and return on May 13, at the occasion of High School Day. A full and interesting program brought over 800 high school seniors and others to Redlands (mostly from Southern California). As a result of the trip, six young people from Clovis will attend our University at Redlands next year.

May 21 the Clovis B. Y. P. U. made the trip to Friant where the construction camps of the new Minarets and Western Ry. are located with a view to holding services for these men. We wound the day up with an inspiring service on a sandy nook beside the San Joaquin River.

May 28 over 50 young people from Clovis and Fresno First Baptist Churches visited the Mono Indian Mission at Table Mountain. The Sunday School, or morning service, was enjoyed by about 20 young people from Fresno. Following a picnic lunch, a regular B. Y. P. U. service was held at 2 o'clock conducted by the president of the S. J. V., Baron McLean. The meeting using as its theme "Better Friendships" was a fine illustration to our Indian friends of a young people's meeting. Practically all of the young people present participated in prayer or a discussion of the theme. Greetings were heard from the Clovis president, Perry Jackson, the Fresno president, DeArnol McLean, and many others as well as from Miss Swenson, the missionary. Last of all Captain Wilson of the Table Mountain Indian Band sang a song which he had composed entirely by himself, "I Know I Love Jesus." We hiked to near-by "Pin-Cushion Peak" and returned home the 25 miles in time for our own B. Y. P. U's.

On June 4, the Clovis B. Y. P. U. paid the Fresno First society a visit, and on June 11, the Fresno folks journeyed the 12 miles to return the call. This inter-society visitation is a fine thing for fellowship, especially during the summer.

June 25, Dr. Lackey of Hartford, Conn., visited the Fresno First Church at the invitation of the pulpit committee. After the morning service all the departments of the church work were presented as well as boosts for the Valley and Fresno and we heard from him. Dr. Lackey would be a valuable asset to our San Joaquin Valley Baptist Young People's work, and we are anxiously awaiting the decision of the church and of Dr. Lackey.

June 23, "A Trip to Asilomar" was staged at Fresno with the Clovis, Fresno Memorial, and Fresno First YP and Hi Schl B. Y. P. U's co-operating. The station, the weary train-ride, "dinner" at the Del Monte Hotel, trips to various resorts and points of interest about Monterey, a social time at the "Social-Hall at Asilomar," and a real banquet in the "Dining Hall at Asilomar" made up the affair. About 90 enjoyed the program and toasts.

July 2, the young people had charge of the morning service at Clovis, and put on a clever Asilomar program. A debate, "Resolved that Asilomar is no place for our young people" involved Misses Jackson and Stickle in an interesting word duel. Two of the judges voted for their daughters and the third decided for Asilomar in spite of the damaging charges of getting the church out of a rut, straining their voices at the banquet, being enchanted by the romantic Monterey Bay and the silvery moonlight. Baron McLean, Valley President spoke, and the whole affair will wind up when a good delegation gets to Asilomar.

A check for $50 from the women of Fresno First Church is warming the hearts of the young people in their effort to raise $150 for their delegation.

At our picnic at Mooney's Grove, June 30, about 250 young people witnessed some close and exciting tugs-of-war. Dinuba won from Oroquieta, Visalia won from Kingsbury, then Dinuba won from Visalia. A baseball game in the afternoon, basket lunches by bunches, a feasted meat, songs, yells, and a few short speeches constituted this get-together.

Convention Impressions

This convention has brought me close to Christ. It has given me a desire to take to the young people of other lands the joy of the Christian life.—Velda Barker.

This convention has been a wonderful mountain top experience for me. I feel that my Saviour is much closer than He was before.—Warren G. McAvoy.

The convention has been a blessing to me; thank God for it.—Rev. J. G. Caton.

Words can't express the inspiration and help the convention has been to me.—Virginia Bowman.

I have never been to a national convention before, but I have sincerely enjoyed it. It has given me an inspiration and a desire to go forward more earnestly for Christ.—Bessie M. Spurl.

The convention has meant far more than one perfect sentence in the English language can convey.—George G. Blair.

A wonderful inspiration to go "Forward with Christ" every day.—Gertrude Blomquist.

Being my first convention I thank God for that spiritual inspiration received and for the companionship of such a large band of Christian young people.—Ellen T. Benson.

I have been strengthened as never before to carry on any work I may have to do in a real Christ-like spirit.—Ruth B. Baker.

Words cannot express the feeling I have received from the convention.—J. D. Williams.

It has made night duty a pleasure for me which would otherwise have been a drudgery.—Alice Jorgenson, "Nurse."

A great help to all who seek light.—J. A. Wise.

Greatest sight I have ever seen.—J. A. Rundquist.

My first convention—a five days' series of happiness and blessings.—B. C. Martin.

I was impressed by the fact that the young people seemed to feel the presence of the spirit of God. The sight of over 400 taking a stand for life service in the wonderful meeting Sunday afternoon gave me a thrill I never before experienced.—H. I. McKeever.

Indiana

Dear Dr. White:

"We reached Evansville last night at 8:30. We spent a couple hours at the Dells and about half a day in Chicago. We sure enjoyed the drive.

"I would like to have a list of the Indiana delegates that went forward Sunday afternoon so we can get in touch with them too.

"One of the young men, Douglas Manahan, that was with me was one of the ones that I had the joy of helping to find Jesus during the past year. It certainly did my heart good to see him take his stand Sunday afternoon. He is president of one of our unions and a real leader among the young people.

"I have another young man in the early twenties that was a gambler that came to Jesus during the past year that is doing a wonderful work. He wants to go into the ministry as he feels God has called him. I would like to have you write him a personal letter and encourage him in it. He told me of a street meeting he held a few weeks ago and one soul came to Jesus and another lifted hand for prayer. He sure is showing evidence. God laid him on my heart some three or four years ago and I started talking to him about his soul. Every time I met him the Spirit seemed to lead me to say something. He now says, 'Ford, I used to hate to see you coming down the street.' But now he is praising God today for it. When he came into the B. Y. P. U. he could scarcely talk at all. That was nearly a year ago and now through the training he has received there he can get up and talk splendidly, and as stated go out and hold street meetings, etc.

"Praise God for our B. Y. U. U's. I wanted to bring him to St. Paul but I could only carry two in my roadster so brought the others which I felt needed the great convention more than he in order to get them more established in the work.

"We had a great time and I am sure the power of the convention will be felt much from those who went."

Religious Education

The Better Baptist Church School Campaign

BY MILTON M. MCGORRILL

"Go hang yourself, brave Crillon, we fought atand you weren't there," said a French officer to one of his subordinate officers. No such words ought to be said to any Sunday school after the Better Baptist Church School Campaign is over. For a great battle is on to improve the Baptist schools. They are making an effort to claim and reclaim children, youth, and adults for the Master. Even a school in another denomination has registered in order to obtain the inspiration and information of this effort for religious education.

The state directors of religious education have written in their enthusiasm for the project:

"I was much impressed with the plans at our meeting in Indianapolis, but even more so now that I have looked them over."

"I have received the copy of 'The Big Cooperative Plan of Study and Work for Baptist Church Schools.' I like it very much."

"I shall do everything in my power to push the program along."

"The proposed advance looks good."

Since the campaign has started registrations from Washington city to Washington state have come in, thus making the diagonal of our Northern Baptists. The plan in this effort is to have each school enroll with the American Baptist Publication Society, through the state or city director of religious education. For the registration fee of $1, the school is supplied with a booklet giving the general plans for the Sunday School Week, a guide book on "Sunday School Objectives," and leaflet helps. These assist the schools in making definite plans for their own improvement.

The first item in this campaign is the big Baptist Church School Week, which is to be the generating influence in study, prayer, inspiration and effort for the whole year. Four things are suggested for this week:

A special meeting of the workers' conference.

A church prayer meeting devoted to the Sunday school.

A booster banquet.

The biggest and best rally day ever held.

The following are recommended to the workers' conference of the Sunday school:

(1) Appoint committees to make outline surveys of the church school situation some time previous to the meeting of the conference. Reports on the following subjects should be made—organization, enrollment, equipment, lesson courses, evangelism, working forces, and summer plans, and objectives. (Definite questions on these topics are supplied in the booklet, "The Big Baptist Church School Week".)

(2) Consider the reports in the light of these questions:

What is the present situation in our school?

What can now be done to better our work?

What is the ideal towards which our study and efforts should tend?

(3) Adopt definite objectives for the year and plan the succeeding workers' conferences to consider each objective in turn.

(Note: A considerable elaboration of the plans will be found in the material supplied on registration.)

International Sunday School Lesson for September 24

REVIEW: THE EXILE AND THE RESTORATION

Golden Text: Psalm 126:3

Lesson 1. Ezekiel, the Watchman of Israel—Ezekiel 2:1-3:27. Ezekiel receives his call and commission and assumes his grave responsibility.

Lesson 2. Daniel Interpreting Nebuchadnezzar's Dream—Daniel 2. Daniel escapes death by interpreting the king's dream and the king rewards him by making him governor of the province of Babylon and chief of the wise men.

Lesson 3. The Handwriting on the Wall—Daniel 5:1-31. Temperance lesson. Belshazzar's feast. Daniel tells the king that the handwriting on the wall is a warning to him. Belshazzar is slain and Daniel is promoted.

Lesson 4. Daniel and the Lions—Daniel 6:1-28. Through the craft of Daniel's enemies he is cast into the den of lions, but is unharmed, his God is honored and his enemies destroyed.

Lesson 5. The First Return from Exile—Jeremiah 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-11. Ezra leads the Babylonian captives back to Jerusalem, returning the vessels of the house of Jehovah which Nebuchadnezzar had taken from Jerusalem.

Lesson 6. The Temple Rebuilt and Dedicated—Ezra 3:1-6:22. The cornerstone of the temple was laid in the spring following the return, but enemies delayed the rebuilding for many years. At last it was finished and dedicated with great joy.

Lesson 7. Esther Saves Her People—Book of Esther. The sacrificial attitude and the bravery of Esther is treated.

Lesson 8. The Second Return from Exile—Ezra 7:1-8:36. This return was made by a large company, many of them descendants of those who had not chosen to join the first return. Refusing earthly escort, in spite of the rich gifts carried, the caravan arrived safely in Jerusalem under the leadership of Ezra.

Lesson 9. Nehemiah's Prayer—Nehemiah 1:1-11. Nehemiah receives gloomy tidings from Jerusalem and makes his prayer—a confession and a reminder of God's promises. His prayer is answered and he is sent to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem.

Lesson 10—Nehemiah Rebuilds the Walls of Jerusalem—Nehemiah 3:1-7:4. In spite of ridicule, trouble from within the ranks and without, Nehemiah persisted in the work in which he believed and the walls were rebuilt.

Lesson 11. Teaching the Law of God—Nehemiah 8:1-18. Upon the first day of the seventh month were celebrated the Feast of Trumpets, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of the Tabernacles. Ezra, the priest and scribe, read the law.

Lesson 12. The Message of Malachi—Malachi 3:1-4:3. A lesson on tithing and stewardship.

By treating briefly but emphatically the crucial point in each lesson, the plan of God in the leading of his people is clearly brought out. This is the purpose of the review work—that the history of the people may be viewed as a whole, rather than in the fragmentary fashion which is necessary with the weekly lesson. The review lesson should be treated as an opportunity for binding together all of these fragments, giving us the story of "The Exile and the Restoration."

With this lesson ends the study of the Old Testament for awhile. How many years are passed by in silence between the end of the Old Testament and the beginning of the New? How do each of the four Gospel recorders introduce the life of Christ?

Church Vacation Schools

The following are extracts from some of the very interesting reports of vacation schools which are coming in daily to the Church Vacation School Division at Headquarters in Philadelphia:

First Baptist Church of Bethlehem, Pa., Rev. Fred R. McArthur, Pastor.

"One of the best features of a Church Vacation School is the fact that it develops workers for the church."

First Baptist Church of Norwalk, Ohio, Rev. Henry E. Woodard, Pastor:

"Every boy and girl voted 'Yes' for similar school next year. No boy or girl during entire school brought before city council because of disorder. Not the least trouble with deportment."

First Baptist Church of Collingswood, N. J., Rev. W. S. Booth, Pastor:

"We are increasingly being impressed with the value of the D. V. B. S. To

Our Own Folks

Baptists and the Northfield Conferences

Baptists had a prominent part in making the religious conferences at Northfield a success this summer. In enrolment they were second only to the Congregationalists and on the speaker's platform they presented two of the dominating figures of the general conference of Christian workers, Rev. Dr. Frederic Chambers Spurr of London, Eng., and Rev. Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin of New York City. Other Baptists were active in the speaking and organization work connected with the other five conferences of the Northfield season. Increased numbers were present at some of the gatherings and in the platform address, devotional services and in other ways it was evident that the work begun by Dwight L. Moody in this little New England village, when he started the conferences just eighty years ago, is still growing and enlarging, and that the heritage of the Northfield spirit which he left is something very real and vital.

Perhaps more than it has been heard in other years came the note voiced this year by many of the speakers at Northfield of desire for a united front by the entire Christian church. Very little was said along denominational lines, although it is not to be expected that much would be said in an interdenominational gathering. Speakers have a way of making their preferences known, however, by mental reservations which sometimes are almost as loud as if they had been spoken. But this year there seemed to be fewer of such reservations and there certainly were pointed, direct comments at the handicaps given the church of Christ by the jealousies and friction of internal strife. The example of China's Christians in refusing to be parties to the denominationalism of Europe and America was brought forcibly before two of the conferences by Robert E. Speer and Rev. Abram E. Cory of New York. The Chinese even dare to hope, the latter said, that the western Christian peoples will ultimately be led to unity through the one church of Christ now being established in China. It would indeed be a happy outcome of missionary endeavor if its success should be the means of making more vital and powerful the work for Christ's kingdom in the countries from which the missionaries are sent.

Dr. Spurr

Dr. Spurr, of London, who proved the most talented and forceful speaker at Northfield in recent years, is to be counted among those preaching and working for church unity. He succeeded Rev. F. B. Meyer at the Regent's Park Baptist Church and the trend of his sympathies in the matters of denominationalism may be somewhat gauged by the fact that he is present vice-president of the National Free Church Council of England. Following fourteen years service with Dr. Meyers in evangelistic work throughout the United Kingdom, Dr. Spurr in 1909 became pastor of the Collins Street Baptist Church, Melbourne, Australia. His work in that pastorate was remarkable; his Sunday evening audiences were so large that his church had to hire an auditorium to accommodate from 2500 to 3000 people who were attracted by his message. Dr. Spurr has an invaluable asset in his sunny, cheerful personality which fairly radiates good will. In his preaching, one is struck by his broad-mindedness and his scholarly treatment of his subject. He is a man who, feeling the confidence of knowledge and faith, yet realizes that human beings are too frail and mortal to be either cock-sure or boastful. He has a wealth of spiritual experience from which he freely draws and a seemingly inexhaustible flow of apt illustrations for each trenchant point he makes. Those who have the Northfield habit hope to find him there next summer and many more summers.

Dr. Woelfkin Gives Addresses

Dr. Spurr in his mental habits is something of the same type as Dr. Woelfkin, whose pastorate is the big Park Avenue Baptist Church, formerly the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, gives him a prestige to which he adequately lives up. Dr. Woelfkin made a series of three addresses in the opening week of the general conference upon "The Law of Power in the Christian Church," "The Law of Prayer" and "The Law of Immortality." Under the latter topic, he expressed a belief in a heaven in which man could work out ambitions and desires suppressed on this earth by the short period of life and the necessity of making some one or two things his life work. Heaven will be the fulfillment of much that is denied on this earth, he believes. Dr. Woelfkin is one of Northfield's old favorites.

So, too, is Rev. J. D. Jones of Bourne-mouth, Eng., often referred to as the leading Congregationalist of his country. Certainly it is a mark of distinction to have held his important post for twenty-four years and to be able to attract 400 to 500 persons to a service at 7:30 a. m. every Tuesday morning. Dr. Jones has a deep spiritual message of particular appeal to those who are seeking comfort from the Heavenly Father. He has a preference for pure Biblical preaching as opposed to the topical sermons and gave a series of six lectures on the significance of the Twenty-third Psalm without seeming to exhaust the possibilities of his text.

Another old Northfield favorite present for a few days was the Rev. Dr. J. Stuart Holden, vicar of St. Paul's, Portman, London.

New forces from abroad in addition to Dr. Spurr at the General Conference, were Rev. J. W. G. Ward, successor to Dr. G. Campbell Morgan at New Court Congregational Church, Tollington Park, London, a man gifted with unusual powers of eloquence; Rev. W. B. MacLeod of Edinburgh, pastor of the McCandlish church and a friend of Rev. Dr. Hugh Black; Rev. Charles W. Abel, a worker for more than thirty years under the London Missionary Society at Kwato and Papua, New Guinea; and Professor Albert T. Clay, curator of the Babylonian collection of the Department of Archaeology at Yale University, who furnished corroborative evidence from his own discoveries of the historical accuracy of stories in the Old Testament and confirmation of the actual existence of many of the Old Testament characters. Devotional services were conducted by Homer Hammontrée of Grand Rapids, Mich. Mr. Hammontrée also sang solos with marked effectiveness frequently. The singing of the Lotus Male Quartette of Boston was also a pleasing feature of the conference.

The Conference season at Northfield closed on August 21 when the Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Institute ended. Bible lessons and lectures were given later at the Hotel Northfield, another of the successful Moody enterprises, by Rev. J. East Harrison of Mt. Hermon.

Mount Hermon and Northfield Seminary, the Moody schools for Christian boys and girls of character and promise, will reopen for the fall terms on September 12 with large enrolments.

Membership Attendance Campaign

The long-time members of the Twenty-third Avenue Baptist Church at Oakland, Calif., say that the minister, Rev. John Newton Garst, and a strong committee have undertaken the biggest program in the history of the church. Plans have been under way for many months and are now taking definite shape for a two months' intensive membership attendance campaign during October and November. At the last annual meeting the church adopted for the year the new slogan, "Every member in attendance," with the text, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go up unto the house of the Lord."

Dr. Garst and his family took their vacation resting and visiting friends in Southern California. And now with renewed energy and characteristic enthusiasm he is throwing all his powers into the regular work of the church and the new attendance campaign. The actual attack is being preceded by some careful educational work, and the campaign throughout is educational as well as inspirational. The whole subject is being treated from every conceivable angle by the minister and the following committee: T. S. Watson, Anna Stewart, Dane Bryan, Mrs. H. D. Jackson, Natalie Frank, F. M. Davidson, Mrs. John Rymer, M. S. Lusk, Mrs. Nannie Montgomery, T. B. Holmes, Mrs. M. S. Lusk, L. R. Case, Mrs. S. C. Roberts, H. D. Jackson, Mrs. F. M. Davidson, J. H. Wilcox, Mrs. D. Moir, James Levell.

The object of the campaign is to secure the intelligent and enthusiastic attendance of every member of the church at as many as possible of all the meetings of the church and its auxiliaries, by bringing each member to an intelligent understanding of the nature of these activities, and the member's relation to them, and to the cause of Christianity. Pastoral letters, announcements and special advertisements will precede the eight Sundays, which will be known as, "Home-coming Day," "Sunday-school Day," "Boys' and Girls' Day," "B. Y. P. U. Day," "Church Day," "Men's Day," "Women's Day," "Family Day." On each of these Sunday mornings the pastor will preach an appropriate sermon. The evening service will be a special unique program in charge of the representatives of that department of the church activities. Also the preceding mid-week prayer meeting will be in charge of representatives of that group and upon that related topic. Each week appropriate story-articles will be sent to the newspapers and appropriate leaflets given out or mailed to all members. Some of the leaflet messages are entitled: "I-Hope-2-C-U There Next Sunday," "Reasons For NOT Going to Church," "Reasons FOR Going to Church," "Roosevelt's Reasons," "Don'ts For Stay-at-Homes," "Why I Go on Rainy Sundays," "One Reason Why Young Men and Young Women Should Go," "What a Rich Man and a Baseball Fan Say," "What the Church Contributes," "How Far Can You Swim?" "What Does My Minister Do?" "Dangerous Delays For Men."

Careful records of attendance will be kept and personal visits, letters, and phone calls will be used to help secure attendance. The campaign will be a real rallying for all the activities of the church. All are represented on the committee and all will put their best foot forward, and pray and boost, mutually striving to magnify Christ and honor and rally to his church. There will be by-products, such as a greater respect of, and a more wholesome influence in, the community.

Fannie Snow Haggard

An Appreciation by W. E. WITTER

While a true and beautiful tribute was recently given her by her bereaved husband, I cannot be satisfied, as one who, outside her immediate family circle, probably knew her best, should I not add my personal appreciation of Fannie Snow Haggard, whose visible earth life was discontinued through the will of God some few months ago at Wolfsboro, N. H.

Unselfishness and faithfulness to every known duty were as characteristic of this noble woman as breathing. As a girl in her home, in school and church she could always be depended upon to shirk no task or fail to meet eagerly and joyfully every recognized opportunity for serving others. She thus entered upon the duties and opportunities of wifehood, motherhood, and of partnership with her husband in pastoral service in a spirit of utter devotion to the responsibilities involved. To the end of life here below she gave her all to wise and proportioned ministries of love under the immediate direction of her Lord, to do the will of whom was her delight.

When the startling question came to her husband and herself as to willingness to leave a delightful pastorate in Red Oak, Iowa, to go to the ends of the earth to proclaim the good news to nude and warlike savages, it was she who said, as she listened to the Master's voice, so familiar to her, the voice which it had been so long her habit to unhesitatingly obey, "Papa, why are not we there?" "Mamma, would you go?" was the agonized reply of her husband. To which came the prompt, Spirit-emboldened reply, "Papa, I would not have asked you if I were not willing to go." Then there followed that Gethsemane travail of spirit from which that young pastor arose to his feet in the ecstasy of a new birth, to announce himself as now, for the first time in his life, willing to take Christ as the full Master of his life for any service anywhere, even if it took him to the ends of the earth and to ministries for the most obscure and abject of hell's purchased victims. We all know how they went, but few know what pressure was brought upon the wife by parents and friends galore who plead with her because of her health, not to go. Few know that they were advised from the rooms in Boston not to go because of her first certificate of health which was considered unsatisfactory; few know that it was not until six physicians had been consulted that a satisfactory certificate was secured; and few know that on the passage to India all the troubles that had caused her friends such great anxiety left her, and that during that passage to Assam she gained twenty-four pounds in flesh and could write to her still anxious friends in America, "I never was so well in my life, and here in the Naga Hills I am keeping boarders, our fellow missionaries, the Perrines and Mr. Clark, and can you believe it, I love these wild Naga women just as much as I loved our parishioners in Red Oak and in Dubuque, Ia."

Six years of strenuous service in Assam. Then home with a story to tell that turned many hearts to the far-away fields. Then departing again gladly to resume their work in Assam, leaving their eldest boy ill in bed the night of their leaving Chicago. Then the call to turn back for secretarial service in America, cabled to them to London. Then the years of untiring service in the homeland, entertaining in their home scores of missionaries about to sail for the different fields, very many of them for the first time, and the giving of motherly advice, and following them with her prayers. Then a year in Russia, and again more years in America, always alert in church and missionary zeal; never a crank, just a whole-hearted, sensible and unusually devoted wife, mother, daughter, sister, friend, hoping that each of her three children might find God's place for them in the great world of service at home or abroad, and if it might be his will, one, at least, might spend his or her life in ministry to those who, else, in some distant land might remain ignorant of the Way, the Truth and the Life.

Surely the epitaph of this saintly servant of the King might well be, "She hath done what she could."

During the summer vacation period, in the absence of the pastors, a number of our churches had the opportunity of hearing with pleasure and profit some men of note from other fields. Among these might be mentioned Dr. T. Claget Skinner, of Columbia, S. C., who was greeted by large audiences at Calvary, Aug. 20. This is not the first time that Dr. Skinner has occupied that pulpit. He took occasion to pay a glowing tribute to the late pastor, Dr. Samuel Green, whom he had known intimately for many years.

Dr. John J. Hunt was an acceptable supply at the Immanuel Church, August 20, in the absence of Dr. Johnson, the pastor. The same day the congregation of Second Church had the pleasure of listening, both morning and evening, to Rev. John H. Brinsted, pastor of Calvary Church, Petersburg, Va. Capt. G. T. Myers, of the Volunteers of America, gave an interesting address at the morning service at Pittsburgh Church. In the evening The United Presbyterian Church united with the Pittsburgh people in a fine service. Dr. Weston Brunner, of Raleigh, N. C., closed his vacation services with Fifth Church, of which Dr. John E. Briggs is pastor. Dr. Brunner's services have been greatly appreciated and he has made a large place for himself in the hearts of the people.

Rev. H. I. Stewart, of Richmond, Va., was an acceptable supply at Grace Church recently. Rev. J. C. Pierce, of Trenton, N. J., supplied for Dr. J. J. Muir at Temple Church, Aug. 20. The congregations at Metropolitan Church will not soon forget the inspiring messages brought by Dr. Henry W. Tiffany, of Louisville, Ky., Aug. 20. In the morning Dr. Tiffany chose for his subject "The Gospel of God" and in the evening "A Light in a Dark Place." At the Takoma Park Church, Maj. Karl F. Baldwin, of the United States army, spoke at the morning service on Aug. 20 on "Christianity and the Religions of Japan." He is well qualified to speak on this subject as he spent a number of years in Japan.

In the absence of Dr. Tupper, who has been in Armenia for some weeks at the request of the government, Rev. Franklin I. Winter supplied the pulpit of the First Church during August. Mr. Winter is a member of First Church. Before the war he was a pastor in Michigan. During the war he was chaplain of the machine gun battalions in the Thirty-fifth Division. At present he is in the employ of the government in the rehabilitation of the ex-service men in Washington.

The daily vacation school of the Bethany Church closed a successful session Friday evening, Aug. 18. Miss Elizabeth Baylor had charge of the school. About sixty children were enrolled. It was voted to conduct a similar school next summer. This is the only Baptist church in the city that has held such a school so far as I can learn.

With English Baptists

By W. T. WHITLEY

The executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance has met and advanced the arrangements for next year's week in Stockholm, from July 21. As there were many leading Americans present, it is needless to describe afresh what they will have described already. One gap was felt in that the president of the alliance, Dr. MacArthur, was not present at the meeting. He is perhaps reserving himself for Stockholm itself. As it was, the gathering was fairly international, with Australian, Dutch, German and Swede though some Czecho-Slovakians were hindered by passport difficulties.

The Baptist Union has suffered a unique loss in the loss of its president. It chooses him a year in advance, and he serves an apprenticeship as vice-president, then enters on his office with a strenuous four days of public assembly. But he is expected to devote all his spare time, and a great deal of time taken from his regular work, to general campaigning throughout the country; though the exact form of his work is a compromise between the needs of the denomination that year, and his personal attitudes. Mr. John Chown has succumbed within four months of opening his work, and the interests of the annuity fund will suffer for the rest of the year, though doubtless the ex-president and the vice-president will endeavor to stop the most important gaps. Mr. Chown comes of a family known in Baptist circles for 270 years, though only the last three generations have commanded attention beyond their own country. Ministers, deacons, mayors have emerged; of one minister it is recounted that he earned his own living as a shoemaker, and walked eighteen miles every Sunday to preach to his flock, visiting them next day and walking back for five days at his bench. John Chown's father was a minister and made his mark in two cities, Bradford and London, and was called to the presidency of the union in the same place where the son heard of his election. John Chown himself was a man of business but gave far more attention to denominational affairs than any outside the inner circle. Not only in finance, but in the compilation of our current hymn book, in the promotion of chapel building, in mission affairs, his forceful character was felt. And he had the joy of seeing a son give himself to the ministry of the Word. There are many families which in generation after generation enrich the traditions of English Baptists.

Our associations have all held their meetings. They are on a different scale from yours, some of them having one or two hundred churches. They are accustomed not only to deal with local problems, but to pass judgment upon national questions of all kinds, though there is often a great deal of protest as compared with action. The outstanding general feature this year is that some of the largest associations have spoken very emphatically on the uselessness of the bishops expecting that Baptists will have anything to do with reunion on the lines of the Lambeth resolution. Some bishops have been surprised previously at the way they had misconceived the situation, imagining for example from the friendliness of a few Methodist leaders that Methodists as a whole were desirous of union, and being taken aback at the coolness of the conference. Many of them have been trying to gauge the general opinion of Baptists, both by local meetings and by appeals in popular assemblies. They have at last got very decisive public replies which indicate that Baptist thought moves on other lines; that while they are concerned about the qualification of officers, our concern is with the qualification for membership.

From another direction they are being educated on this point. Under a recent act of parliament, a church council has been constituted in each parish, and a corresponding body for each diocese. It was necessary to face the question: Who are eligible to vote for members; who are eligible to be members? In the end it was decided that the mere fact of having been christened, "received into Christ's holy church, and made a lively member of the same," did not qualify to take an active part in managing local affairs. Certain declarations have to be made, and an electoral roll is compiled on their basis. And thus it is being forced on the attention of Anglicans that there must be personal profession. While we English are reputed to be slow in the up-take, yet perhaps in another generation the Anglican may be led to see that he has come largely to the Baptist position, and that he had better adopt baptism as the act appropriate for a behavior to declare his adhesion.

A very serious problem confronting every denomination is the shortage of Christian workers. The Church of England cannot find sufficient recruits for her clergy, and will not provide the expense of training those who do offer. The results are already apparent in the overwork and the breakdown of those in office. To remedy this, plans are being discussed as to part-time clergy, the revival of their order of "deacons" as a real permanent class, or the large increase of licensed lay readers. Thus an admiral, an income-tax collector, a banker, the chairman of a country council, a director of education, a squire, are being called upon very frequently for Sunday service. Among Baptists, the lay preachers are receiving renewed attention, and next winter will see a careful scheme of study under correspondence tutors brought into use. It is being modified from a plan which has worked capitally to give preliminary training for young people looking forward to the mission field. Several hundred of these are grouped under tutors, and a summer school by the seaside has brought many of them together for intensive work. The head of this is a woman whose whole time and energy are given freely to such planning and superintendence.

A Baptist Rally

Plans are being worked out for a big rally of Baptists in Milwaukee during the first week in October. The idea is to have a simultaneous rally week for Baptists, with each church having its various rally affairs, and all of it heading up in a big gathering of the Baptists of the city at the Tabernacle Church on Friday evening, Oct. 6, when Dr. Benjamin Otto, of Chicago, will speak. This is something new for Milwaukee Baptists and the leaders are hopeful for a real advance in the autumn work by means of this method.

The Convention

The state convention will be held in Oshkosh, Oct. 9-12. The program is already completed and no doubt will be one of the best in recent years. The motto is "The Uplifted Christ." Entire sessions will be given to the consideration of the program of Baptists, local, state, national and world wide. Drs. Stillwell, Chalmers, Robbins, President Barbour, and Mrs. Eulette are to be the guests of the convention, and enough local talent is added to give the program local interest.

The Assembly

The assembly at Green Lake was a wonderful success. One of the features was the World Wide Guild house party with nearly 150 girls present besides the visitors and workers. The closing session of the assembly witnessed ten young people definitely deciding for Christian service, and thirty others consecrating themselves for Christian service in their business life. Plan are being considered for enlarging the work of the assembly.

Ripon College

Ripon College, at Ripon, is a Congregational school, and one that is well known. Wisconsin Baptists have no school except Wayland Academy. The Baptist church at Ripon is small and has been on the decline for several years, but the Baptist students have been increasing at Ripon. A plan of cooperation is being worked out which will ultimately give Ripon College the sympathetic and prayerful support of those Wisconsin Baptists who wish to send their children to one of the smaller schools rather than to the large university. The first step in the plan is that the college has agreed to make a place for a Baptist professor who shall do some teaching and also be the pastor of the Ripon Baptist Church, and care for the religious interests of the Baptist students. This cooperation of the local church, college and state convention has resulted in the call of Rev. Harris M. Barbour, recently pastor at Lake Geneva, as an instructor in the department of philosophy, and pastor of the Baptist Church at Ripon. Prof. Barbour is an experienced teacher and preacher, and will be able to set up the work at Ripon in such a way as to give our Baptist brethren the assurance that their children at Ripon will be cared for.

Some Notes

W. C. Osborn has been at Bangor less than a year, and yet the Sunday school has increased from fifty to 116, and the primary department from thirty-four to sixty-four. How did he do it? Listen, rural pastors! He did it by sending automobiles to neighboring hamlets and gathering up the children and taking them to Sunday school and church and taking them home again. This is something that many a rural and village pastor could do.

Rev. H. E. Bowe, has resigned his work at River Falls, and has entered school.

Rev. B. Owen, of North Scott, has entered the Kansas City Seminary, in order to complete his preparation for the work of the ministry.

Rev. F. F. Parsons, who for the past ten years has been pastor at West Allis, a suburb of Milwaukee, has resigned. He has had one of the most difficult fields in the state, but has led the church in a number of wonderful achievements. The field presents some splendid opportunities to the right man. For the present he is supplying the Baptist church at Barron.

Dr. Henry Clarke, of Racine, will supply the Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, during the month of September.

NEW YORK

ON SEPT. 3, REV. HENRY W. STEVENS began the seventh year's work as pastor of the First Church, Brockport, N. Y. Mr. Stevens was called to this pastorate soon after his graduation from Rochester

Theological Seminary. The six years of his pastorate have been marked by steady constructive progress. The church celebrated the anniversary with appropriate services. Rev. Alfred E. Isaac, executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Rochester and Monroe County preached the sermon which was followed by the communion service. Another feature was that those who had been received into membership during the present pastorate attended in a body. These make up over 40 per cent of the present membership. Much effort has been made in the reorganization of the church and the church school. Four hundred were enrolled in the church school last year. A large young men's class under the leadership of the pastor and a splendid class of normal-school and high-school girls under the leadership of Mrs. Elizabeth Garnham make a strong young people's department. The men's class with Prof. H. J. Lathrop as teacher has reached high water mark in attendance. The educational and social work of the church is greatly handicapped on account of inadequate facilities, but the church is looking forward to better days. Over $25,000 in cash and pledges has been received toward remodeling the plant. Although facing pressing local needs yet the church has loyally supported the New World Movement, and it has brought new spiritual life and vigor to the church. Four churches of the community supported a large and successful daily vacation Bible school this summer. The pastor was chairman of the committee which supervised the school and Mr. A. P. Draper, of Rochester Seminary, was the principal. During July important conferences of the workers were held to develop plans for the various departments of the church. As a result of these conferences a comprehensive and attractive autumn program has been outlined. During the pastor's vacation the pulpit was supplied for two Sundays by Rev. Randall A. Kenyon of Minneapolis.

MAINE

REV. LESTER R. NORTON OF VINELAND, N. J., formerly of Portland, has accepted a call to the First Baptist Church, Biddeford, to succeed Rev. Lester C. Holmes, now of Dover, N. H.

VERMONT

THE VERMONT CONVENTION conducts a conference and school of methods for all ministers and missionaries each year. This year the session was held at Vermont Academy, Saxtons River, Sept. 6-8. A good program had been arranged, covering the work of our denomination. As the expense of the men and women is paid there was full attendance.

VERMONT ACADEMY OPENS SEPT. 12. Already about 150 students are enrolled so it actually looks as if the dormitories would be taxed to their utmost capacity. The buildings have been renovated and put in first-class shape. An excellent corps of Christian teachers has been secured, so that, with Principal McFarland at the head, a good year is assured.

THE CHURCHES AT ADDISON, Rev. Bennett H. Curtis, pastor, and at Vergennes, Rev. B. H. Eddy, pastor, had a union service Sunday, Aug. 6, on the lake shore opposite Champlain lighthouse with more than 100 people present. After a helpful service in which both pastors took part, a baptismal service followed in which Pastor Curtis baptized three and Pastor Eddy four.

REV. W. W. WHITE, who has been pastor of the Baptist Church at Westford since June 1, 1913, and of the Federated Churches for the past three years, tendered his resignation and closed his work Sept. 1, in order to accept the unanimous call extended to him by the church at Enosburg Falls. On July 30 Pastor White baptized three candidates in the beautiful river a little way from the church, making thirty-three received into the church by baptism during Mr. White's pastorate. During the pastorate the indebtedness on the church building has been wiped out, a new roof put on the horse sheds, electric lights installed in the church and parsonage, and all bills paid.

THE BIBLE SCHOOL OF First Church, West Brattleboro, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary July 16 with appropriate exercises. A history of the school was read and remarks were made by Supt. John McKay and Pastor C. W. Bishop. Rev. C. R. Powers of Randolph, Mass., and the Rev. J. E. Mitchell of Lonsdale, R. I., former pastors, were present and delivered addresses. The West Brattleboro church and Sunday school are now in flourishing condition.

THE CHURCH AT SOUTH STRAFFORD, Rev. J. G. Robertson pastor, has recently been presented with a beautiful pulpit Bible by Rev. A. W. Jefferson, of Lawrence, Mass., in memory of his father and mother, Rev. B. F. Jefferson and wife. Mr. Jefferson was pastor of the church 1876-1881. The parsonage has also been painted, the congregations are unusually large and all enjoy the ministry of Mr. Robertson.

REV. JOHN A. MCCOLL, who has been pastor of the Baptist Church at Pownal and the Congregational Church at North Pownal, has closed his labors and gone to supply a church at New Bedford, Mass. Pastor McColl was an earnest and faithful worker and an unusually good preacher. Rev. E. Webber Church, one of the state workers is now laboring on those fields.

THE WILMINGTON CHURCH has secured a new pastor in the person of Rev. L. W. Champney of Fitchburg, Mass., and Mr. and Mrs. Champney are now nicely settled in the cozy parsonage.

REV. J. ALEX DONALD, formerly pastor at Readsboro, is now settled in the beautiful parsonage at Manchester Center where the Rev. Joseph S. Brown was for so many years the faithful and successful pastor. Pastor Brown has retired. The church and community gave him a farewell reception from the pastorate and a welcome to a permanent residency among them, presenting him with a purse of nearly $300. Mr. Brown has bought a home in Manchester and will do supply work wherever needed.

REV. W. R. KUSXMIK OF MILLERTOWN, N. Y., has accepted the pastorate of the Federated Church at Panton and is now located in the parsonage and hard at work on that field.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE "PRIZE CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL OF all New England" is said to be that of the First Church of Melrose under the leadership of Hervey Mason. At the opening of the season the assurance was given that at least one-half of the enrolment would be reserved for boys and girls not affiliated with First Church. The records indicate the following division: First Church, 63; Green Street Baptist, 2; Methodist, 36; Congregational, 21; Universalist, 9; St. Mary's, 9; Hillcrest, 4; Episcopal, 3; Swedish, 1; no church, 2. The enrolment this year was 141, with an average daily attendance of 122. The school closed with all bills paid. The total cost was $600. A feature consisted of the large amount of gifts prepared by the children to be sent to the Near East Relief. In addition to this contribution, $25 was contributed by the children for the same cause, and $25 for other vacation schools which are not self-supporting. An attempt will be made next year to accommodate an average attendance of 150.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

THE FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS, Ohio has the distinction of being the first church in the United States to own and operate its own broadcasting radio station. A close personal friend of Daniel F. Rittenhouse has presented him with a complete radio outfit. No vacation has been taken by Dr. Rittenhouse this summer. All regular services of the church have been maintained, and the congregations this summer have outstripped all previous records. The church is looking forward to a new day in the Bible school. The services of Mr. F. C. Shaffer as director of religious education have been secured.

ILLINOIS

REV. T. B. FRARY OF TERRE HAUTE, Ind. has accepted a call to the church at Marissa.

REVIVAL MEETINGS ARE BEING HELD AT Fidelity. The pastor, Rev. Frank Hetzel, is being assisted by Rev. Robert Leitz. Much interest is being shown in the meetings.

MT. GILEAD HAS CALLED REV. FRANK HETZEL for half time service. Mr. Hetzel is a student at Shurtleff College and is doing fine work at Fidelity.

REV. T. O. McMINN, missionary for the Southern Illinois Association has been seriously ill with pneumonia. His many friends will be pleased to know that he is gradually recovering.

A FAREWELL SERVICE WAS HELD AT THE First Church, Alton, for her two outgoing home missionaries. Miss Alice Twing, daughter of the pastor of the church, goes to Brooks House, Hammond, Ind., and Miss Ruth Sloman goes to the Social Service House, Dayton, Ohio. Both young women graduated from the Missionary Training School last June and enter service thoroughly prepared for their work.

A CHURCH WAS RECENTLY ORGANIZED AT Roxana. A corner lot has been purchased and the foundation for the new building is laid. Services will be held in the basement as soon as it is completed.

Northern Theological Seminary

The Northern Baptist Theological Seminary will begin its tenth year on Wednesday, September 15. The indications already point to a large enrolment. A few faculty changes have been announced. Dr. William M. Fouts, who was instructor in Hebrew the past year, has been advanced and will give instruction not only in Hebrew I and Hebrew II, but also in Old Testament Archeology and the English Pentateuch. Prof. Milton S. Lindberg who has been teaching in a Junior College at Hibbing, Minn., will give instruction in sociology, ethics, psychology and kindred subjects. Mr. Lindberg is a graduate of Columbia University and took his Master's degree at the University of Wisconsin. He is a son-in-law of Rev. E. R. McKinney, pastor of the First Church, Eau Claire, Wis. Rev. Joseph C. Dent, who was a former instructor in the seminary and has now become pastor of the Judson Church of Chicago, will offer a course in the devotional and prayer life. Rev. Wilford Noble, who is a graduate of the class of 1917 and who has been pastor of the Logan Square Church, will offer instruction in Bible History. President Taft, Dr.

Heinrichs, Dr. Carmen, Prof. Gunderson, Dr. Abbott, Dr. Ross, with Instructors Gage, Drummound and Patterson will continue service with the seminary. The Norwegian Baptist Theological Seminary which was temporarily affiliated with the seminary has made the relation permanent. Professor Gunderson will not only be Dean of the department as heretofore, but will, as during the past year, offer two courses in the Greek New Testament. Announcements will be made later about the lecture course and the work of the Chicago Baptist Institute which is an affiliated department.

WISCONSIN

INGRAM E. BILL OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Beloit, was responsible for a successful series of Sunday evening services conducted this summer under the auspices of the Federated Churches of which he is president. A great industrial plant, the leading local theater and the college co-operated with the churches. The services were held in the Fairies' big baseball park. The Fairbanks Morse Band rendered a Sunday evening concert and led the community sing. There was a brief address by a distinguished speaker followed by a six-reel religious picture. The expense of the services was about $100 a night, which was fully met by the offerings. The crowds completely filled the grandstand and bleachers.

REV. A. L. McMILLAN IS ENTERING HIS third year as pastor of First Church of Appleton. Each year the church has increased in membership and been strengthened financially. At the close of each year the treasuries have met all bills with a goodly sum left over. The pastor has just returned to his field from the Chicago University where he took special work in the divinity department during the summer quarter.

IOWA

REV. G. W. FOGG AND FAMILY AFTER A strenuous and progressive year of work at Corydon, spent their vacation touring through Colorado and the Rockies. The family found it quite a relief from Iowa heat to spend several weeks in the Colorado climate in the sight of perpetual snow and to camp part of the time up at the snow line.

KANSAS

RECENTLY THREE DEACONS were ordained at Chelsea Church, Kansas City, Kan. The council was composed of about a score of Kansas City preachers and deacons, Dr. J. F. Wells of Kansas City Seminary preached the sermon. The examination showed the candidates to be well qualified for their office. Chelsea is improving every day. Rev. R. O. Harris is pastor.

Rocky Mountain States

WYOMING

THIRTY-TWO YEARS AGO, L. Ella Adams, A.B. graduate of Stephens College, Columbia, Me., the "home medalist" of that year at Stephens, became the bride of Thomas S. Dulin. She returned with him to a pastorate in Colorado. Since then, they have labored together constantly in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming. They are now in the pastorate in Glenrock, Wyo. Since coming here eight months ago, twenty-two have been baptized. The church has sixty-six members. During the last quarter, this church with no rich members, raised for all purposes $1047. There is a good house of worship and much reason to be encouraged.

NEVADA

IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE CALL OF THE Hiram Lewis Baptist Church, of Loyalton, Calif., delegates from a number of the Churches of the Nevada-Sierra Baptist Convention met August 23 at 2:30 p. m. in their house of worship, to consider the advisability of setting apart to the gospel ministry, the pastor, J. S. Taylor. The examination was thorough and satisfactory in every respect. The Council voted unanimously to recommend to the church to proceed with the ordination. Rev. A. G. Sawin, of Loyalton was moderator and George L. Snyder, of Sparks, was clerk. The ordination services were held in the evening. Rev. A. G. Sawin, preached the sermon, Rev. John B. Speed, of Reno, gave the charge to the candidate, Rev. George L. Snyder, of Sparks, the charge to the church, and Rev. M. L. Hostetter the prayer of ordination.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

THE CHURCH AT LUSK, WYOMING, is a mission church and is in great need of hymnals and gospel song books to the number of fifty or more. Either new or used books will be gladly accepted. The church clerk is Mrs. Will Guyer.

CHAPEL CAR "EMMANUEL," in charge of Mrs. A. C. Blinzinger at Littleton, Colo., needs refurnishing, in the following items: 9 yards of scrim, one dozen pillow cases 22x36, one dozen small face towels, and one small set of dishes. This will supply the car for several years to come.

To Put on the Shelf

The fruit was never more abundant than this year, and sugar is reasonably priced, the shelves of the store room of the Baptist Missionary Training School are empty! Between now and winter it is the self-imposed obligation of Baptist women to stock these shelves.

Send to Miss Ellen J. Simpson, 2969 Vernon Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and she will ship to you a barrel of jars or jelly glasses. Distribute these among your church women. Then as they put up preserves or pickles, jelly or jam they will fill them. When these first-fruits are gathered and the barrels repacked send it back to Miss Simpson.

Surely whatever you send will be delicious, but it will happen that because you have shared, what you keep will have an added and a sweeter flavor.

The Day of Opportunity

PASTOR M. E. DODD, of Shreveport, La., one of the South's most fervent leaders in evangelism, proposes for the coming season a South-wide campaign which he outlines as follows:

"Evangelism is the native breath of the churches.

"Evangelism is the first business of the churches.

"From the countryside to the great city church the torch of evangelism has been held high.

"We have had city-wide, associational-wide and state-wide evangelistic campaigns.

"Has not the time arrived for a simultaneous unified, united evangelistic campaign?"

"Should not these torches held up here and there at intervals and individually now flare forth in one consuming fire?"

"Such a campaign should encompass something of the following:

"1. A religious census in cooperation with the organized class movement of the Sunday School Board.

"2. Evangelistic conferences, classes in soul-winning and organization of personal workers' bands.

"3. A meeting of days in 25,000 churches during the months of July to November, inclusive.

"4. At least 1,000 meetings in tents, tabernacles, brush arbors, rented halls and mission churches to be held by pastors, evangelists and missionaries.

"5. Each church praying for and working for one-seventh as many new members as it now has or a south-wide aim of 500,000 additions in five months."

"6. The creation and distribution of ten million tracts of fresh evangelistic and devotional literature.

"7. As no evangelistic meeting is complete until the collection is taken, so a south-wide evangelistic campaign should climax with a canvass in all the churches on the first week in December for the 75-Million Campaign, seeking to reach all new members and all unenlisted members and to get all the cash possible.

"Such a campaign should begin, where all our Baptist work starts, with the country churches; in July and August; should move during September and October through the town churches and end in November, where too much of our Baptist work ends, in the cities, with great city-wide campaigns.

"The day of opportunity is ours. Never were men's hearts so hungry for God. Never did our evangelical message have such hearty hearing. Never were the fields so white unto harvest. Never was there greater need. Never were we better prepared.

"Now is the time of all times to go forth unitedly to gather the golden grain into the garner of our God."

The Burden of France

THE devastated area is with France a condition and not a theory. The problem of reparations and treaties is not only a problem of diplomacy and politics but a problem of food and shelter and hope and security for the people of France. The National City Bank (New York) circular presents the French aspect as follows:

There is much to be said for the view that France, having borne the brunt of the war losses, and facing the necessity of making further great expenditures for housing the homeless people in the devastated districts, cannot be asked to further reduce her claims for reparations without having aid in doing so. If the reparations question is the crux of the European situation, all the world is vitally interested in its settlement. All countries will be benefited by clearing up a situation which is a continuing menace to the peace and financial stability of the world, and France may fairly claim that others should share in the sacrifices that are required.

The financial policy of France has been based upon the expectation that she would receive reimbursement at least for the actual expenditures necessary to put her people back into their workshops and homes in the war-ruined territory. It was impossible for the nation to refuse to make these expenditures, and they have been carried on as rapidly as the work could be done and the funds provided by internal government loans.

The expenditures on this account to December 31, 1921, aggregated 74,000,000 francs, which at the gold value of the franc would be nearly $15,000,000,000, and at the present exchange value, about $6,500,000,000.

The Credit Lyonnaise recently has given the following figures from official sources, showing the progress made:

Of the population of the devastated districts 2,615,000 evacuated the territory, of which 2,250,000 have returned.

Of the cultivated area of land 1,900,669 hectares (a hectare is about 2½ acres) were rendered untillable, and 1,467,776 hectares have been restored.

The entire railway mileage affected has been repaired.

Of the highways 53,830 kilometers were destroyed, 18,456 kilometers have been definitely repaired and 33,043 kilometers have been provisionally repaired.

Of industrial works 4,700 were destroyed and 3,645 have been restored into working condition.

Of homesteads 711,883 were destroyed or damaged, of which 671 have been rebuilt. 329,642 have been repaired and 136,042 temporary shacks have been constructed.

The efforts of the government were first directed to restoring the industries, in order to enable the people to earn a living. The chief task remaining is that of restoring homes, and the pressure of public opinion is such that the government cannot stop this work.

Since the war ended the government has endeavored to go as far as practicable in efforts to increase the revenues, but has not been able to balance the budget, including interest, except by borrowing. The service of the public debt, including maturing life annuities, in 1913 required 1,355,000,000 francs, and in 1922 calls for 13,191,000,000 francs.

The Minister of Finance in his budget proposals presented last May, calculated the total foreign debt at 74,876,331,000 francs, at the present rates of exchange. The debt to the United States is about $3,700,000,000, including interest. On her side the French government has loaned 15,181,000,000 francs to other governments.

The reconstruction expenditures come on top of all the costs of the terrible war: the demoralization of industry incident to the four years' struggle, the loss of 57 per cent of the male population between the ages of 20 and 31 and many of other ages, the creation of a great pension list, and all the other burdens and embarrassments that have followed in train.

THE MINISTRY OF THE STEPLADDER

ABISHOP the other day preached to a street crowd from a stepladder straddled in the loop. The novel pulpit served the double purpose of forming a convenient elevation for the speaker and securing publicity for a commendable bit of religious enterprise.

The noon meeting inaugurated a summer campaign of out-door evangelism under the promoting auspices of the Chicago Church Federation. Scores of churches have been enlisted in this endeavor to carry the message of the gospel to the passing throng, and thousands of similar meetings will be held throughout the city while the weather remains favorable.

Of course there is nothing new about such work. It is, in fact, the original form of Christian propaganda. Jesus was a street and wayside preacher. His followers did most of their evangelizing in the open. Paul found the market place an excellent forum for the presentation of truth. The indoor meetings of the early church were largely gatherings of believers. It was not expected that the unconverted would seek out the teachers of the new faith in its places of assembly. The teachers were expected to seek out the unconverted. And this apostolic spirit—this spirit of those who felt themselves commissioned and dispatched to carry the good tidings of God's concern for human life to men and women everywhere—has always marked the periods of highest spiritual vision and energy in the history of the church.

It is not clear gain that we have today a Christian faith which finds part expression in great temples, where worship is made comfortable and attractive, where physical ease and aesthetic enjoyment are among the essential provisions. Spiritual enervation has been one result. Selfish religionism has been another. The men and women who have the message the world needs gather beneath vaulted ceilings, and, in the soft light of stained-glass windows, sing their hymns of praise, repeat their prayers, listen to the discourse and hope that some day the heedless but heart-hungry throng outside will come in and be converted.

The hope is vain. With every passing year it becomes more clearly evident that a walled-in gospel cannot save the world. The church must get back to the original methods. If a fishing-boat or the crumbling stone circle of a well was good enough rostrum for the Master, a stepladder or a soap-box should be good enough for any of his followers. "Street preaching is undignified," says the eminently respectable churchman, to whom religion is more or less of a luxury. But, if memory serves us, Paul, when he listed the fruit of the spirit, did not include dignity.

The first syllable of the word gospel is "go," "go" is the first word of the marching orders which Jesus left for his followers. Before the church can make much impression by saying "Come!" it must make a bigger impression by obeying "Go!"

And this street-preaching work is essentially work for the layman. The multitude knows the minister is paid to advocate God's way of life, and that discounts his message with many. The layman appears in a more disinterested role when he mounts the improvised pulpit. It is a good thing to have a bishop talk religion in LaSalle Street; it would be a better thing to have a banker. If religion is to be brought back again into every-day life, into the life of the street and the mart, laymen must do it.

Lawyers, financiers, merchants talked patriotism during the war; why shouldn't they talk religion? Let them talk it, not in terms of theology, but in terms of experience. Let them make its application to the problems of the week-day task, to the temptations of office and shop and street, to the questions which are concerning men and women in industry, in citizenship, in social customs. If religion cannot stand this sharp contact with life there is something wrong with it. If the individual cannot face his fellows in his own home or business neighborhood and make effective defense of his faith, there is something wrong with him.—Editorial in Chicago Evening Post.

De Molay

since it sprang up under Masonic influence, and with a view to keeping it true to its purpose, it is organized locally under the formal and effectual sponsorship of some Masonic body; but it does not use the Masonic obligations and ritual, nor impose Masonic pledges of any sort. It is open to "sons of Masons and their chums," which would seem to be anything but narrow. In actual practice no earnest boy is barred.

Among the active promoters of the Order are pastors, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, high school principals, members of college faculties, as well as men in more distinctly secular positions; and inquiry has elicited no criticism of its actual working. All reports received eulogize the contribution the Order is making towards the development of moral manhood.

The favorable impression which it has made upon responsible Masons is emphatically indicated by the rapidity of its growth. Organized a little more than three years ago, official records for November, 1921, showed between three and four hundred chapters and 100,000 members. A personal note of Ray V. Denslow, the Grand Supervisor, to me of date July 15 says that the number of chapters is now 650. The increase in membership ought to show about the same ratio. Headquarters of the Grand Council are at Kansas City, Missouri, and the Grand Scribe is Frank S. Land.

And finally, I am informed on the highest official authority that the Order of DeMolay has no connection or understanding whatever with the Ku Klux Klan or with any other organization, except that already described of friendly sponsorship on the part of the Masonic bodies.

General Business Conditions

The manner in which business becomes "used" to trouble, so that conditions that one time would be very alarming are eventually accepted almost as a matter of course, has been illustrated this summer in its attitude toward the coal and railroad strikes. Of course business cannot sit along indefinitely without coal and railroad service, but the situation is as serious for the whole community, including the strikers and their families and sympathizers, as it is for business, for the latter is nothing but supplying community wants. Business throughout the summer has manifested confidence that common sense would rule and that coal and railroad service would be forthcoming. Doubtless this view will prove correct over the long run, but the situation over the world at the moment is not such as to inspire confidence in the ascendancy of common-sense among any of the branches or classes of the human family. In Europe, from Ireland to Russia, the peoples are embroiled in bitter contentions. The faculty of composing differences and of finding common ground upon which to work or common interests, by means of which society has made a fairly orderly advance in civilization, seems to have broken down under the weight of present problems, or to be temporarily incapacitated. In this country the situation is not so desperate, it affords abundant evidence of how the people, confused by suspicion and agitation, waste their energies at cross-purposes.

now it is to honor it; to be a part of it to love it."

Bethel Norwegian Baptist Church of Powers Lake, N. Dakota, Miss Lottie Under, Principal of the School:

"Several boys and girls wished our school would continue for another month. Wherever you go around town you can see and hear children playing 'Bible-school,' singing the songs they learned, etc. Everybody remarks 'How could they accomplish so much in such a short time, both memory work, Bible, singing and handwork?'"

First Baptist Church of West Hoboken, N. J., Rev. C. K. Newell, Pastor:

"We had the good will and gratitude of Roman Catholic families. The hearty cooperation of the teachers. One young lady spent her two weeks vacation from work, teaching in the school, and said it was one of the happiest weeks in her life."

Every church holding a vacation school its own or working with other churches holding such a school, should send a report to the Church Vacation School Division of the Publication Society, Philadelphia. As Baptists, our slogan should be, Every Church Represented Officially in the Work of a Church Vacation School."

The Joy of Work

WE seem as a nation to be suffering from a mania for play. The huge development of pleasure-chasing automobiles merely symbolizes our universal restlessness, eagerness to be running after something, anything, that we can classify as a version. Under pressure from tormenting constituents our legislatures are piling up holidays. And the cry of labor everywhere is, "Cut down hours, cut down hours," until it seems as if brief, tired minutes were all that would be left for work. The obvious deduction is that work is always something to be got rid of, as if it were a curse.

Yet work is life. Proper recreation and relaxation are of course essential, even for the effective doing of work itself; and it may be that the past has been sometimes neglectful of these in due proportion. But that does not mean that men would ever thrive if they had all holidays, or even mainly holidays. Experience has shown over and over again, proclaims, cries out to us, that if the ordinary healthy man has his whole existence made of leisure he does not know what to do with it and in the end rots out in degeneration and misery.

No, work is what we live for, and work makes all the dignity of life. But everything depends on how we look at work. If we consider it as merely something that must be done because it can not be avoided, something to be dodged and scamped and slighted the minute the employer is not looking, if we regard it as hateful drudgery and nothing else, it naturally becomes a curse and a burden.

Put thought into your work, put pride into it, put yourself into it.

Obituary

MELVIN JAMESON, D. D.

Rev. Melvin Jameson died at his home in Alton, Ill., Aug. 24, after an illness of about a year. Funeral services were held in the Upper Alton Baptist Church on Sunday, Aug. 27. The pastor, Rev. D. T. Magill, Dr. S. D. McKenny of the Cherry Street Church, President Potter of Shurtleff College and a representative of the First Church participated, Dr. Twing being away on his vacation.

Dr. Jameson was born in Lyons, N. Y., March 3, 1836. He graduated from the Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859. Dr. Augustus Strong, for many years president of the seminary and Prof. William C. Wilkinson, of the University of Chicago, were his classmates. Between the three men a friendship sprang up which continued through the long years and which was kept intimate by frequent correspondence and many visits.

In 1860, Dr. Jameson became the pastor of the First Baptist Church of Alton where he remained for nine years. In this pastorate he baptized and trained "Uncle Boston Smith" so widely and affectionately known in the work of the Publication Society and who was the originator of the chapel-car method of evangelism. Another boy whom he brought into the kingdom and its service is Mr. Carey Emerson whose work is so well known in Minnesota.

In 1869 Dr. Jameson offered himself for missionary service under the foreign board. When asked what field he had chosen, he answered: "If you have a field where no one else will go, send me there." He was sent to labor among the Burmans at Bassein, Burma, where he spent twenty years. It was said by one of his associates there who knew of his tireless and persistent labors, "The whole Bassein district was saturated with the gospel." During his only furlough, 1880-1883, he spent one year as pastor of the First Baptist Church of Ogdensburg, N. Y. After his return to America he spent three years with the Open Door Mission of Ottumwa, Iowa.

The final period of his life was spent in Alton and vicinity. He was instrumental in the founding of the Cherry Street Baptist Church of Alton. He had a large influence in the formation of the East Alton Baptist Church and also of the Bushy Grove Baptist Church in the Wood River district before that city came into existence.

While retaining his membership in the First Church, in later years he was a regular attendant at all the service of the Upper Alton Baptist Church where he did more church work than any other individual in it. He was the efficient superintendent of the home department of the Sunday school. He took personal charge of the club of "Missions" in the church and at one time had more than 100 subscribers on the list. He was a constant and welcome visitor in many homes. The missionary interest of the First Church of Alton and of the Alton churches is more largely due to him than to any other individual. The three Alton churches gave more than $100,000 to the New World Movement.

He was a Christian man of the truest type, respected and loved by all. He had a keen interest in the whole work of the kingdom, even though foreign missions was enshrined in the center of his being. He was always interested and pleased at any manifestation of enterprise in the work of the churches.

There remains besides his wife, three sons: Hugh, Y. M. C. A. general secretary at Cadillac, Mich.; Melvin, of Cleveland, Ohio; and Allen of Alton, Ill.

No Compromise With Booze

those countries. The anti-liquor movement is making rapid headway in Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and even in Italy. Scotland, famous for its whisky, a land of hard drinkers, has begun voting itself dry by the local-option method. World prohibition cannot be far around the corner.

The American people have every reason to be steadfast in stamping out the drink traffic, every incentive to hold fast to prohibition. It has steadily increased their bank deposits, built more homes than were ever built before in a given time, caused more money to be spent for the necessities of life. This country's booze bill was $2,000,000,000 less last year than in the years when we had saloons.

Two billions a year for twelve years would pay our war debt.

There is much to indicate that 17,500,000 Americans, formerly steady drinkers, are now on the water wagon. We should make it easier for them to stay there instead of harder.

So many states have proved that prohibition is effective that to say we cannot have bone-dry national prohibition is ridiculous. Just now we should be its vigorous and aggressive champions. One thing is certain. Whatever Congress may do this country will never vote for a beer and wine amendment to the Constitution. —Editorial in Capper's Weekly.

THE ABINGDON PRESS
NEW YORK CINCINNATI

Unwritten Sayings of Our Lord, by Prof. David Smith. New York: Doran Co. Second edition. $1.50.

Eight lectures, delivered in 1913, discuss with thorough scholarship and fine insight certain reputed sayings of Jesus not preserved in the gospels. One runs as follows: "The world is merely a bridge; ye are to pass over it, and not to build your dwellings upon it."

These Three, by G. H. Knight. New York: Doran Co. $1.00.

A reprint of a series of forty-five brief meditations, by a well-known author of books for the quiet hour. For those who have need of a stimulant to faith and devotion in the midst of a busy life, this book offers much in form for ready assimilation. The author has gathered together what he terms Bible triads, texts where a triple presentment of truth may be found, like three branches of a tree. The method serves to unify the whole and to emphasize the abundance of God's grace.

Motives and Expression in Religious Education, by Charles S. Ikenberry. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $2.

The author believes that in the past the impressionist method in religious education has been overworked. He contends that teachers must not only use proper methods to secure the child's interest but must supply practical correlated expression in the religious educational program. The book is illustrated with over one hundred pictures and diagrams, such as a complete series of models of Bible objects, maps of Bible lands, illustrative material for the sand table and a great variety of articles illustrating hand work. It is a good book for the church school library.

Thy Sea Is Great; Our Boats Are Small, by Henry Van Dyke. New York: Revell Company. 50 cents.

Dr. Van Dyke has given expression in these ten hymns, to common Christian feelings and desires of the present time, "hymns that may be sung together by people who know the thought of the age, and are not afraid that any truth of science will destroy religion, or any revolution on earth overthrow the kingdom of heaven." The author invites all who desire to make free use of these verses for such occasions, after obtaining permission from the publishers. They are well worthy the attention of musical directors and others who have the planning of important public services of worship and praise.

The Art of Preaching in the Light of Its History, by Edwin C. Dargan. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.75.

Dr. Dargan succeeded the great Broadus as professor of homiletics at the Louisville Seminary, and for fifteen years gave himself to the training of preachers, to research in the field of the history of preaching, and—as his students who followed him around on Sundays will remember—to the exemplification in his own pulpit work of the lessons history had taught him and the ideals he advocated for the Christian preacher.

The book under review is the Holland Lectures delivered at the Southwestern Baptist Seminary last year. We have here in effect a work on the history of the theory of preaching—a foot-note to Dr. Dargan's exhaustive "History of Preaching," but by no means of minor value. A careful scholar has done his most careful work, and the result is a unique contribution to the literature of homiletics, whose perusal and study will stimulate the preacher to more conscientious and toilsome labor to develop his pulpit powers.

"It Is to Laugh"

A shopkeeper had in his employ a man so lazy as to be utterly worthless. One day, his patience exhausted, he discharged him. "Will you give me a character?" asked the lazy one. The employer sat down to write a non-committal letter. His effort resulted as follows: "The bearer of this letter has worked for me one week and I am satisfied."

—London Telegraph.

A printer in Fort Worth got slightly peeved at a letter from a doctor who wanted bids on several thousand letterheads, different sizes, different grades, and different colors, and wanted the printing form held standing. So he took his typewriter in hand and wrote:

"Am in the market for bids for one operation for appendicitis. One, two or five-inch incision—with or without ether—also with or without nurse. If appendix is found to be sound, want quotation to include putting same back and cancel order. If removed successfully, bidder is expected to hold incision open for about sixty days, as I expect to be in the market for an operation for gallstones at that time and want to save the extra cost of cutting."—Kansas City Post.

Vice President R. E. M. Cowie of American Railway Express has a long list of stories. Scotch stories are his favorites because the dialect is natural for him, but it was a straight American joke that he told at the Yale Club Friday noon during the recess of railroad executives, who sought a half hour's rest between two very serious sessions.

A certain man's wife found a card in one of his pockets with just "Lily" on it.

"Why, that's a horse I had some money on in yesterday's race," the man explained, a very clever answer, he thought.

A day or two later his wife greeted him when he returned from business with:

"Oh, dearie! You had an important 'phone call today. That race horse—Lily—wanted you."

"An Englishman and a Scot were in the same compartment of an English train," as L. A. Shand of the Palace tells the story. "The Englishman wanted to smoke, but had no matches. He asked his fellow passenger for a match, and Sandy, with true Scotch thrift, carefully took a box from his pocket and extracted a single lucifer from it. He handed the match to the Englishman who thanked him.

"Unable to find his pipe, the Englishman placed the match on the seat beside him while he made a systematic search of all his pockets and baggage. At last he remarked:

"I cawn't find my pipe. I must have left it at home, don't you know?"

"Sandy silently reached over and took up the match from the seat.

"You'll no be needin' this match then," he said as he restored it to the box."

IGNORING MARKS OF EXPRESSION

To be a good reader of music, one must not only be able to follow and sing the changes in pitch and rhythm, but also those of expression. They are just as essential a part of the music as anything else. Some numbers are comparatively worthless if sung without careful regard to the manner of rendition, but are found to be very impressive if properly sung. The choir members then should be trained to watch these marks, for they are not there for the director only.

Yet there are cases where the marks of expression should not be taken too seriously. Sometimes they indicate merely one of several possible interpretations, and the leader may have a very intelligent one of his own, or one more suited to a special occasion. Then these marks must not be regarded as fetters that are meant to hamper individuality of expression, or adaptation to special conditions. Again, the marks of expression may call for a nicety of execution to which a given choir may not yet be equal. Appoggiaturas are a valuable embellishment, but they trouble many of our singers, and the result is ridiculous if attempted. To ignore them is often the only wise course to pursue. A choir leader must always feel free to exercise his good judgment in these things and attempt only that which his singers can render with efficiency.—Choir Leader.

MEZZA VOICE OR HALF-VOICE

Noted singers speak of mezza voce or half-voice. By this I do not mean the little, pinched, tight, throaty tone, that some call falsetto. The true mezzo voce is sung with the utmost relaxation of everything above the larynx; only the thin edges of the vocal bands acting like light strings, being used to start the vibrations, which should have free re-inforcement in the nasal cavities. It is, to my mind, the salvation of the voice, and no one who cannot use it from top to bottom of his entire range can claim to be a finished singer. It should be the basis of what is known as "training the head-voice down."

Any one can sing forte. Very few can sing a resonant pianissimo, because it takes much practice and great breath control to accomplish. It is for this reason that the messa di voce or swell, is a supreme test; for it means the ability to go from pianissimo to fortissimo and back without a break.—The Etude.

Gradually the church music of this country is getting impregnated with the masterful types called into being by the demands of the Orthodox Russian church, a style of unaccompanied choral music which has tremendous powers of expression and devotional value. A survey of the imposing list printed above will give some suggestion as to the standing of the composers involved. Much more than in the western nations, the native Russian composers have always felt it to be the pinnacle of achievement to write music for the services of their church; the greatest composers have devoted hearty attention to this field of artistic endeavor. Very few of the above mentioned selections are usable by mixed quartet; all will sound the better for being done by chorus. Note by note, they are simple without exception—the fact that many of the parts are subdivided into two or more sub-parts should not make them any harder to do; in fact, the greater number of parts often serves to make easier some of the abrupt harmonic changes. Every up-to-date choir-leader will want to look over a sample set of this newer idiom in church music. I cannot recommend any better list than that tabulated above. All the numbers will render fine interest on the time spent in their study. Wider acquaintance with such high-grade and interesting church music will only serve to raise the standard of music appreciation within the confines of our churches.

Thyre The Fair.....Lester ($25)
Choirs in search of American choral works for secular concert use will welcome the opportunity to examine this brief dramatic cantata or choral-ballad. The excellent text is by Frederick H. Martens, and recounts a vivid episode in old Norse legend. The publisher has issued the work in two forms, one for four-part chorus of women's voices; the other arranged for chorus of mixed voices. The solos in each case are set for baritone. The orchestral parts are obtainable, if a more ambitious performance is desired. A recent review in Musical America said, of this work:

"His (Mr. Lester's) 'Thyre the Fair' which the H. W. Gray Co. now puts forward quite surpasses anything he has done to date. It is one of the best new American choral pieces produced in a very long time.....Mr. Lester is giving us big music these days.....Choral societies will seize eagerly the opportunity of doing this work, which has deep significance."

- O Holy, Holy Lord.....Harris (12c)

The Schmidt house is one that has long been noted for the high value of its octavo publications. Its editors seemingly have their fingers on the pulse of the music-using element, and they have the courage of their convictions in the choice of material issued. The three numbers listed here are no exception to this statement. All three are usable to the utmost degree, and all three are unqualifiedly good music, good church music. To me, one of the most amusing elements of modern music-criticism is the peculiar attitude of the average professional music-critic toward music for the church service. I doubt whether any of the men who so solemnly pronounce the burial service over most of the church music published ever see the inside of a church—if the truth were told, most of them are more familiar with the exteriors of the synagogues! And it is these amateur dilettantes who set themselves up as Supreme Court judges on the subject of what music should be used in the church services. They seemingly pay no attention to the text—it can be from the "Vedas" or "Mother Goose" so far as they know or care; and their estimate of the music is mainly biased by whether or not it is written along the lines of their pet cubist peculiarities. The three numbers under consideration are good church music—practical, easy to do, understandable, appealing alike to the uncultured and the trained ear (which is my pet test of the actual value of music), sincere and reverent in mood and setting, well-written—offending not by grammatical misstatement, nor faulty workmanship, inspired in spirit, and worshipful. They should be in every choir-library. The first two are for mixed voices; the last-named is a fine arrangement of the old Negro melody "Deep River" for three-part chorus of women's voices.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Charles Jefferson says "There are five gifts a minister must possess. He must have the gift of speaking, the gift of imparting knowledge, the gift of moulding character, the gift of moral enthusiasm, and the gift of moral discernment." It was by measuring himself by this standard that he heard his call to the ministry.

In the death of Rev. William Burgess, executive secretary of the Illinois Vigilance Association since 1919, the cause of righteousness suffered a great loss. His co-workers speak of him as "a knight without fear and without reproach." Dr. Burgess was seventy-nine years old.

Prof. J. P. Treat has accepted the position of superintendent of schools at Manitou, Colo. Mr. Treat suffered a serious breakdown while president of the Colorado Woman's College, but reports that "I can now give my work some of the pep and enthusiasm that used to characterize my efforts."

500,000 Southern Baptist families take no Baptist paper, according to Frank Burkhalter, publicity agent for the 75 Million Campaign, "and are therefore very poorly informed on the program and work of the denomination." The recent conference of Southern Baptist leaders at Nashville agreed that "the denominational paper is easily the greatest single publicity asset in promoting all general interests of the kingdom," and so adopted plans for greatly increasing the circulation of the Baptist papers of the South.

The Seventh Day Adventists lead all other denominations in proportionate donations. The Adventists in the United States group number only about 135,000, nor are the members wealthy, but they lay great emphasis upon the duty of tithing. In 1920 they gave tithes to the amount of $7,195,463, while additional gifts totaled $4,658,941. The per capita giving during the year was $63.92.

The Mission House at Kettering, where William Carey, Oct. 2, 1792, founded the first missionary society which is recognized as the basis of modern missionary enterprise was bought recently at a public sale on behalf of the Baptist Laymen's Missionary Movement of England. The property will not only remain an historical memorial, but probably will be used as a hostel for returned missionaries. The sale, which brought a price of $15,000, was in consequence of the death of the owner, and marked the first time the property had become purchasable since its founding.

Inspired by Bruce Barton's recent magazine article reporting H. G. Wells' choice of the six great men of history, the Christian Index has polled thirty leading Southern Baptist scholars—apparently all of them ministers—for their nominations. The result is interesting, if not surprising. Paul, Moses and Aristotle head the poll, with Luther, Washington and Shakespeare following in order. Buddha had eight votes, Woodrow Wilson seven, and Lincoln only two. President Chamberlee, of Bessie Tift College, names no man later than the first century A. D. Dr. John F. Purser names one, Jefferson; Prof. J. R. Sampey one, Gen. R. E. Lee; Prof. McGlothlin one, Luther. It should be stated that the name of Jesus was expressly reserved from the lists to be submitted, for obvious reasons.

Official announcement is just made at the University of Chicago of the complete

The Limitations of Youth

YOUTH is adorable, without question; and that elder one must be dull indeed who does not cherish the memory of his own, or look with admiration (not altogether untouched by envy) upon those who, for a little, possess it. But the cult of youth in itself can become a folly unless it is wisely appreciative of limitations, as well as warmly applaudive of potentialities. Of late our magazines have reverberated with the stirring message that Youth (with a capital initial) must be served, demands the scepter—or the steering wheel, to use a more fitting figure—and will give us a new earth while we wait. Nor is this only from the young themselves; there are seniors impatient to abdicate, railing bitterly at all the other seniors, and declaring that a clean sweep must be made everywhere, to give the young their chance. (As I write, I recall that famous tale of "Soapy Sam" of Oxford. The Bishops of England were draughting a letter to the Queen in which occurred this Heepian sentence: "Conscious as we are of our own unworthiness". Several demurred; whereupon S. Oxon, suggested that it read: "Conscious as we are of one another's unworthiness!" When a middle-aged man declares that no middle-aged man's judgment is valuable, I know how, on his own declaration, to value his judgment as to that point.)

One difficulty is in determining when youth ends. If it is a matter of years, simply then, in any considerable task, the youth who plans must be prepared to give up execution before it is half-finished—which would not make for satisfactory accomplishment. But other factors enter surely. There is fruit which rots before it ripens; a blight can touch buds. Self-conscious and assertive Youth today (as one finds it articulate in art, in literature, in public affairs) is over-much inclined to sheer destructiveness, nor shows much of that radiant gladness of hopeful vision which men were wont to think of as youth's peculiar possession. It was a young man that wrote Three Soldiers; they are young men who demand to barter a nation's gratitude for a "bonus." The squalid crudities, festooned into sewage and garbage, do not mark the older writers of our time; the hideous ugliness of "jazz," whether in music or painting, with its renunciation of all beauty, finds its factors among the very young. Concede that much of it is experimentation, which will be outgrown; yet in fields requiring leadership, such experiments are perilous.

No, youth must serve before it can be served; and, to the end of time, it will be "old men for counsel." They are no real friends of youth today who demand boy-bishops. They are no real champions of progress who would abandon all the achieved certainties of the past, at the bidding of an inexperience so raw as to mistake repudiated follies of bygone ages for newly discovered verities. Age and youth must work together, each dependent upon the other; and even middle-age may, perhaps, have some slight contribution to offer.

registration for the summer quarter ending September 1. In the graduate schools of arts, literature, and science there have been registered 1,506 men and 1,120 women; in the senior and junior colleges, 756 men and 713 women. In the professional schools there have been enrolled 294 divinity students, 213 medical students, 210 law students, 1,521 in education, 273 in commerce and administration, and 43 in social service administration. Exclusive of duplications, the total number of men enrolled is 3,124 and of women 3,291, a grand total for the university of 6,415, of whom 3,037 are graduate students.

The Foreign Mission Society has just received news that Rev. F. Wiens, who served as a missionary in India, from 1909 to 1913, was accidentally shot to death in Fresno, Calif., by some firemen who were hunting a burglar. Mr. Wiens, accompanied by Rev. J. Penner, was returning to his home late at night in an automobile and while crossing a bridge, several men appeared asking him to stop his car. Mr. Wiens saw that they were armed and, thinking they were "hold ups," sent his car forward full speed. The men, members of the city fire department, began firing. A bullet hit Mr. Wiens and he died within two minutes.

A communication from Mrs. George W. Coleman, president, and Mrs. Katherine Westfall, executive secretary, states: "The board of managers of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society wishes to announce that the Baptist Missionary Training School is to remain in its present building, 2969 Vernon Ave. Chicago, instead of moving to a temporary location as previously announced. Because of the difficulty of making the necessary financial adjustments and also because of civic developments, it seems desirable to make no change in the location at present. The school will open on September 18, with a strong faculty under the leadership of its able president, Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham.

The recent action of Congress reducing the enlisted personnel of the men and officers of the army calls for the separation of some 2,000 officers, including fifty chaplains, from the service prior to December 31, 1922. Of this number there are between thirty and forty Protestant chaplains who are available for the pastoral or other lines of service suitable to ministers of the gospel. These are all picked men. Some of them are former Baptist pastors with splendid records. Information concerning these men can be secured by addressing Rev. E. O. Watson, secretary, General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

At the recent meeting of the international association of women preachers Madeline Southard of Winfield, Kan., was elected president for the ensuing year. She spoke upon "Not a Sphere but Hemisphere." It was declared that in the past while almost twice as many women as men have shown an active interest in religious work the minority of men has had a monopoly on ecclesiastical administration and theological statement. Men have written all of the creed to the detriment of the world and the church. It was never meant, she said, that either half of the human race should rule alone in any realm of life. She evidently forgot Mrs. Eddy.

“Today—God’s and Mine”

IT isn't the experience of today that drives men mad. It is the remorse of what happened yesterday, and the dread of what tomorrow may disclose. These are God's days. Leave them with him.

Therefore, I think, and I do, and I journey but one day at a time. That is the easy day. That is the man's day. Nay, rather it is our day—God's and mine. And while faithfully and dutifully I run my course, and work my appointed task on that day of ours, God the Almighty and All-loving takes care of yesterday and tomorrow.

—Robert J. Burdette.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. E. A. Harrar has closed his work as pastor of the Homewood Church, Pittsburgh, to become the successor of Dr. Lyell as pastor of the First Church of Camden, N. J. Mr. Harrar has had but three pastorates since his graduation from Crozer in 1899.

At the new Spurgeon's College, Falkland Park, London, a reunion was held and welcome extended to ten new students. The new premises are the gift to the college of Mr. Haywalker and family. Principal McCaig gave the address, referring to the fact that as a visitor from Scotland he had been present at the dedication of the old college.

Through the bequest of Miss Constance Kemp, the English Baptist Missionary organizations have received in round numbers the following amounts: The Women's Missionary Association, $10,000; the Baptist Missionary Society, $7,000; the Medical Mission Auxiliary, $5,000; and the Bible Translation Society, $1,000.

Dr. Henry Edward Tralle, who has been connected with the American Baptist Publication Society for two years, as editor of training publications, goes from Philadelphia to New York, to devote himself to writing and speaking. He will be available for educational addresses and pulpit supply, and may be addressed at 150 Claremont Ave., New York, N. Y.

Dr. Delavan Dewolf who for so many years led the Baptists of New Jersey in their common missionary tasks, has been relieved of the responsibility of editing the church news in the New Jersey Baptist Bulletin. In making this announcement, the editor says, "My brother Dewolf, you have done enough for the New Jersey Baptist Convention. You have already given your life over and over again. You must not be worried these latter days by the Bulletin nor anything else."

A record of the work of the past year on the foreign fields has been prepared by the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. This report is called "The Progress of the Kingdom" and is to be used in connection with "Our Work in the Orient." The price is 15c per copy—with "Our Work in the Orient," 25c. Special programs based on these books have been prepared. Order from the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion at any of the following addresses: 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

The "Baptist Times and Freeman" of London says: "Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard are continuing their tour of the European countries in which the denominational work is assisted by the American Baptists of the Northern Convention. In Latvia they received a huge welcome. There, as in Estonia, their arrival followed immediately upon the recognition by the United States of the Republic de jure, and popular enthusiasm for America and President Harding was consequently at flood. The Dome at Riga, the largest building in Latvia, placed by the Lutheran authorities at the service of the Baptists and their distinguished visitors, was crowded. At Libau, a procession of military, police, firemen, business men, trade unionists, school teachers and school children was arranged; this took an hour to pass the visitors standing on the steps of the town hall. In other centers similar enthusiasm was displayed."

David M. Eddy, a member of the church at Escondito, was 104 years old Aug. 27. He has never married, used tobacco nor made a beverage of intoxicating liquors.

Rev. Chas. E. Griffin, who recently closed his work in Huntington, W. Va., has accepted the call of the church at Homestead, Pa., and is already on the field.

Mr. George I. Wilbur, a prominent layman of the First M. E. Church of Oneonta, N. Y., who died recently, set aside by will $100,000 for the church of which he was a member; the boards of home and foreign missions, the pension fund and Cazenovia Seminary each receive $50,000.

Prof. David Bryn Jones of Carlton College spent his vacation in San Diego, Cal., and in the absence of the pastor W. J. Beaven supplied the pulpit Aug. 27. Rev. Dryden W. Phelps also supplied the pulpit during the vacation period.

Life or Death

WE are realizing as we never realized before that the Christianizing of men, of all men, in all their relations, is not so much a matter of interest to the church as a matter of LIFE OR DEATH for the world.—J. F. McFADYEN.

The strong old church at Marietta, Ohio, which since the withdrawal of Dr. C. H. Stull, for state work has been served in constructive Bible study and evangelism by Dr. J. W. Weddell whose term of labor was extended to ten months, on Sunday, Sept. 3, called Dr. U. S. Davis of South Bend, Ind., to the permanent pastorate. It is hoped that Dr. Davis will accept the call so as to begin his work in the early autumn. He will be welcomed on his return to Ohio, where most of his labors have been performed.

The "Detroit News" for August 9 states that Highland Park, Detroit, is to lose its Moslem mosque, the only shrine of the Islamic faith in North America. Constructed a year ago at 204 Victor Avenue, by Muhahhad Karoub, a wealthy and devout Moslem real estate man, the mosque has stood as the only outward symbol of Islam in the Western World. Dissension in the ranks of the followers of the prophet here, and lack of interest on the part of most of them in the mosque services, are the reasons assigned for the failure to draw gatherings of the faithful. Mr. Karoub proposes to raze the edifice and dispose of the real estate. His decision is based on the fact that he spent approximately $55,000 in its construction; and since its dedication it seldom has been used for religious worship. Highland Park has placed the property on its tax assessment roll, and Mr. Karoub is compelled to pay taxes on the mosque, because the city tax officials hold that it is "vacant property, and not used for religious worship." Mr. Karoub came to Detroit several years ago, a penniless immigrant from Arabia, and by labor in an automobile factory, and judicious investments in real estate acquired sufficient property to render him independent.

It has been rumored that Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, who is now in England, would accept the call of the Westminster Congregational Church in London. A cable from Dr. Cadman says: "Don't anticipate Central Church yet." He will remain in Brooklyn where he has ministered so many years.

The Baptist Institute for Christian Workers, Philadelphia, will open Sept. 21 with an enrolment crowding the building. Dr. Allyn K. Foster delivers the opening address.

Rev. E. Wiesle, director of religious education for North Dakota, has accepted the call of the church at Danvers, Ill. He will enter the University of Chicago, where he will specialize in the work of religious education.

Rev. Clarence W. Kemper of the First Church, Lansing, Mich., spent his vacation in West Virginia where he visited his old home. He preached at the Fifth Avenue Church at Huntington and attended the Broad Run Association.

In the calendar of the City Park Church, Denver, we find the following announcement: "A complete surprise (except to very few), which will be of interest to many, was the marriage of our pastor, Dr. Schoemaker, and Miss Helen Browning, at the home of the bride's parents, on Thursday evening, August 31. President J. W. Bailey, an intimate friend of Dr. Schoemaker, performed the wedding ceremony in the presence of the relatives and a few friends. The bride has been a member of our church and a teacher in the Sunday school, also in the public schools for some years."

"In order to acquaint unprejudiced readers with the positions of the Fundamentalists, contrasted with that of Modernists, we quote herewith the full sermon of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, and follow it with the full text of Dr. Riley's address." This is the introduction of a pamphlet under the signature of the secretary of the Christian Fundamentals Association. This sermon was printed in full in THE BAPTIST of June 10. The pamphlet can be secured for 10 cents by addressing Miss Ethel Blake, 1006 Hannon Pl., Minneapolis, Minn.

The Baptist Temple of Rochester, N. Y. Rev. Clinton Wunder, pastor, maintained its services throughout the summer. Among the speakers during the pastor's vacation were Dr. Joseph Taylor of West China; Dr. Samuel Grafflin, director of religious education of the West Side Y. M. C. A., New York, and Rev. T. J. Bolger, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Elmira, N. Y. Mr. Bolger is a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary.

From the Sunday-school secretary for Brazil, Rev. Herbert S. Harris of Rio de Janeiro, comes the very significant statement that the Sunday school must be used more and more as an evangelizing agency by the establishment of branch schools, thus pushing the work out like the spokes of a wheel, into the surrounding districts. He states that this purpose to evangelize through the agency of the Sunday school reacts most favorably on the teacher-training work, making it absolutely necessary in order to carry on extension work. Mr. Harris is the representative in Brazil of the World's Sunday-School Association.

He's On The Run

Once a subscriber justified his subscription to his denominational newspaper on the ground that he "wanted to see what the devil is doing." THE BAPTIST is doing its best to encourage the churches to study God's word and to follow its teachings in personal life. Every week we record the plans and methods of pastors and churches and tell the story of Christian achievements around the world. You will not read THE BAPTIST many weeks before it will dawn upon you that in hundreds of communities Christian men and women are resisting the devil and that he is on the run. If more Baptist church members read their denominational periodicals we would have fewer pessimists wailing among us.

Killam's Kollum

Our Denominational Newspaper—"THE BAPTIST"

For the Four-minute Men

Introduction:

Before THE BAPTIST we had regional papers, with small circulation. It was necessary for our societies and institutions to advertise in all these papers. With the larger, more worthy program we needed a more widely circulated journal. We have it in THE BAPTIST.

Every Family Should:

I. Take the paper. You take other papers. You have your trade paper. Your fashion paper. Your home magazine. You should have your church paper. No interest is more vital than your religious life and service. You need to take the religious newspaper in order to keep abreast the best thought and to know best methods of working.

II. Pay for the paper. This is not an insult. It is a suggestion. THE BAPTIST is a church paper. Account for it as you will, we have members who are strictly honorable and honest in all their dealings in the business world who are careless, to say the least, in the matters of church obligation. Excuses are advanced to the church treasurers and even to our church papers which would never enter one's mind in the matter of the butcher or the baker. So I say, "Take the paper and pay for it."

III. Read the paper. All that has been said thus far will be of little avail unless you read the paper. You may read sections that you especially like, why not read some things that make you mad, that stir you up, that set your mental machinery working. It won't hurt you. And Finally, I am here to take your name and your cash.

Yes, Yes

"Not all non-readers of the Advocates are Methodist flunkers, but many of them are. Their church means very little to them or else they would want to know what it is doing and what the other Christian forces are accomplishing. The church paper is the only adequate means of finding out. That is why it is printed by order of the active members."—Western Christian Advocate.

Have You

Read the September number of Missions? We cannot imagine how any Baptist can feel content without this splendid missionary magazine. Remember that you can secure both THE BAPTIST and Missions for $3 by sending both subscriptions to our office. This offer holds good for both new and renewal subscriptions.

The National Christian Conference of China

Part I. The Occasion

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

ROBERT Morrison, the first evangelical missionary to China, and properly known as the father of the modern missionary movement in that country, arrived at Canton in 1807 and waited outside the gates, praying for the opportunity to enter the city and preach the gospel there. For many years the hatred of the "foreign devil" was intense, and almost insuperable difficulties were encountered on every hand. The first convert was baptized after seven years of labor, and after thirty-five years the bands of missionaries in various parts of the country knew of only six Chinese in all the land who were willing to call themselves Christians. In fifty years there were only about five hundred members of evangelical churches. Morrison had hoped that in a hundred years there would be a thousand Christians in all China.

Morrison's Prayers Answered

It was the writer's privilege a few weeks ago to sit in the National Christian Conference of China, at Shanghai, in which there were representatives of 378,000 members of evangelical churches. Robert Morrison's prayers have been answered, and now, after barely more than a century of work, results are apparent such as he and his colleagues did not dare really to expect within so brief a period. A century is a very short span in the life of old China, whose conservatism, even fifty years ago, seemed well-nigh changeless. Indeed, today results are apparent which are surprising even to those who less than a quarter of a century ago attempted to forecast developments. Who, at the time of the Boxer uprising in 1900, when so many missionaries and Chinese Christians were put to death by the howling mobs, would have ventured really to predict that within twenty-two years the membership of the evangelical churches would increase from 85,000 to 378,000, and a Christian conference would be held in China to which greetings would be sent by some of the most prominent men of the nation?

Nor is the increase in numbers the only development which surpasses the faith of those who in 1900 witnessed the martyrdom of multitudes. The awakening of the Chinese Christian forces in general and the rise of a capable and devoted Chinese Christian leadership are equally gratifying. These developments are recent. In 1907 a large meeting was held at Shanghai, known as the Morrison Conference, in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the beginning of evangelical missionary work in China. That interdenominational conference was considered significant, but there were few Chinese present, for the reason that few if any real Chinese Christian leaders had emerged. None were present as delegates. Moreover, the missionary agencies of that time may not have caught a great vision of native leadership, except as a rather remote ideal.

As late as 1913, in the conference held in China under the auspices of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh Conference, the Chinese were in the minority and most of those in attendance were timid. The foreign missionary still dominated the situation. In 1913 only a few of the Chinese Christian leaders were men of broad education and wide experience. Since then, however, the Christian educational institutions have trained many leaders, and men who were leaders in 1913 are now experienced. As a result, the National Christian Conference of 1922 was Chinese in its spirit, Chinese in its leadership, Chinese in its program, and Chinese in its outlook. Many missionaries and foreign visitors were present, but they gratefully acknowledged that the Chinese were in control.

"The Chinese church" was the phrase most used in the literature and addresses in the many months of preparation for the conference. An "indigenous Christianity" in China was frankly the ideal of most of the speakers. Under the spell of such an ideal 565 Chinese leaders (men and women) had come from the churches in every section in China. Some of them had traveled perhaps six weeks in order to reach the meeting. They represented almost every evangelical group, as was true of the 488 foreign missionaries. The writer can think of no large denominational group that was not represented in the conference. That an indigenous Christianity was the dream of the delegates was clear from the opening address of Rev. Z. T. Kaung, vice-chairman of the committee on arrangements, who said in part:

"You have been longing for your own Chinese church, and the time has come. This gathering will be the birthplace of the Christian Church of China. We are at the close of the first hundred years of work of the missionaries of the West. To show our gratitude for what they have done for our country we must measure up to what our spiritual parents expect of us. We, the Chinese people, must now assume leadership of our own church."

Let no one confuse the Chinese cry for an indigenous church, or churches, in China with organic church union. In the minds of many there is a strong regret that they are "divided by the denominationalism which comes from the West", and they tell us that our denominationalism "is based upon differences, the historical significance of which, however real and vital to the missionaries from the West, are not shared by us Chinese." But the cry is not necessarily for one union church. The first cry, and that with which we are most concerned, is for freedom to make their own interpretation. Baptists will not deny them that privilege. We recall the experience of the church at Jerusalem with the early Christians at Antioch. "If then God gave unto them the like gift (the Holy Spirit) as he did also unto us, when we believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I, that I could withstand God? And when they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying 'Then to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life.'" For guidance in such an hour we need merely to read the New Testament again.

The cry for an indigenous Christianity was voiced by Prof. Timothy Lew when he said, in speaking of the church: "Her organizations, her plans, her project in every detail shall be genuinely Chinese, so that she shall not only be able to clear herself of being a foreignized institution, but shall be able also to make a genuine contribution to the world by making the Chinese interpretation of Christ her Head and her Ruler."

Further quotations in the second part of this article will make plainer the deep yearning of many Chinese Christians regarding an indigenous Christianity. They believe that while they will require the assistance of missionaries and western churches for many years to come, they must at once take long steps in the direction of self-government and self-propagation, as well as self-support.

One of the Supreme Miracles

In all the discussions the warmest gratitude was expressed for the presence of the missionaries, and it is clear that the missionary of the right type will be required for many a day, but the boards are exhorted to see to it that only men of the proper ability and attitude are sent to China. Professor Evans of Peking, a missionary, interpreted the relation of the missions to the Chinese churches as being one of mediating the love and faith of the Christian church of the West to the Christian church of China, rather than a matter of ecclesiastical control. One of Professor Evans' most inspiring words, which represented the thought of many missionaries, was this: "We witness today one of the supreme miracles of human history; one of the oldest nations in the world is being born again. A nation that has been held for centuries under the spell of the world's most impressive classical tradition; that has been cheated of its youth for more than a thousand years is today recapturing its youth. It remains to see whether it will drink the 'cup of devils' or whether it will receive from the hand of the Chinese church the 'chalice of the grapes of God.'"

One could not sit through the sessions of the conference lasting ten days, without being deeply moved. The occasion was an inspiration. Perhaps Morrison and many others who have labored in China during the last hundred years looked down on the conference. Perhaps they heard, too, the volume of Chinese praise in such hymns as "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name", and "Crown Him Lord of All."

The threatened division over theological questions did not occur. There was agreement in the great desire to make the Christian forces effective in reaching personally the hundreds of millions in China who have not heard the name of Christ, and in giving his teachings to the nation as a "guiding force" in the midst of its perplexities.

(To be continued)

Noble Vengeance

"The great souls never seek revenge, but live
To sweeten life, to give and to forgive;
Behold, too, how the camphor-trees impart
To the biting ax the fragrance of their heart."

—EDWIN MARKHAM.

The Baptist

Are You a Liability or an Asset?

THE generalities of our prayers are appalling. They do not even glitter. "Oh, Lord, bless our noble missionaries on the far-flung battle line of the kingdom". Yes, but how much better to say "Dear Lord, bless our noble statesman Bruce Kinney, just now on a trip to Alaska for thee and for us." "God, inspire with the passion of the Great Teacher, our Saviour, those who have recently begun their work on the enlarged staff of Linfield College." "Empower, we pray thee, our Father, our mighty Axling as he takes up again his duties as a moulder of Japanese national life."

Somewhere in every church there should be displayed two maps. They should be large and attractive and well placed where every one would see them. One should be a map of the world that Christ came to save with those areas under the care of Northern Baptists clearly indicated. The mission stations should be marked. The other map should be of our own nation and surrounding territory and islands with every interest of the home mission societies and the Publication Society and the Education Board and the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board clearly indicated.

With these maps should go a key. Here would be some tabulated data about each mission station, when it was opened, how the work is being conducted, who is in charge and when a visitor from that station will next be on his furlough home. With the second map should be a key giving the principal facts about our colleges, schools, and seminaries, a description of the varied work our societies are doing with foreigners, Negroes, Indians, frontiersmen, some data about our homes for ministers and missionaries, our philanthropies for the orphans and the aged, and statistics about our missions in Mexico, San Salvador, Porto Rico and elsewhere in the Americas.

Hosea cried "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Our opportunities in these marvelous days of awakening nations and open doors and searching hearts, are being destroyed because we do not know. Let any pastor turn his Sunday morning service into a question bee and he will discover in a few moments why the gifts to missions are so small and why there is so much of pettiness in the lives of his members. Let him ask the deacon there in the front seat where Bengal-Orissa might be, or in what states of the Union we are doing our work with the American Indians, or in what cities we are training ministers to lead our rapidly growing Slavic congregations. Let him ask some earnest parents, burdened with the problems of their growing children, where the Baptist colleges are located, let him ask the travelling men of his congregation where in the local state the philanthropic institutions are maintained by the denomination. If he were as emotional a pastor as old Hosea was he would close the meeting with a cry of anguish "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

Business houses always count their young salesman a liability until he has learned his territory. How many church members fail to be an asset in the kingdom because they do not know the territory?

How shall we become intelligent stewards of the unsearchable riches of God's grace? If we are pastors we must read the Acts of the Modern Apostles as faithfully as we read the Acts of the Ancient Apostles. Our leadership must be enriched with the world-view of the common task. Our thinking must be cosmopolitan and our sympathies world wide. If we are lay people we must demand that our church equip itself in that very place where most of our churches are so pitifully weak. Most churches have a good Bible school. Most churches have a good pastor. But neither the pastor nor the Bible school can adequately care for the missionary education of the people. Some churches have mission bands for children, world-wide guilds for girls, mission study classes for women and occasionally for young people and once in a hundred times for men. All this points in the right way. Every church should have an organized school of missions. It should not be a spasmodic affair meeting for five weeks in October and five more weeks in February. It should be as thorough-going as the Bible school. We may leave it to our authorities in the realm of education to guide us in the matters of detail but this we all can see that it should be graded for ages, varied to meet the tastes of different people, scheduled to meet at times convenient for its members, and should be included in the church's budget every year. In small churches the pastor with one or two devoted leaders can conduct it. In larger churches it will constitute a field for varied service in the reading of stories, the production of dramatics, the making of tours and the preparation of papers. In our great wealthy churches there should be an assistant employed for just this purpose.

Among the other things that our lack of knowledge hides from us is the fact that we have at our promotion headquarters in New York a department of missionary education. Its comparative insignificance speaks volumes to explain the discouragements that attend our kingdom work. The department of missionary education should become one of the great agencies of our convention like the mission boards or the Publication Society. Some day it will be so. Then we will be a people who know, and because we know we will pray, and because we pray we will give and because we give we will seek to save our straying brethren. Then we will have reached the objective which the General Promotion Board has set for us that every member of every church shall be (1) an informed member, (2) a praying member, (3) a giving member, (4) a soul winner—knowing his survey, and all of the accomplishments to date and the scope of the unfinished task, praying intelligently every day for the men and the women on the fields and in the schools and proving himself a builder and not a destroyer of the kingdom because he knows.

Making the Minister the Goat

A CORRESPONDENT expresses his amazement that clear-headed women and long-headed business men should find it a problem to discover ways and means for carrying forward our missionary enterprises. It is a perfectly simple matter, the writer indicates. Cut the salaries of every one from the general director to the janitor in the local church. Salaries were raised during war times now let them be reduced. The communication is in good spirit and deserves consideration.

It is true that many ministers, perhaps most ministers and general workers, received an increase in salary during the past four or five years. This is to the lasting credit of the churches. Ministers and missionaries found themselves with greatly increased costs of living and little or no reserve upon which to draw. Salaries have been raised. Have the increases equaled those in other lines of activity? How does the salary of the ministers and other denominational workers compare with those in other lines of service requiring equal preparation and carrying like responsibility? It will not be difficult for any man who wants an answer to these questions to find that answer from disinterested sources.

For the sake of the argument, however, let us grant that this proposed reduction is warranted by the facts and should be made in the interest of the missionary work of the denomination. Unless it is found that the salary increases are greater than in other professions and callings and unless the scale of salaries for ministers, missionaries and general workers is higher than in these other professions and callings, the proposed decrease or cut should not be greater than the reduction in wages of others who enjoyed increased income during and since the war. Mr. Samuel Gompers within the past fortnight had occasion to congratulate the American Federation of Labor for its loyalty and solidarity. He said that for more than a year concerted efforts had been made to reduce wages and in some cases even destroy the unions themselves but in spite of constant hammering the wages of its members had not been reduced on an average of more than 5 per cent. If this is true, and who is better able to speak for labor, then in all fairness the salaries of our ministers and other workers should not be reduced by more than that amount.

Our brother is on the wrong track. His method is not as simple as he thinks it is. The reduction would make no appreciable impression on our financial problem. On the other hand, it would at once place very many of our workers under the necessity of supplementing their income from other sources. It would tend to destroy the morale of the workers, and make it difficult or impossible for them to meet their own pledges to the work of the denomination. The minister can be counted upon to do his part. He has sacrificed and is ready to sacrifice but the Baptist denomination will never consent to any attempt to make him the scapegoat.

Have you studied the tables which appear in THE BAPTIST each month? There is abundant food for meditation and material for exhortation. These tables show what each state has pledged to the N. W. M., what each state has paid and the balance due to date. What we need at once is an "I-Will-Pay-Up Campaign." If we will pay what we deliberately promised to pay we can maintain our missionary work, reduce our debts and have a splendid sum for brand new work. This is our present task. No church should for a moment stoop to reduce the salary of the pastor or janitor until every other way has been closed. A few members may have met with financial reverses or death. How about the tens of thousands of new members who have been received into church membership? How about those who were in straitened circumstances when the canvass was made but who are now prospering? We can, by paying up, hold our missionary work steady, pay our debts and make progress. In the name of God and dying men, let us do it.

The Pulpit Committee

WHO is there in our churches who craves membership on the pulpit committee? If there be such a person it doubtless indicates his immaturity or inexperience. And yet we must have pulpit committees unless we chance to be members of those rare organizations whose pastors are called for life. Short pastorates, however, are the rule and pulpit committees are therefore necessary.

In the church calendar of the Temple Church of Charlestown, W. Va., we find the names of the pulpit committee appointed and "charged with the sacred responsibility of discovering and recommending to the church the person of God's choice to succeed to the pastorate." The chairman announced in the calendar that it would be the policy of the committee to release no information except through the chairman, by vote of the committee; to make their recommendations upon the basis of a man's record and after personal conference, without having any person preach as a candidate; that no recommendation will be made except by unanimous vote of the committee; that the committee earnestly solicits the fullest possible suggestions from every member of the church.

This method of procedure may be a little hard on the spell binder and the man who has little to commend him except excuses for an unfruitful ministry, but it is manifestly fair to the man who has proved his worth by his works. This method should not confine any committee to ministers in certain sets or sections. There are today some big men in little churches. Men who have done and are doing big things for God and their communities. Many of these men are now due for advancement. They are prepared for the larger task. We rejoice to find that large numbers of our churches are adopting sane methods for securing pastors and at the same time recognizing the task as a "sacred responsibility."

Christianity and Industry.

THE red-blooded Christian minister will not attempt to shut himself from the industrial strife which is everywhere. He cannot, if he would. The members of his church and congregation are involved. Mere platitudes, he knows, will not avail. He must do his best to help his people to be Christians in their attitude and acts.

A minister of this type writes, "Why so little in our Christian publications on the two controversies—the coal strike and the railroad strike? Many of us would like something said in the spirit of Jesus, making plain the true issues involved. May we not have some help?"

The minister wants to help his church and he realizes that he needs help. Such relief can only come from men who have made it their business to study economic and social conditions. Such a man is Prof. Albion W. Small who writes in the American Journal of Sociology: "As I have said, of late there has been no lack of Christian declaration that Christianity, whether church or unchurched, must make the cause of economic justice its own. Yet evidence is still lacking that the leading layman in the American churches are willing to throw their influence in favor of recognizing the problem of economic justice as the chief spiritual issue of our period. It remains to be seen whether the balance of power will apply the full force of organized Christianity to investigation and settlement of that problem."

"This situation is the more sinister because of the very advantage of the Christian position today over that which it has ever occupied before. Christians are more miscellaneous in the world, and of the world, than they have ever been. Christians are relatively much better able than they have ever been to know the world. Christians cannot be excused on the ground of inability to understand the tides of the world's affairs. If the Christian layman of America should in effect take the position that economic justice is no pressing business of organized Christians, that attitude would amount to another betrayal of our Lord with a kiss."

"The very fact that American Christianity today has the use of the most capable mechanism ever within human control for registering the heart beats of humanity, and for checking up the thoughts of humanity, lays upon American Christians the most authentic duty ever chartered. Our extraordinary resources are our unique commissions to recognize our responsibility in the big moral problem that distinguishes our time."

"I want to avoid stating that problem in any terms which might imply a snap judgment about the solution of the problem. On the other hand, I should be a traitor to my generation if I failed to voice my belief as clearly as I can. It seems evident to me that not only Russians but Americans are already in the process of mobilization for a more radical 'irrepressible conflict' than the impending issue for which that phrase was coined before our civil war. At one extreme of our American economic and religious thinking are the comparatively few whose social unrest can express itself in no more intelligent creed than Proudhon's barbarism, 'All property is robbery.' At the other extreme are men whose attitude involves a thousandfold greater menace to present and future public welfare, men who, many of them unconsciously, are parts of a malign economic and political and social connivance to outlaw every one who believes that there is anything whatever at fault with our present property system. Between these two extremes the great majority are trying to find their way out of different degrees of partial consciousness that something is wrong with our present property system. Middle-class Americans today are rapidly reaching the conclusion that the typical good man for our time is contrasted with the bad man of our era by his will to do his part toward finding out what this property wrong is and how it may be righted."

"American Christianity is equipped as never before for decisive action in the economic drama now unfolding. Christianity cannot be a neutral. Christianity cannot be a noncombatant. In spite of itself, whether it will or no, Christianity must give aid and comfort to one or the other of the belligerents. The struggle is already on. It will never be called off until its causes are removed. The inevitable conflict in its present stage is between the men who are for and those who are against critical examination of the entire foundation and superstructure of existing property rights."

"Every mentally and morally adult American knows that the surest progress will be made toward the settlement of this conflict if it is kept within the limits of our established law and order. There is a tendency in human affairs which closely resembles the physical law that action and reaction are equal. Indeed, in human affairs violence generates a power of continuance which gives it an endurance beyond that of physical law detached from human will. So long as men depend upon violence in place of reason to establish their rights, instead of setting up a reign of right they consign themselves to a perpetual reciprocating motion of wrong, and for long periods it may be even cumulative and accelerated motion. On the other hand, the only fair prospect of confining the present conflict within the limits of established law and order will appear when we are sure that all the resources of our law and order are to be used in promotion of the democratic inquiry as to what our next type of law and order ought to be. Whoever fails to see this is blind as the czar and the kaiser and yesterday's counter-revolutionists in Berlin."

Pampered, Not Spoiled

THIS issue carries the announcement of the state setting-up conferences. It is not possible to overestimate the value of such gatherings. Pastors and laymen are asked at their own expense to attend these meetings. It will mean effort and in many cases sacrifice but our people have the work of the kingdom on their hearts and they will be there. "During the early days of the New World Movement which were also the heydays of the Interchurch World Movement, we almost spoiled our constituency by paying the traveling expenses of the people who attended the conferences," writes one of our well-known workers. Not spoiled, just pampered.

The Stewardship of Prayer

Address delivered before the Thirty-first Annual Convention, B. Y. P. U. of A.

By EMORY W. HUNT

PRAYER is the supreme opportunity and privilege of the human spirit. It belongs to us all. Everybody prays. Man has been defined as "a praying animal." We may think we have found exceptions here and there, but they are exceedingly rare. All pray "in a pinch." When the storm gets bad; when the doctor comes two or three times a day and there is little encouragement to give; when we are about to "go over the top" in the cold clammy gray of an early morning and are wondering whether we shall ever come back; then we all pray. It is the universal refuge of the children of the Father.

Yet while the possibilities of it uplift us and allure us, the problems of it puzzle and baffle us. In some mental moods we conclude that there is no need of prayer; in others, that there is no use of it.

Challenge to a Skeptic

A study of prayer is difficult. We reach our conclusions about it only by experience, and it is an experience which defies analysis. One who has had the experience does not need much exposition. One who lacks the experience does not understand the exposition. A wise French priest who was challenged by a skeptic to debate the subject of prayer replied, "Go and pray twenty years, then come and we will talk about it."

Yet we sorely need direction in the exercise of this supreme function of the soul. It was doubtless with a keen feeling of need that the disciples came to Jesus with the request "Lord, teach us to pray." We cannot do better than to follow the suggestions of his reply.

Perhaps our first question should be, What is prayer? We may find our clue to the answer in the first words of Jesus' reply to the request of his disciples. "Our Father" gives us its atmosphere. We come home and climb the stairs, and go into Father's room and look up into his face. Prayer is the establishment of real relations with God. As with any real friend, these relations may be expressed in a variety of ways. Nothing kills them more surely than formalism or conventionality of any sort. A famous Christian on closing a day of serious and earnest work closed his eyes with this simple but inclusive prayer: "Father, I thank thee that we are on the same good terms."

It will be obvious that prayer of this sort is the peculiar right of the child who acknowledges his relationship to the Father. There is no assurance in the Bible that the prayer of any other will be heeded. If we ask who has the right to pray, we may answer, every soul, provided we begin with the prayer of the publican "God be merciful to me, the sinner." (Revised Version, margin.)

We must begin by the establishment of real and mutual relations with the Father.

It will be obvious that if we are in right relations with our Father, we shall share his purpose:

(1) For ourselves. Our Father is more concerned with what we are than with what we have. He abhors that which is evil, and especially when it threatens his children. We are having no fellowship with God unless we have a supreme desire for personal holiness and wish to be like our Father. Wanting this, we are not in the right position to pray.

(2) For the world. We are assured that this is his chief concern. For it he made his greatest gift, his only begotten Son. We have nothing in common with our Father unless we share in this interest. If our anxiety stops with our own interests and does not reach to his, we have forfeited our fellowship with him. We are not in a position to pray. We cannot be right with God unless we are right in our attitude to fellowman. "If thou bring thy gift to the altar (proposing to pray) and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way (postponing the prayer); first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matthew 5:23-24.)

A thoughtful reading of the seventeenth chapter of John will find in it a notable illustration of prayer as the expression of fellowship with the Father. This is the real "Lord's prayer." There is in it scarcely a single request, only that his followers should be kept from the evil, but it is a marvelous illustration of real fellowship and sharing of purposes and the full acceptance of the Father's will.

In the presence of it, any thought of prayer as simply a scheme to secure the gratification of our own wish becomes impossible. We appreciate something of why we are taught to pray "in the name of Jesus." Praying in his name, we cannot be thinking simply of ourselves.

Hindrances

It will help to a practical study of prayer if we consider the hindrances which we experience. It is one of the most effective hindrances if we have little sense of need. The sun shines brightly, the grass and trees are green, we feel strong and are confident, our loved ones are well, our interests appear secure, no acute sense of failure or of sin is giving us pain. We have not come face to face with the facts about ourselves. Blessed hunger and thirst which declare our need and bring us back to the Father's presence.

Then, mental puzzles announce themselves and require to be solved before we can heartily pray. It is not so in electricity; it is not so in medical science; it is not so anywhere in physical nature; but in religion we have a habit of feeling that things which we cannot explain are therefore unreal.

We have not considered how few things we can explain. Indeed, we can answer very few of the questions which concern life. We do not understand the green of the grass nor why it produces coats of different colors on the animals who eat it. Our use of the electric light, or the benefit of medicine, do not require us to understand their processes.

We cannot follow with full explanation every step in our communication with any friend. We utter our wish out into the air. Its vibration strikes our friend's ear and is somehow translated to the auditory nerve which somehow transmits something to the great nerve center which we call the brain. Our friend begins to think along the line of our thought and his thought is presently translated into action; but we cannot any more explain the processes by which this is brought about than we can explain prayer. In these days of the wireless telephone, which may be attuned to receive the messages throbbing through the ether or may fail to get them through the receiver's own fault, the mental puzzles connected with prayer can cast no doubt upon its reality. The soul's need is beyond question. Experience finds that the need is satisfied. As it is concerned both with life and with God, it is not strange that we cannot answer all of its questions.

One of the Oldest Hindrances

One of the oldest hindrances of prayer is that we are cherishing wrong purposes. Our wishes are not looking in the right direction. The Psalmist understood it: "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear." The prophet Isaiah represents God as warning the people: "When ye spread forth your hands I will hide mine eyes from you. Yea, when ye make many prayers I will not hear."

In one of the letters of Peter there is a passage which gives strong emphasis here. In the third chapter of his first letter he is giving an exposition of the ideal relations between husband and wife. After giving some injunctions to the wife, he turns to the husband. We can think of several reasons why it is well for a husband to be decent to his wife, but I doubt if any of us would fail to be surprised at the one to which Peter makes appeal in the seventh verse: "That your prayers be not hindered."

The church comes together and prays for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in preparation for a series of evangelistic meetings. What is the real objective in the minds of the various members who join in the prayer? Some have been known to exhibit the fact that they were hoping that an increase in the number of members would reduce the financial burden. A spiritual X-ray apparatus might have brought forth other exhibits, all symptoms of self-interest.

Sometimes there is nothing worse about us than indifference, but this is quite as serious a bar to prayer. It is not that we have a wrong purpose, but that we have no purpose at all.

This lack is sometimes exhibited in the very form of public prayer. When we are dead in earnest we are not repetitious; we are not satisfied with words. When in public prayer one requests that God will "guide and direct us," there is reason to doubt whether the petitioner means either one seriously. His thought is not preceding his words. Real prayer has no prescribed pose or formula. Whatever promotes concentration of thought and real reverence of feeling is best. For one it may be standing; for another it may be kneeling. Indeed as we are walking the street we may turn our thought to God, seeking his fellowship or appealing to him in our anxiety.

But it is not worthy prayer unless the whole being is involved in it. Thought and purpose, with energy and determination, should be characteristic of prayer. When we have entered into our closet and shut to the door, we have not only excluded the prying eyes without but we have prepared to concentrate our undivided selves, with all that we have and are. When one really prays, it

"A wholesome tongue is a tree of life," declares the wise man. And the leaves of that tree, in all the green wonder of their fragrant words, are for the healing of hurt hearts. Ah! let us see to it that this lingual tree, rooted in the soil of fair, prolific thought, is frequently shaken as we go our pilgrim ways. For fruitful words, which are indeed apples of gold in pictures of silver, cannot be hid. They may be heedlessly tossed upon the ground in wanton neglect; but the law of the final candor shall manifest their unwithering vitality; their secret, unreaching power shall be known and come to light in that far-off Spring of which all springs are the vernal prophecy."—F. W. Shannon.

is indeed an event of supreme significance. This was the announcement which the Lord made to Ananias with reference to the man whose coming to Damascus was so much dreaded. Saul had engaged in religious exercises before. He had been faithful to the temple service. He had offered sacrifices. He had said his prayers. But now the Lord announces a tremendous change: "Behold, he prayeth."

Helps

After looking frankly to our hindrances, we ought to turn to our helps. When the little child begins to reach out his hands to father and stumble toward him, he may be sure of help. And the Father does not lose interest in the appeal because it is awkward and untaught. It is encouraging to hear even such a man as Paul say, "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." (Romans 8:26.) We may not feel that we know the syntax and grammar of heaven, but that is not essential to real prayer. As our experience in the spiritual life grows our prayer life will develop also.

It is quite natural then that we should find the experience of others an important help in the training of our prayer life. There is no more valuable reading for us than Christian biography; and as we read the biography of a Christian there is no more important line of his development for us to follow than the development of his prayer life. It is well to kneel with Finney out in the woods as he is finding his peace with God; to kneel with George Müller as he is presenting to the Father the day's needs of his orphanages; to sit by the bedside of the crippled woman in England whose prayers Moody tells us were back of the great revivals there. As we find these spirits coming into real fellowship with the purposes, with the mind of God, we begin to have glimpses of the fact that it is only as we come into that relation to him that he can give things to us and do things through us.

The reverse of this fact sounds to all of our young people a most serious warning. It is that the decay of the prayer life precedes; the evil in life follows. Sometimes we have our chronology of this experience wrong. We have thought that we become involved in evil and that this affects our prayer life. Closer inquiry will reveal the fact that our prayer life had waned, had lost its interest, its earnestness of purpose, or perhaps been intermitted, before we were overcome of evil. In the presence of the Father is the place of safety.

This is indeed a great stewardship. With the possibilities of power that it holds both for ourselves and for others, it is the greatest thing we can give. A mother, whose boy had left home leaving no trace, said, "I can do nothing but pray for him now." But that was the most she could ever do. The greatest gift we can make is in prayer. The most important service we can render is in prayer. The important part of our church worship is not the sermon; it is the prayer.

In the days of royalty, if one was to be presented at court he was careful to make preparation. Costume would be prepared in accordance with requirements. Etiquette would be carefully observed.

When we are preparing to enter the throne room of the universe, we should make no less careful preparation, even though the king is our Father. We should seek the appropriate preparation both of mind and of heart. It does not require paraphernalia, but it does require that the spirit should be at home with God, in true fellowship with the Father.

Putting It Over

By ARTHUR S. PHELPS

IF I preach with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not the gift of organization, I am become but a second violin or a bass drum out of tune. And if I know all mysteries and all knowledge, but lack efficiency, my church will run down. "By ceaseless action all that is subsists." In our day, when efficiency is the key to success, and specialization in industry a requisite of production, church administration is receiving a new emphasis. There are two elements in modern church life, the element of worship and the executive element. The church of today is a plant for the manufacturing of kingdom products, a business house for carrying out God's plans for the world.

Average Church Inefficient

As we look about us at the unused material, the futile effort, the meager results, we find the average church woefully inefficient. We are met with the explanation that the heads of departments are unpaid and untrained volunteers. But that isn't so bad as it looks. If they are volunteers, it should indicate that their hearts are in it. The number of paid lay leaders is increasing. Classes for training in church efficiency, with practical modern textbooks, are springing into being on every hand. Conferences of church officials are producing excellent results. The round table has been placed beside the table of the Lord. It is an unspeakable comfort to the pastor to consult with able men who will share his load. A dead grasshopper was seen moving across the ground. The astonished pastor said: "What on earth makes that grasshopper move?" He found that an ant was pulling it. There were other ants present: they were riding on the grasshopper. The day of one-ant power must go. It has been chiefly the ant's own fault. In my first pastorate in Denver, there was a brother who used to pray for his "dear pasture;" he seemed to regard him as something to feed upon, rather than to feed the flock. At any rate he disappeared owing the pastor thirty dollars.

Inefficient men and women are thrust into important positions without studying their attributes. Nominations from the floor defeat God's plan for the individual. "Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some only grate upon you." I have seen servants riding upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth. Ignorance should not be flattered by election to an office that requires both intelligence and experience. Men are often chosen to handle the financial affairs in our churches who couldn't run a peanut stand and make it pay. Many of these are not willing to learn. Advice irritates them and makes them stubborn. They are like the man's well that was a very good well, only it froze up in the winter and dried up in summer. Love of authority is not a sufficient qualification for holding a church office. A trustee was reading aloud an account of a man whose brains were knocked out by bandits, and his little son said: "They couldn't knock any brains out of your head, could they, father?" We say such men have not the executive gift. But it can be acquired, by both pew and pulpit. That's what books are for.

PERHAPS the day will come when most churches are large enough, or combine, so that each shall have an inspirational, and an executive head. But the day is not yet, and every minister and layman must learn to achieve both of these very diverse gifts,—or go to the wall.

The Half-Way House

Another cause of inadequacy is being contented with too little. Premature contentment is born of a fifty-fifty admixture of cowardice and laziness. We read that "Terah died in Haran"—half way to the promised land. When we climbed Pike's Peak, we found many tourists staying at the "Half-Way House," one-third of the way up the mountain. I used to think that the promise: "They shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint," was an anti-climax,—flying, running, walking. But I have learned by experience and observation that it requires a good deal more strength to walk than it does to soar. Says the Bible before a critical battle, "Take the kings away and put captains in their room."

With ignorance and contentment, we must name vanity as a cause of inefficiency in church work. The ecclesiastical boss, the disturber, or the church mutineer, as Ian Maclaren calls him (or her), is spurred by vanity. He is not so eager to have the church behind him, as he is to have himself in front of the church. The church is eager for leaders, and rejoices in their leadership, but it wants leaders whose concern is for the church rather than for their place in it. Much so called zeal for church discipline is only love of authority masquerading in disguise. If a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing he deceiveth himself and often others. A church can have only one Lord, one faith, one pastor. That was a wise brother who said: "Give me your example, not your criticism," advice applicable to both pulpit and pew. You say: "I don't like my pastor, I don't like my Sunday-school superintendent, I don't like my deacons!" Maybe they don't like you either: put that down! A church can't succeed where half the members want to reign and the other half to shine. Nehemiah complained that "the nobles" put not their necks to the work of their Lord. Do you say, "I get no thanks for it?" Well—? What is your aim? A little boy, walking with his father, saw a peacock for the first time, displaying his feathery aurora borealis; and he exclaimed: "O father, look at the old hen burst into bloom!" A lady in front with an Easter bonnet on turned around and said: "Mind your own business, can't you?"

The Elements of Efficiency

The prime element is quiet thought. Think it through. The man did that who passed you on the way up. Reading begets knowledge; but thinking begets wisdom; and wisdom is greater than knowledge. There is such a thing as being an educated fool. The man who acts before he thinks, thinks afterwards—how he may undo his thoughtless action. The reason many a pastor fails to get the cooperation of the officers of his church is because he springs his plan on them in public, without consulting them about it one by one. Ideas have to simmer as much as tea. A railroad brakeman on a freight astonished me by coming to my study to consult me about modern books on the development of thought power. He had chosen the cream of such literature. And then he went on to say that he had become able to think a half-hour concentratedly on a single subject. He said—and it is true—that the average man is unable to hold his mind to one thought for two minutes; he could now do it for half an hour. And then he asked me for subjects to think about, every morning. I named two: "Think about your job, how to attain the very highest efficiency"; and "Think about your relation to God," for he was not yet a Christian. I should now add a third: "Think out a list of things that you ought to think about to make your work more effective."

A Lost Art

Meditation is a lost art. The church pastor should follow his morning devotions in his study by a half-hour of deep cogitation of some phase of his work: sermon-topics, advertising, music, calling, finances, Sunday-school, missions, pulpit prayer themes, his family life. The church officer or committee chairman may carry a note book in his pocket with some pages devoted to his duties, and enter there elements of efficiency for his own improvement. A half-hour's earnest reflection before a committee-meeting will yield a list of fifteen or twenty concrete suggestions to present for consideration. Honest thinking is hard work, and intellectual laziness is responsible for the rarity of it. The tramp said he loved work; and when they asked him why he didn't see it, he said: "Love is blind." Thoughts are deeds and may become history. When Pharaoh sought for a director of national affairs, he chose Joseph the dreamer.

The average church leader is 70 per cent grace, 23 per cent grit and 7 per cent gumption. Take the luck out of pluck. Face the undertaking or face the undertaker. The feet walk most surely the paths of power that have been under the table of conference. Don't be like that official group that, when they were told the church needed more wood, said: "We must put our heads together." They were members of the board.

It has been well said that life is a question of emphasis. He who puts secondary things first is a crank. The cause is larger than any man. Every man should be proud to help the cause. "If an angel were sent to earth, it would be indifferent to him whether he were commissioned to sit upon a throne or sweep a street-crossing." We echo the cry of Benjamin Franklin: "The day is short, the work great, the workmen lazy, the wages high, the master urgeth; up, then, and be doing."

"Up to Fifteen Per Cent"

The Great Teacher reckons no man owner of the things he has. If a man does not get this into his every-day thinking as well as practise he is apt to be led into some mighty cold corners of life.

By UNCLE HENRY

SOME folks who have written on "giving" made me feel sore as I used to be when as a boy I was scolded and sent to bed for my sins. As salesman of a great idea they were total failures. In my case they seemed so cock-sure and peevish with the man who does not agree with them. They made clear one thing, however, and that is that a man is never going to change his haphazard or selfish ways by a mere scolding.

Another bunch of "giving" propagandists tried to "Pollyanna" me out of the ability to hold on to my own. This scheme did not work either. There are things in my make-up, old habits and old reasonings, that nothing less than the slashing truth can uncover. I have been in the "Look-out for Number One" school too long for simple, syrupy niceness to have any effect whatever upon my system.

Uncle Sam gave me my original jolt on how I was dealing with my income. It began during the war. Up to then taxes had been a kind of necessary evil such as we used to consider ticks on my Texas steers. Then we got into death grips with Germany, and that kind of thing demands money and lots of it. Money looked mighty cheap when we measured it beside the lives of our own boys. We bought liberty bonds until it hurt, but it did not hurt very long. A bit of faith in Uncle Sam has brought a handsome return. It was then that it dawned on me that in the last roundup, as a loyal American in time of war, I was simply a steward with trust funds in my hands. Uncle Sam is our uncle and he has no money other than our money, just as he has no other defense in time of war than the bodies and brains of our own sons. The war was carried through on the theory that in an emergency we owe America everything we have. From all that I can gather, the hardest-headed banker in Wall Street recognized this. As to the profiteers, well, I reckon they were men without a country, even though by some slip of justice they are still allowed to vote.

Studying the Income Tax

I got my big jolt from Uncle Sam in studying up on the income tax. It said in one place, "Up to 15 per cent". Sounded like a gold brick proposition. It was hard for me to believe that Uncle Sam reckoned that a lot of hard-headed Americans would give away that percentage of their incomes each year. At first I thought I had gotten hold of the wrong income tax blank. It sounded to me like the kind to be sent exclusively to millionaires, but by inquiring around a bit, I found that "Up to 15 per cent" was on all of them. I made a study of my own giving when I found that these gifts are exempt from the tax on income.

I had always tried to give my share for the sake of the fellow out of luck or to back up the institutions that were trying to help me. In fact I felt pretty generous until I began to figure for Uncle Sam just how much I had given away, for I wanted every dollar's worth of exemption that was coming to me. I could not make it total more than 4 per cent counting church and everything. The fact is, I found most of my generosity was in good feelings. I blamed the preacher a bit for this, for he never gave us any system for giving, but praised my wife and me as about the best givers he had. I guess it came mostly from my wife with her butter and eggs. However it came about, I dug into this giving business to find out if there were any real standards for the handling of one's money besides those I had learned in the school of hard knocks. I decided to go the Great Teacher to get the facts. I had heard and read his teachings since I was

At His Feet

DO we practice the presence of Christ when we pray? Do we think ourselves and imagine ourselves into his presence?

Speaking for myself, I have found this device very helpful in my own returnings to my Saviour in prayer. And I recommend this same device to you. Make great use of the four gospels in your efforts to return to Jesus Christ. Think that you are living in Jerusalem. Think that you are one of the Twelve. Think that you are one of those amazing people who had him in their streets, and in their homes, every day. And fall down before him as they did. Speak to him as they did. Show him your palsies and your leprosies as they did. Follow him about, telling him about your sons and daughters as they did. Tell him that you have a child nigh unto death as they did.

Work your way through the gospels, from end to end; and, all the time, with a great exercise of faith, believe that he is as much with you as he was with Simon the Leper, and with the Syro-Phoenician, and with Mary Magdalene, and with Lazarus who had been four days dead, and with the thief on the cross. Read, and believe, and pray. Fall at his feet. Look up in his face."

Alexander Whyte, in "Lord, Teach Us to Pray."

a boy but I never had dug into what they meant when you apply them to the things you have. I never read any theology so I may not get all that he meant, but this is the way his teaching looks to me.

First of all, I found that he reckoned no man as the owner of the things he has. He taught that God is the owner. Nobody has a better chance to know this from experience than a farmer. He watches things grow and most of his income comes first hand out of God's sky and earth, clean money too. It did not take much of an argument to convince me that we are not owners. Then I found out that a man is a custodian of everything he has from his body to his bank account, just as we Americans found out in time of war. The Great Teacher seemed to feel that if a man does not get this into his every day thinking as well as into his practice, he is apt to be led off into some mighty cold and lonesome corners of life.

Then I went after that 15 per cent. I do not know where Congress got that measure of what a man might give. I did find out, however, that if you are going to get this matter of giving out of the mist, you have to begin to reckon in terms of figures rather than fancies. I never thought much of the old-time Jew, but I found out that for centuries he gave away 10 per cent of all his goods. When one of these Jews, a tax collector, by the way, got friendly with the Great Teacher and had him at his house for dinner, he jumped clear beyond the 10 per cent mark and voluntarily said that he was going to give back four times the amount to everybody he had bunked, besides giving one-half of all he had to the poor. And the Great Teacher seemed to think this all right.

From all that I could gather, none of these people seem to think that giving a definite proportion of what they had took away any of the satisfaction of giving but rather added to it. So my wife and I, now bookkeeping farmers under Uncle Sam, decided we would try out the idea of being bookkeeping Christians. We have not been at it long, but it is not nearly so hard as you think. Already I am losing that feeling of poverty when the church collector comes around. We are really glad to see him and he must be gladder than he used to be to see us for he does not have to witness the squirming of two souls trying to know how little they could give when they have not yet settled how much they owe.

It Is a Gift

To be frank about it, we reckon that we owe 10 per cent of our income to the welfare of the world. We do not call it a tithe for we are Americans and not Jews. It is not collected—we give it. I never thought I would get to this when I started out but it seems to be the only attitude to take and the only conclusion to reach which is in accord with the facts. I will be ready for Uncle Sam and his income blank next year, but not yet to the tune of "Up to 15 per cent."

Other interesting things have happened already. We are getting mightily interested in where and how we give our proportion. I have not changed a bit in my keenness to make my farm go the limit in bringing in income. I found that the Great Teacher never scolded or condemned people for making money. The only thing he seemed interested in was what their money was making of them.

For a good many years I have read the book of Proverbs a lot. The chap who wrote it seemed to have his feet on the earth and it is full of good horse-sense for me. Since I went into this matter of giving, however, one of its phrases means more to me than it did before. It says: "With all your getting, get understanding." I think I am beginning to get it. To tell the truth, I have a growing notion that my wife had more to do with this business of my "getting understanding" even than Uncle Sam with his "Up to 15 per cent," for she is a real student of the Great Teacher and had already practiced some of his teachings with her butter and eggs, though she didn't talk much about it. She usually is a lap ahead of your Uncle Henry.—Rural Manhood.

Stewardship Nuggets

Money may be changed into immortal form. Penny collections will never effect the evangelism of the race. Stewardship is an inherent Christian principle contained in the love of God and its expression is in the love of neighbor as of self.

Stewardship

By H. S. MYERS

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."

Lord, I cannot go, my feet are stayed, my hands are tied; my brother goes."

"And does he go alone? Go thou with him with heart and gifts and prayers."
"Go ye."

Grist for the Stewardship Mill

1. A man likes to invest money in his own business. The Lord's business is your business. Are you investing in it?

2. A man likes to feel that his business pays. The Lord's business pays. Have you a share in it?

3. A man likes to earn and spend for those he loves. Do you love the Lord? Are you earning and spending for him?

4. A race track man, lively in speeding and spending, was converted. As he was about to enter the baptistry, a friend said, "Jake, you have left your purse in your pocket." "On purpose," said Jake, "I want my pocketbook baptized with me." The writer testifies that it became a consecrated pocketbook.

Spoiled Christians

By GEORGE E. BURLINGAME

ATYPE not to be deplored but to be desired! Not to be condemned but to be cultivated! The success of the New World Movement and of the kingdom of God depends upon the multiplication of "spoiled Christians."

Spoil: the pelt of animals slain in the chase; then, the armor of a fallen foe; then, the booty which a robber takes from his victim; then, whatever is conceded or surrendered under constraint of any kind. He who is thus stripped is thereby "spoiled," that is, despoiled, of his possessions.

"Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your possessions, knowing that ye have for yourselves a better possession and an abiding one." (Hebrews 10:34). Those early Christians, for the sake of Christ, in the cause of Christ, submitted to the loss of their material possessions, glorying in their greater and more enduring wealth in him. Indeed, they exulted in the privilege of sharing the spirit of that supreme act of self-spoilation on behalf of lost sinners wherein Christ emptied himself and went to the cross, becoming poor for our sakes that we might become rich. Held up and mastered and despoiled by that bold robber, Love ("The love of Christ constraineth us"), they gladly yielded to the divine compulsion of a spiritual passion which led them to suffer loss, impoverishment, spoliation, that through their poverty the world might be made rich in the grace of Christ.

Penny collections will never effect the evangelization of the race. Left-overs and haphazard spasms of benevolence will never provide the resources needed for the establishment of Christ's kingdom in the world. Only when Christians take joyfully the spoiling of their possessions will the New World Movement move to victory. Here and there a Barnabas must even consent to the consecration of his capital, finding joy in devoting his farm or his fortune to the cause of Christ, in order to build institutions and found endowments and launch movements as the instruments for creating throughout the world a civilization Christian in spirit and in passion. Spoiled Christians are the hope of the New World Movement.

The Unused Motor

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON

WE mean money. Hoarded capital accumulates; invested money multiplies, but the addition or multiplication is all in kind. The Bible teaches us how not only to increase money but to transform and transmute it into something far more valuable. Money, which is material and temporal, may be changed into immaterial and immortal forms. It may be made a motor for the world-wide machinery of evangelization. Carefully and prayerfully put into service, it not only increases indefinitely, but it makes its possessor practically omnipresent and omnipotent. He is wherever his money is, and is doing whatever his money is doing. Long after he dies, he continues to live in the agencies he sets in motion by this mighty means of service to God and man.

Sarah Hosmer, a poor working woman of Lowell, Mass., earning small wages in a factory, saving her pennies, five times gave ten pounds, and so supported as many students in the Nestorian Seminary, and helped to put them in the field as native pastors in Persia. After she had passed sixty years, the appetite for doing good had only grown more insatiate; and, though herself living in an attic, she took in sewing till she saved enough to put one more Nestorian preacher in the field. Her money was no unused motor. It set in motion six missionaries of the cross, and all the subordinate wheels of Christian churches and schools, of which they in turn became the movers.

Princess Eugenie, of Sweden, sacrificed her family jewels to build a hospital upon an island off the coast, where poor cripples might be nursed and healed. Her brother, the king, thought her crazy to sell the crown jewels that had fallen to her share. But they were to her the unused motor, that, properly applied and connected with the benevolent work, might yet set in motion a thousand blessed wheels of help and healing. And Eugenie got her reward even in this life. A dying woman in that hospital one day held her hand; and, as her end drew near, wept over it tears of joy for the Christ she had found through Eugenie's personal pleading. "Bless God for sending you to this lonely island, lovely princess! But for you I should never have loved Jesus, and my soul would have been lost!" And as she spoke, she gasped and died.

Upon the princess's hand lay the tears of that dying woman like drops of dew. And Eugenie, looking up to heaven, said:

"Lord Jesus, I sold my jewels for thee, but in those glistening tears I have them back, and oh how much more beautiful than those I formerly possessed!"

Ourselves, Our Tasks, Our Gifts

By H. S. STEWART.

Matthew 22:37-39

THE great Philadelphia-Camden bridge now building is to have a span between towers of 1750 feet. To support the immense traffic between the two cities and states, the bridge will be suspended from two cables. Each cable will consist of 16,500 strands of wire and each wire will be anchored in the rock at either end. The Christian church is the bridge between the world and the kingdom of heaven, between sinful humanity and the heart of God. Over it must go the vast traffic of the kingdom. The strands that support it are the lives of Christians, and it is necessary for the strength of the bridge that each supporting life be anchored in the Rock of Ages at one end, and in a proper regard for the self at the other. It is a sound Christian principle that the proper regard for the self is the standard of one's love for his neighbor, and an expression of his love for God. We may well begin any thought of stewardship with the thought of ourselves,

I. Ourselves the Stewards

Jesus says, "What shall a man give in exchange for his life?" Pringle-Pattison says, "The man to whom his own life is a triviality is not likely to find the meaning of anything else."

1. The man who fails in duty is usually the man who has not a right regard for himself. Murder and suicide are commonly linked in newspaper reports. The man who is willing to throw away his own life is ready to take the life of another. The man who has no regard for property, who will not work for its attainment is likely to be the robber, whereas the man who has a careful regard for his own things will also regard the property rights of others. He who has no proper regards for his own place in the kingdom of God, is likely to fail to give for the work of the kingdom as he should, or to pay with scrupulous care the pledges he makes. We need a right self-estimate as a foundation for our standards of duty.

2. Christianity gives to a man a right self-estimate. Materialism, naturalism, pessimism and pantheism belittle man. Christianity dignifies man. It gives the hope of immortality; it sets on him the consciousness of God's valuation of him, in that Christ has come from God to him as his Saviour. It introduces him to an eternal relationship, making him a child of God.

3. Jesus interprets the conception of being a "child of God" in the words, "I do always the will of him that sent me."

So Christianity gives a man the right self-estimate as a start for moral relations. It makes him realize both his great dignity and in the humblest fashion, his entire indebtedness for what he is. How shall he meet his obligation? What shall he do as a child of God?

II. Our Tasks

1. Jesus teaches that the love of God is fulfilled in the love of the neighbor. The duty of loving one's neighbor is set forth in terms of kingdom service.

2. The man who appreciates the value God sets on his own life is in a position to appreciate the worth of his fellowmen and to serve them.

3. Our task will never be completed till the kingdoms of this world are the kingdom of Christ. This task is an unchanging one through the ages.

a. The conception of the kingdom has been set forth by Jesus and does not change. Hence—

b. No human actions can alter it. Putting the clock an hour ahead in no way affects sun time. Votes in conventions in no way affect the divine idea of the kingdom of God. However far we wander from the fullness of Jesus' program, we shall always come back to find it unchanged. Hence our obligations as Christian stewards are not dependent on the resolutions of moments of human enthusiasm, but rather on the fixed relation of the child of God to the kingdom of God. We must give ourselves to Christ, hence to the service of the kingdom. This brings us to the matter of our gifts.

III. Our Gifts

1. Most of us think of our gifts as gifts of money. What is money?

a. My money is myself transformed into a means of exchange. I put my time, my muscle, my thought into my work, hence I put myself into my work. For this self in my work men give me money. I have then in my money myself in a convenient form of exchange. I can now do as I please with myself, for all things are sold for money.

b. Money is myself extended. I cannot fulfil Christ's command in China through my body, but I can through my money. Hence the command to preach the gospel everywhere is a command to me, for I can fulfil it.

2. Since my money is myself in the form of a medium of exchange, I cannot give myself to Christ and withhold my money. I am of necessity a steward of my means because as a Christian I reckon myself a child of God.

Stewardship is not an arbitrary demand made by men on men, it is an inherent Christian principle contained in the love of God and its expression in the love of the neighbor as the self.

Proportionate Giving

By ROBERT E. SPEER.

SYSTEMATIC giving is only methodical giving. It does not follow that it is righteous giving—adequate giving. We might lead ourselves into an injurious situation if all that we are accomplishing now should make habitual with the church an inadequate performance of her duty. It seems to me that the church stands face to face with a very dangerous situation in this regard, and that we are bound to take it upon us now to re-examine here our undertaking and to see whether we are actually leading the churches to adopt those elements of a program which are most vital and fundamental ones. And now is the time for us to do this because it is a fact that the introduction of one new radical idea makes it easier to introduce also other ideas, when the mind of the church is jarred open and she begins to adopt plans of action that come closer to the ideal.

The question that has troubled a great many men throughout the church with regard to our present movement is, how can we combine with the general acceptance of the method of systematic giving the acceptance also of a living principle of proportionate giving. For, after all, system is only a matter of method, not essentially a matter of principle. What we wish to introduce is some living and uplifting principle. We believe that this can only be found in the acceptance of the Christian principle of stewardship; of giving not only on a methodical basis but on a basis of just proportion. But in this as in everything, general principles do not sufficiently bite. The principle needs to carry with itself some form of application by

Nine Characteristics of Giving

I Cor. 16:2; 2 Cor. 8:1-15; 2 Cor. 9:7.

(1) Personal "Each one of you." (2) Consecrated. "First gave their own selves to the Lord." Start right. (3) Proportionate. "As he may prosper." (4) Systematic. "On the first day of the week." (5) Voluntary. "A willing mind." (6) Sacrificial. "Gave out of their poverty." (7) Joyful. "Their overflowing joy." (8) Urgent. "Praying us to receive the gift." Giving is a thing not to be avoided but sought. (9) Growing. "The grace of God which is being bestowed."

"For his bounty,
There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,
That grew the more by reaping" which it can be easily related at once to action on the part of common Christian men and women. What I want to say is in behalf of the acceptance of the principle of tithe-giving as the practical basis of proportionate giving.

Let us lay aside at the outset all legal ideas. There is no such thing as the law of the tithe. There is a principle of the tithe. Let us dismiss from our minds once and for all every legalistic and statutory idea in the kingdom of God. The wrong of committing murder does not consist in the fact that the ten commandments forbid it. The ten commandments forbid it because it is wrong. Right or wrong lie on fundamental foundations beneath statutes. They are right and wrong not because God says so, but because of God's character. This matter of tithe-giving we are not to think of as a symbol of legal Judaism. Its claim upon us rests upon moral considerations that would have made tithe-giving the duty of man even if the Jewish law had not been enacted. Revelation does not create moral ideals; it only expresses moral ideals that lie in the will of God. If the principle of the tithe is to be operative in the present day accordingly it must be operative because of the broad moral considerations that underlie it, which, as a matter of fact, made the principle of tithe-giving operative long before it was ever expressed in any of the legal enactments of the Old Testament legislation. We read in the Epistle to the Hebrews that the principle was held to have existed in life long before the legislation came into being. Just so the observance of the Sabbath Day does not rest for us upon the fourth commandment; it would be just as valid and real to us today if we had never had any decalogue at all. The life principle and privilege of the tithe is a working scheme of proportionate giving by which we can make the principle of stewardship actual and living.

Sermon Outline on Stewardship

By F. W. AINSLIE

"I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish. So as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you also who are at Rome."—Romans 1:14.

Introduction:

This is the language of a "bondservant."

Also of a man of "unceasing prayer"—

Are these words cheap because of this?

Loyalties or royalties, which make a man rich? Matt. 6:24; Luke 12:13-15.

Point One:

This is a personal declaration.

It is a joyously free declaration. No "sweating" to obtain it. His sense of obligation to others grew out of his sense of the gospel's great value to himself. Too great, abundant and precious to be kept. Phil. 3:7-11.

Feeling like the lepers. II Kings 7:9-10. I Cor. 9:16-23.

Point Two:

The wide distribution of these values. Compare the unequal distribution of material wealth in the United States.

Is this a sign of our estimate of the value of the gospel?

No races excluded, Greek, Barbarian, Roman.

Think of Anti-Japanese legislation, lynching.

No class distinction "wise and foolish" included. Capital and labor.

Progressive distribution of these values, "You also who are at Rome." The unoccupied territory for which Baptists are responsible, Alaska, Central America, etc.

Point Three:

The measure of Paul's consecration.

Was it 10 per cent of his income? There may be a money giving without a self-giving. I Cor. 13:3; II Cor. 8:15.

There may be a kind of self-giving without money giving. II Cor. 8:7, "this grace also."

What was the measure of Paul's consecration? 100 per cent of himself. The intrinsic value of the gospel together with its wide application constrained him to say, "as much as in me is." The love of God and the needs of men make an appeal which is irresistible.

Conclusion:

The servant attitude toward Christ made this consecration possible. When a servant holds values which he administers for his Master his sense of responsibility increases with the amount of that value.

In what manner are we revealing our sense of the value of the gospel to ourselves and to others?

Does the church find us ready with "as much as in us is?"

Is this really the measure of our value of the gospel?

Do we impress the men of the world that we put this estimate upon the gospel? We sing, "Soul and body thine to be, friends and time and earthly store—wholly thine forever more."

Do we mean it?

Twentieth Triennial Conference of German Baptist Churches of North America

By C. A. DANIEL

ST. PAUL was the place and Aug. 22-28 the date of one of the most democratic Baptist gatherings ever held. Three hundred and fifty delegates and over 500 visitors had come from all parts of the continent, the Rev. Jacob Spelcher from China, the Rev. H. Grossmann from Berlin, Germany, and Mr. Carl Fuellbrandt from Russia, to participate in the meetings and to deliberate the matters of the kingdom of God. The meetings were held in Central Presbyterian Church during the weekdays, and on Sunday the large auditorium was filled at three inspirational services.

The two German Baptist churches of St. Paul and the one church at Minneapolis had a big job to take care of all the delegates and visitors, but they did it. The mayor of St. Paul sent his representative to welcome the assembly. Rev. G. F. Stoeckmann and Rev. Wm. S. Schmitt and their congregations in St. Paul cooperated beautifully. Mr. Stoeckmann was the chairman of arrangements. Mr. Schmitt was the director of the chorus of 100 voices drawn from the two churches. The German Baptist churches are blessed with expert singers and musicians and several of these had come from a distance to grace the conference by their presence and make it a real feast of song. Animated day business sessions and great inspirational evening meetings were favored with uplifting selections by God-gifted singers such as Reuben Windsch of Philadelphia, known as "Uncle Reuben" in the East, the composer of several hymns; Prof. A. Berndt, of Chicago, baritone singer and director of the combined choruses of the German Baptist churches of Chicago; Prof. John Jaeger, of St. Paul, teacher of music and a tenor of note; the Parkston South Dakota Glee Club and several other individual singers.

Organizations

The German Baptist churches have their own organizations such as the missionary society, educational society (with its German department of the Rochester Baptist Theological Seminary for the training of young men for the ministry), publication society with publication house at Cleveland, the orphans' home society with its home at St. Joseph, Mich. There are also the ministers' pension fund, old people's home and the deaconess' home in Chicago, the old people's home at Philadelphia, and also at Portland, Ore., the young people's union home at Bradley Beach, N. J., and the girls' home at New York City. These institutions are rendering commendable service to the denomination and to their communities.

Achievements

There are about 300 German Baptist churches in North America with a membership of a little over 32,000. Over 3500 baptisms were reported. Three years ago, when the triennial conference met at the Moody Institute the denomination set out to raise $1,000,000 for missions during the next three years and $150,000 was subscribed on the floor. This enthusiasm was carried into the churches by a large committee and the pastors and was cultivated continually, members were trained to give the tenth of their income, regular weekly giving was stressed and what was the result? We had a hard time in common with all the other denominations during the past two years, but we came up over the top. Our committee reported that $1,056,000 had actually been raised. We had apportioned about $75,000 for the suffering in Europe but had actually raised a great deal more. Fully 25 per cent of the million dollars went to the suffering and needy in Europe. Our people have learned to give generously, sacrificially, willingly! Will we measure up to the goal that has been set up for the following three years?

Budget for Three Years

The following budget was accepted by the triennial conference for the years 1922-25 namely, $955,000 to be distributed as follows: Home missions $325,000, foreign missions $175,000; church edifice fund $50,000; aged ministers $40,000; ministers' pension fund $60,000; suffering and needy $75,000, making a total of $725,000 for the missionary organization. For The Rochester Baptist Theological Seminary, German department, $50,000; the publication society $25,000; widows and orphans $60,000; old people's home, Chicago, $15,000; deaconess' home, $7,000; old people's home, Philadelphia, $15,000; old people's home, Portland, Ore., $5,000, and reserve fund $45,000—a grand total of $955,00. A finance committee of fifteen men was elected to carry out this budget system. Rev. Wm. Kuhn was re-elected general missionary secretary. He had a big share in the success of the past three years. Wm. F. Grosser was re-elected treasurer. Both of these gentlemen reside in Forest Park, Ill., the headquarters of the German Baptist Missionary Society.

If not,—best gone;

Missionary Activities

This missionary organization has supported 105 missionaries in North America during the past year, among these were eighty-five missionary pastors, twelve lady missionaries, four students during the summer months, two evangelists—Rev. David Hamel, of Cleveland, and Rev. E. Umbach of Milwaukee—and two Sunday-school and young peoples secretaries, the Rev. A. P. Mihm and Rev. F. A. Bloedow.

In Europe nine men were assisted as so-called house missionaries, that is colporters in Germany, three missionary pastors in Switzerland; two in Roumania; fourteen in Bulgaria; eighteen in Poland; twelve in Siberia; two in Esthland Europe; two in South America. $25,000 were sent in to the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society for its work in heathen lands during the last three years.

The ministers' pension fund, which was launched at the triennial conference in Detroit, 1916, reported a fund of $97,662. Plans were adopted to enlist all the younger ministers as members of this fund. For those ministers who are too old to enter there is provision made through the treasury for aged ministers and many are already receiving regular stipends.

Ministers' Education

Some time was spent discussing the advisability of moving the School of the Prophets to some more westerly point, but it involved so much legal difficulty and also such outlay for new location and buildings, that the matter was dropped for the present. There are at present about forty-seven students at the Seminary including the twelve new men who will enter in September. More time than ever is given to equip the men to preach in both languages. The following form the faculty: A. J. Ramaker, D.D.; Lewis Kaiser, D.D.; F. W. C. Meyer; G. A. Schneider; Otto Koenig. The triennial conference voted the first two professors, who have served the denomination for a period of over thirty years each a year's leave of absence. Last year a large committee of laymen and ministers had met at the invitation of the faculty to look into the teaching of the school and to report to the denomination. This was done and a unanimous vote of approval and satisfaction was made. The triennial conference also cleared the atmosphere by a hearty vote of confidence in our theological school and its teachers. Men are needed badly in many of the pastorless churches and two addresses were given, which stressed the need of heeding the divine call and the cultivation of the proper atmosphere in the churches to make it possible for young men to follow. The Rev. S. H. Lohr of Emery, S. D., and Rev. J. G. D. Raewel, of Detroit, spoke inspiringly on this subject.

Young People's and Sunday-school work.

The denomination realizes that it must put much emphasis upon religious education and work among the children. Eighty per cent of the baptisms come from the Bible school. Much time was given to the discussion of a proper young people's and Sunday-school union and an organization was formed, which gives promise of more effective work in the future. A council was formed to guide this work. The Rev. A. P. Mihm and Rev. F. A. Bloedow, were re-elected as religious secretaries and will devote their whole time to this work. An English paper is to be published bi-monthly and an editor to be selected to devote his whole time to this organ, which is to meet the demand of our people who are able to read only English.

The Publication Work

Rev. Gottlob Fetzer was re-elected to the editorship of the Sendbote and the many periodicals of the society; Mr. H. P. Donner was re-elected business manager of the publication society. Though our entire church membership is less than 33,000 we have a subscription list of 7,363 to the weekly paper called Sendbote (Messen-

The Swatow Typhoon

By RANDALL T. CAPAN

The letter accompanying this article from Randall T. Capen reads: "Enclosed find our appeal for help. I wanted to get it before our constituency in the quickest possible way and therefore send it to you. I shall start this to you on the mail today—the first since the catastrophe. We have not been able to get a cable to board of the Foreign Society because the wires are all down. We are stunned but are working like beavers to make the best of the disastrous situation. Some of us had very narrow escapes but all missionaries and families are safe, so far as we know." This letter was dated at Swatow, Aug. 3.

THE whole house lay on top of them. Two stalwart students of our academy, shovelling, hoeing, and lifting the debris in the drenching, tearing rain, shouted to me that they could get no one to help rescue. Carl and I had dared to venture forth in the hurricane which, at six o'clock this fearful morning, was still twisting off the limbs and hurling them like splinters from a smithy's emery wheel in every direction. I dashed home for my two hoes and spade. Several passers at last joined our squad. And horrors! The old grandfather had smothered, pinned like a vice between the crash of the attic boards and the adamant floor. The young mother and her three lay fixed against the wall. But whines and a cry! A bedraggled black puppy and a white one crawled out half dead. Then the only human alive, the tiny baby, backed out its plump, little, bare legs close from under the mother's breast. Ah, these mothers who take the death force of life's crash and, every time, give life's last for their beloved!

No roof on the whole compound left; pines, banyans, cotton trees and bamboos choking every path; these tell the story of the nerve-wrecking, all-night fight. At midnight the roar of mounting gales and slamming blinds pulled us out of deepest, dazed sleep to jump for the typhoon bars. We reinforced the windows not a minute too soon, for the trees were going and our chimney smashed through the roof. We moved Helen from near there to the parlor only a few minutes before the ceiling plaster banged down. The east blind in the sun-room tore off. Amidst cracking glass and swirling tiles we braced the doors against the monstrous puffs with trunks, tables and bookcases. At times the floors heaved like the chest of a huge giant and fell away like waves. Water came through everywhere. It seemed as though we were about to be blown from these hill tops into the bay. We thought ourselves of all men most miserable.

But indeed we weren't! After standing by the old grandmother digging out her dead, we knew. A whole side of Pastor Tsu's house blew out clean, so that one looks in on his family upstairs and down as many a Susie looks into the upstairs and down of her doll house. The old boarding-school buildings lie open to the sky and the splendid women's school almost the same. Mr. Page and Mr. Carman have had to abandon their homes to live at Miss Fleming's far less leaky domicile. Even the new Water's house hasn't a room with a roof. The Bjelke family have fled from there to the Sherwin bungalow. And the academy! Ah me! All 350 students are due back from their summer vacation in six weeks, with fifty prospective new ones in addition. Yet not a roof remains to cover their heads. The theological seminary and the girls' school roofs are gone, too. It is a nightmare. The typhoon attacked us first from the north. Then, after a fateful lull—that ominous, sickening kind of a calm that comes only at such times when calls of distress pierce from all directions with weird shouts of fire or calls for help sounding out from the near blackness, yet no one knows from where—then came the complete surprise attack from the south. The whole kitchen end of the Ashmore house was bowled down the valley. Proctor Dealey Fu was sleeping on the third floor of our new stone dormitory in a section of the hall set off by wooden partitions. Five minutes after he had left that untenable spot this whole apartment—clothes, boxes, and all—went through the roof.

The Chinese tell us how the only thing that saved our public-spirited chief of police from a like fate was his faithfulness to duty. He ordered his full force out into the black night leading them himself. They labored, rescued, and labored for so many that, at the time of the worst of the fitful gales, one hundred or more had been welcomed to his small headquarters. Now typhoons have a characteristic way of trying their best to lift the floor and thus blow the roof upwards from its stays. In other houses of the neighborhood the storm had succeeded by this method of madness; but here its giant shoulders were overmatched. The united weight of the men, women, and children whom he had succored, and who lay resting safely on his floor, was too great for the fierce ogre's strength. Thus his house alone still stands with roof intact. You see, our Chinese have their heroes.

ASHMORE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY AFTER THE TYPHOON

The New World Movement

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

Setting-Up Conferences

I. Purpose of Conferences

1. To give information regarding the promotional program for the year.
2. To assist the state conventions in instructing and training a group of leaders who are to be used in setting up the campaign in the associations.
3. To give special instruction regarding the intensive stewardship campaign for October.
4. To give new inspiration and vision.

II. Who Should Attend the Conferences?

1. Officers of State Convention.
2. Members of the State Convention and State Promotion Boards.
3. Officers and members of the national and district boards residing within the state.
4. Associational promotional committees, or, from each association, a representative of the laymen, a representative of the women's organization, a representative of the young people, and a pastor.

III. General Features of the Program for State Setting-Up Conferences

1. Inspirational missionary addresses.
2. Addresses by the pastors who have just returned from touring Europe as representatives of the Foreign Mission Society.
3. Consideration of the aspects of the promotional program for the year.
4. The discussion of stewardship.
5. A conference on plans and methods.
6. A big laymen's supper.
7. A big women's supper.

IV. Tentative Schedule of Dates and Places for Conferences. Given at this time for information. Please do not announce any of these dates until they have been confirmed.

Maine, Waterville, Sept. 18-19; New Hampshire, Exeter, Oct. 3-4; Massachusetts, Worcester, Sept. 21-22; Rhode Island, Providence, Sept. 19-20; Connecticut, New Haven, Sept. 21-22; North Dakota, Fargo, Sept. 18-19; Minnesota, Minneapolis, Sept. 19-20; South Dakota, Sioux Falls, Sept. 21-22; Nebraska, Lincoln, Oct. 12; Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Sept. 18; Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, Sept. 19-20; West Virginia, Parkersburg, Sept. 20-21; Ohio, Columbus, Sept. 21-22; Wisconsin, Milwaukee, Sept. 25-26; Indiana, Indianapolis, Sept. 26-27; Illinois, Chicago, Sept. 27-28; Michigan, Jackson, Sept. 28-29.

A Stewardship Program

THE accompanying program is issued by the National Continuation Campaign Committee for the use of women's societies in October (stewardship month) if they so desire.

COUNTING THE COST

1. Rich Young Man Who Counted the Cost—Luke 14:25-35

(The leader will find Dr. Poteat's leaflet, "The Camel Question," very helpful.) Short prayer, followed by the congregation singing prayerfully the following: (If the tune is not familiar it may be read in concert.)

*Open my eyes that I may see Glimpses of Truth Thou hast for me;
Place in my hands the wonderful key
That shall unclasp and set me free.*

*Silently now I wait for Thee,
Ready my God, Thy will to see;
Open my eyes, illumine me,
Spirit Divine.*

2. "A Stewardship Catechism." (The leader should read the questions, the audience the answers.)
3. Reading: "A Nickel for the Lord."
4. Talk: Some churches who counted the cost and found it worth while. (Five-minute talk.)

Helpful leaflets: "Evangelism First, but Not Forgetting Malachi 3:10"; "The Experience of Three Baptist Churches."

5. Solo: "There Is a Green Hill Far Away."
6. The Mission Fields. They didn't count the cost but still found it worth while.

7. Leader: The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein.

Congregation: Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee?

Leader: In tithes and in offering. Ye are cursed with a curse for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

Congregation: Bring ye all the tithes in the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now, herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Leader: Jesus said, Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust consume and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where thy treasure is there will thy heart be also.

Congregation: Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Leader: Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Congregation: How then shall they call on him whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?

Leader: Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper.

All: For the love of God constraineth us.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, arrived in New York on the steamship "Manchuria" Sept. 5, having spent the summer in an evangelistic preaching tour of Czechoslovakia under the auspices of the Foreign Mission Society. Although weary from their strenuous itinerary which had been arranged for them, they were nevertheless in high spirits and referred to their experience as rare privileges for bringing Gospel messages and greetings from American Baptists to the people of Czechoslovakia. They are scheduled to speak at several state conventions where our people will have an opportunity of hearing them tell the thrilling story of their experiences.

"TITHING AND SPIRITUALITY"

It is astounding to some of us that Brother Alborn of Wauwatosa, Wis., concedes in his article in your July 1 issue, that tithing produces more money for the kingdom, and yet hints that non-tithing produces more spirituality.

He unwisely jumps to the conclusion that all the shortcomings of Adventism, Doweism, and Mormonism are due to tithing. So discerning a man as he long ago should have seen that those churches make it a test of fellowship, and in order to remain in good standing they must devote the tithe to their religious body.

Baptists, and other great evangelical churches with larger liberality, do not compel the tithe or any amount; but there are many Baptist churches, and an ever-growing number of individual Baptists whose spirituality has been heightened, and whose vision broadened as never before, by consecrating at least one-tenth of their income to the Lord as a holy and reasonable minimum obligation.

I can furnish Brother Alborn the names of hundreds of individuals thus blessed, who now are making free-will offerings over and above their tithe, and whose tongues have been loosed in prayer and testimony; whose abilities have suddenly leaped forth for personal evangelism, who before tithing were dormant Christians, if that is a possibility. Inactive before tithing, intensely useful after.

On the other hand, in nearly every association, Baptist and others, you can find individual Christians shriveling up, some churches dying and others dead, who would be spiritually alive and splendidly active for the kingdom of Christ, had the members of the church been spiritual enough to tithe their incomes. Yea, they will awake from the dead and be an example to the world if 50 to 75 per cent of the membership of any of them, will devote the tithe to the kingdom of Christ.

If Brother Alborn's dearest friend would make a statement of fact to him, all the world might deny it and Brother Alborn would still believe that friend, and that dearest friend need only make the statement once.

How many times should our Divine Friend re-enact the blessed obligation of tithing to lead us all to practice it? No one can stigmatize any statement of Jesus as dangerous to spirituality; rather they are all superlatively conducive of spirituality. Twice, at least, he who runs, may read that Jesus re-affirms the religious obligation of tithing. You can interpret Matt. 23:23 backward or forward and it emphasizes tithing thus: "These ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone." Matthew 23:1-3 teaches tithing to the "multitudes" and to his "disciples": "Whatsoever they (the scribes and pharisees) bid you observe, that observe and do." That unquestionably included tithing.

If the religions Brother Alborn mentioned, and other false doctrines, require the tithe, shall any Christian, with the brighter light and higher truth refuse to devote the tithe, excusing himself on the ground that it may militate against his spirituality? Never!

ROBERT V. MEIGS

OLD-TIME FUNDAMENTALS

All of our twentieth century talk about the "fundamentals" is nothing so very new; and when, in excessive criticism, it is maintained that some of our ministers should be asked to step down and out because they are wrong as to the same "fundamentals", we have but to do much the same as our grandparents did, more than two centuries ago.

There was the case of Jonathon Edwards, for example. None could be more notable than that of the clergyman who was the most prominent and eminent in this country, in his time. For twenty-three years he held the affection, confidence and admiration of his church at Northampton, Mass., then the largest and wealthiest outside of Boston. He carried the church through the two great revivals of 1734-35, and 1740-42, and in addition was an effectual spiritual force throughout New England. During the excitement of the two revivals the people of his church accepted his high demands for the old Puritanical standards of conduct and of creed. But there came a reaction, and the "great awakening" was followed by a period of laxity.

The trouble began with the pastor finding fault with the young people for reading books which he characterized as immoral, and as tending to foster lascivious and obscene conversation. It started with his preaching a sermon from Hebrews 12:15 and 16; and after the service he communicated to the church the statement that he had evidence in hand on which action was needed. A committee of inquiry was appointed to assist him in examination of the matter, and at its meeting he laid before it the names of those who were under his suspicion for reading and circulating such books as he deprecated. In the list were the names of large numbers of youth of the leading families. At once the town was all ablaze. The committee would not proceed with the investigation, as the young people summoned before it, for the most part, refused to come, and those who did so were insolent. Edwards never thereafter succeeded in establishing his authority, and although he had added over 450 to his church membership thus far, after this it was a long time before he had a single candidate appear for admission.

This incident occurred four years later: The candidate who appeared was a "likely" young person, but upon his application Edwards sought to impose that which was called a "test of qualification according to the fundamentals." That is, he required that the candidate, and all other candidates thereafter, should give evidence of being converted and should make a public profession of godliness. This ran counter to the usage of the churches, and that hitherto followed by himself. Persons might be admitted to the church on the terms of the "half-way covenant", partaking of the communion without conversion, in the hope that the rite might prove a converting ordinance.

The people demurred. They objected to a candidate showing himself to be sav- ingly converted, and to the minister insisting on a particular relation of conversion as requisite to admission into the church. A controversy ensued, which lasted two years. Edwards insisted on his point, and the people refused to consider his views. Finally, June 22, 1750, a council convened, and by a vote of 10 to 9, recommended a dissolution of pastoral relations. The church then voted, (that is, the male members) 200 to 20 against the pastor. Thereupon he left the pastorate.

What was his "test of qualification according to the fundamentals"?

It is of interest that he put this in writing, and when the council met, it had before it the forms "for a public profession of religion" which he "stood ready to accept of from candidates." These he had made use of in his flock, and they had been "received with intense indignation." There were two "drafts", between which the candidate had choice. They were as follows:

"I hope I truly find in my heart a willingness to comply with all the commandments of God, which requires me to give up myself wholly to him, and to serve him with my body and my spirit. And do accordingly now promise to walk in a way of obedience to all the commandments of God, as long as I live."

Or,

"I hope I do truly find a heart to give up myself wholly to God, according to the tenor of that covenant of grace, which was sealed in my baptism; and to walk in a way of that obedience to all the commandments of God, which the covenant of grace requires, as long as I live."

Edwards declared that he "did not choose to be tied up to a certain form of words", but had to insist that although the language might be varied, the experience of the candidate should suit these sentiments, and should be "a just and free expression of that which one finds in his heart."

Well!

Who Only Stand and Wait

August 2.

Precious Peter,

Surely you spent a pin-prickly yesterday wondering why you did not hear from me, but the truth of the matter is I was speech-making! Yes, sir! Speech-preparing all morning, speech-rehearsing all afternoon, and speech-making all evening. Do you wonder that today finds me speechless? I felt like the funny old lady at the fashionable tea: "Lands sakes, do this be I?" And it was!

But to return to our muttuns, sir. The truth and nothing but the truth is what you shall have, and if I do say it as shouldn't, I'm the most exciting thing in this hotel. When I walk by, people nudge one another and whisper: "That's the one! Frail little bit of a thing to have been through so much!" "Young, too. Why, I thought the boy was in his teens. She seems about twenty." "She's the kind that keeps her age, those brunettes weather well." (The old cat!! There's no weather to me, Peterkin—I'm all climate, dear. Blow 'ot one day, and blow cold the next, as ye well ken.)

Howsoever, looks aside, I could see that folks were getting curiousest and curiousest about poor me, and the famous Mr. Li was to be seen talking to a group of people here and another group of people there until says I to myself: "There's more in this than meets the eye!" And sure enough, the management pays me a polite visit and says would I be kind enough to give a little speech about my adventures, in the drawing-room, please. No, says I, I will not be kind enough! I hired out as a waitress and not as a professional entertainer, sir. But, darling, the management had his smile along; and Mr. Li came bowing in the door with his smile turned on. "She is not timid," he said, "she has the heart of a lion and the voice of a nightingale," he smiled, "I have seen her turn a mob into a tea-party."

"Ah ha!" chuckled the management; so there was nothing for me to do but to think up how to tell my past history. It's all so awfully long ago, anyhow, and while it was exciting enough for me at the time I can't picture the Cods-and-Beans in such a melée. However, I screwed up my back hair and put on my one-and-only (old-fashioned? Rather! Prehistoric), and my courage oozed out at the last moment, until it occurred to me how grandly your father would have risen to such an emergency. How he would have been sure to think that the Lord had opened this opportunity for a special purpose; so I forgot my hateful old gown, and prayed. You know what happens then. It was the easiest nicest thing I ever did, and these people are the most cordial dears on earth. Colonel Cod-and-Beans shook

I did not—
No, I say I did not.
Don't look at me and say I lie.
You've tracked and followed me from day to day;
I've seen your sneaking face among the crowds.

And now you've got me—
Yes, I deny I took it—
You've seen the books?
And they betray my guilt?
You Lie!
Curse you, I say you lie!
I did not take the money—
You will arrest me?
There, take that!

Good God, he's dead,
What shall I do?
Where shall I hide?
Oh, Christ—to kill him!
I never meant—
But I must run,
And run, and run, and run forever.

Out of my way!
Get out!
I've done no wrong,
I've done no wrong!
I've done no wrong!
Let go—
I did not kill him—
It was in self-defense—
He said I lied—
I tell you let me go—

How came she here?
She must not see me—

I feel like such a fairy story person as never was! And, please God, it will be! So I'm your watchfully-waiting Parent.

August 2.

My dear Fitz Simmons, old man!

The oddest thing has happened here in this fashionable bedlam where I've brought my mother for a month—Harry Truex's widow has turned up! You remember Truex, don't you, in the Peking days, and about his tragic death? Well, his wife is here as a waitress. Moreover, my waitress! It shows I have some insight into human nature, for from the beginning I have been admiring her hands—plenty of character in those hands, and nice wrists. Then when I glanced up to see if her face matched her hands, it did. And that's that. One doesn't sentimentalize about waitresses, especially with Dallas Drake as a table companion. I've been vamped before, perhaps, but she knows a few extra tricks. If it hadn't been that mother has been unable to leave her rooms since coming here, and that I have had to spend a good deal of time with her, you might not have a bachelor friend much longer.

Even as it is, the joys of single blessedness are not as joyful as they were a week ago, but D. D. has nothing to do with that. It's the waitress! Sim, she's coming to New York tomorrow, and I want you to look her up. She's got Truex's son in a hospital there, and as luck would have it it's the hospital where your brother-in-law performs his majors and minors. Tell him the whole story of Truex as we both know it from Peking days, and then add a bit of this latest news.

For it seems that this trump of a girl married Truex the night after the uprising; she was companion to the English ambassador's wife, and had admired Truex from afar; he, of course, was his usual unobservant self, and she actually did her own proposing. People knew he could not live—the bullet went through his side, you will recall, yet for two days he was singularly clear-headed. So this serene little Miss Magnihild from Denmark told him how she'd always admired him, and how it was she who had suddenly remembered the baby, undoubtedly still sleeping in the burning mission. She rushed in and got the little bundle of whimpering cries.

"I've always loved your baby, too," was another thing she admitted to Truex, the day after, "so if you marry me then I can be happy forever afterward bringing him up just as you want him to be brought up. It isn't as if you had a family of any sort."

Needless to say, he married her, endowed her with all his worldly goods (to wit: the baby) and died the following Sunday. The English ambassador's wife unfortunately died soon afterwards, too, and in the general shifting of people and positions young Mrs. Truex became nobody's especial care, of course. Some of the English missionary people wanted her to go to England, but she chose America and has been living by hook and by crook ever since.

It seems that the baby was dropped by a nurse on the night of the uprising, and a curious spinal trouble has resulted. Several years ago she spent all her money going back to China to do volunteer work until Peter grew old enough to take his father's position! But the boy grew worse again, and she managed to come back, but had to take this waitress job as her securest hope of money this summer.

Yet in spite of anxiety and burdens, she is a very humorous, wide-eyed, broad-spirited young woman. She adores the boy, and resents anything that would seem to keep him from her. The guests here wanted her to speak last night, and tell them her experiences. It was the most modest of speeches, but the beautiful part of it was that young Li who came up here for a conference with me is simply devoted to her, and doubly so because she has always scrupled to let his father aid her financially. Therefore he has spent all his odd moments telling the guests in his exquisite English how Madame Truex was the rare heroine of Green Jade Hill, the little town where reside the Li generations, how she bearded the lion-hearted Mandarin Li in his den and did the unspeakable thing of "talking back" at him, when he made his decree about the missionaries.

It seems that the English ambassador had been summering in that town for several months, so old gentleman Li knew the young lady by sight, and her delightfully rare spunk saved the day as far as public opinion went. Also, she mailed the old gentleman a Bible and said that as soon as possible she would be back to explain it to him, and that her son would be a missionary in that town as soon as he grew up sufficiently! Well, the Li family read that Bible. I don't need to tell you how Christian a tribe they have become.

Meanwhile, dear old Sim, do all in your power to smooth her way, for if all goes well I want to see a great deal more of her before I go back to legation duty. In fact, I might as well admit what you've read between the lines: I'm not aiming to go back to China alone. Speak a good word for me when you can, and I will be Gratefully yours,

JEFFERSON IRVING WRIGHT.

Uncle Tim says he does dislike to hear people overwork one word. Nice, for instance: "That will be nice," when what they really mean is—"that will be fun," or "that will be a treat," or "that will be interesting." So ever since then, I've watched out for words, and loved all their quaint little hidden meanings. And I know I spell fairly well; so I left Bill in disgust, and asked mother what it is that I do that nobody else does.

"What makes you ask?" she said, puzzling up her pretty face in that darling way she has when she puts on her thinking-cap.

So I told her about the old lady in my dream who seemed to be looking for something and found it the minute she saw me: The Child-Who-Did-What-Nobody-Else-Did.

"Of course, a dream is a dream," mother replied, "but there's one fine little thing in your dream that can't be overlooked.

"The tear in my middy blouse?" I sighed.

"Not at all! The fact that when you saw the old lady looking for something you were interested enough to volunteer to help."

"But that's nothing, mother! You're always reminding me to do that kind of thing. 'There's Mrs. Smith,' you say, 'don't you want to carry her bundles for her!' You know you're always suggesting and suggesting and suggesting, mother! until I've got the habit of noticing old ladies. Don't you remember once you let me dress up in granny's queer old-fashioned clothes, and you made me be granny all day long! Half-blind, so that I couldn't see very well; half-deaf, so that I couldn't hear half that was said; and the longer I was granny the more I felt as if I was living on a desert island all alone, with nobody nearby; and I hated it. So then you said that surely I would always remember to do things for old ladies. That's why I asked even a dream old lady!"

"Peggy dear," said mother very gently, "I really think that it's the thing nobody else does. No child, I mean. All over the world there are ladies losing things, hunting, searching, in a tired bewildered way, and the boys and girls skip by unnoticed."

"All but the Boy Scouts," I said, "they're supposed to do one helpful thing a day, you know."

"And they do it! I've seen them. But all boys aren't Boy Scouts, and all girls haven't dressed up as grannies for a day. Yet if every one of them remembered to be thoughtful and helpful to older people, wouldn't it make a new world for some folks?"

So then I decided I'd tell you my dream. For Young Reserves are young, and they're learning how to be good Baptists. Surely one of the best ways to learn is to practice helpfulness on everybody you meet. The way to do it is to do the thing nobody else does! Just try it, and see!

The First Church in Woodstown, N. J. recently celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. During this time it has been served by thirty-two pastors. Rev. C. H. Thompson was in charge of the centennial celebration.

The Young Reserves

The Thing Nobody Else Does

By PEGGY

NOT so very long ago I had the funniest dream in the world; I didn't know it was a dream, of course, because I felt perfectly real and was wearing my torn middy blouse which really had been torn the day before. So how was I to know that the little old lady was a dream person? She came walking toward me with a hobby step, and she seemed to be looking for something, so I said: "I'm splendid at finding things that are lost, so maybe I could help you."

"Found!" she exclaimed, clapping her hands, "Found! Found! My dear, you're it!"

"Mercy on us!" I cried, and hoped the tear in my dress wasn't too conspicuous. "What h-have y-you f-found?"

"I've found the Child-That-Does-The-Thing-Nobody-Else-Does!" she chuckled, and just as I was going to ask her what that thing was which nobody else does, I woke up! So I never knew, of course. But it set me to thinking. And I asked Bill:

"What is it that I do that nobody else does?"

Brothers are bad people to look to for pleasant answers, and Bill is no exception to that rule! "Let me see, Peg! Well, I think you're slower in the morning than most girls, and I think you're a poorer speller—"

"I am not!" I cried, and walked away. For spelling is one subject in which I can generally get an "A." I just love words. I love all the funny little differences about them; and once Uncle Tim told us a story about how words were jewels and we should collect them, all we could, not to hoard—like misers, but to use every day.

Put Off Town

DID you ever go to Put-Off Town, Where the houses are old and tumble-down,

And everything tarries and everything drags,

With dirty streets and people in rags?

On the street called Slow lives old man Wait,

And his two little boys named Linger and Late,

With unclean hands and tousled hair And a naughty sister named Don't Care.

Did you ever go to Put-Off Town To play with the little girls, Fret and Frown?

Or go to the home of old man Wait And whistle for his boys to come to the gate?

To play ball all day on Tarry Street, Leaving your errands for other feet, To stop, or shirk, or linger, or frown, Is the nearest way to this Put-Off Town.

BETTER WORK
Rally Day Suggested. Romans 12:9-11.
By EDWIN PHELPS

WORK! Just a minute! Meditate on that word. Work! It is the nub of life. Stop work, and the world stops, at least so far as you are concerned. Work, and the world moves on for you and the rest of us. In fact, we might parody a well-known phrase by saying, "Work and the world works with you—Loaf and you loaf alone." A word that involves so much, merits study of how we can do better.

The mechanic or engineer defines work as "energy applied to the accomplishment of a task." Lightning is energy, but as we view it in our every-day life, it accomplishes nothing—except to frighten some of us. Harness the force which makes it and the world's tasks are done. Just make a list of the things done electrically today, and you will see the blessings that applied energy brings to humanity.

The efficiency of work is determined by how much of the "input" results in an "output." A busily humming electric motor or a noisily working steam engine unconnected to a machine has no "output." Efficiency zero! Connect them up to some machine and 75 per cent or 80 per cent or 85 per cent of the "input" becomes "output." Then you have efficiency.

Better Work! The term implies that some work is being done. To be sure, but how well is our energy applied to our tasks? Is our energy lightning or electricity? Let's consider for a moment. Here's the great task of living day by day so that the kingdom of God is advanced. We are working at it together, but can we not do better? There are the problems of our B. Y. P. U. Here is the Sunday school. Here is the church in general. Is there any room for better work? The tasks are there waiting for a greater "input."

Ask your B. Y. P. U. president to suggest some of the things you might do (or some of the others might do), at the next social—at the next cabinet meeting—at the next devotional meeting—during the month of October—during the winter—to improve the work of the union. With these in mind, do a little better than you've done before. A little more "input"!

Ask your Sunday-school superintendent if he has a place where you can help, or if he can suggest how you can be more helpful in the task already assigned. He is looking for better work. He will have a suggestion. It will mean a little more "input" but there will be a bigger "output."

Ask your pastor if you have neglected any responsibilities during the past year. Tell him your motto for the year is "better work."

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Oh! yes, and about that job—downtown. Do you want more out of it? Just a little more "input" will do it. Study your task and find out why you are doing it. There will be a reward for better work.

How to Get Better Work

A little more thought. Oh, how we fail to think! We would not say such unkindly words; we would not do such useless things, if we stopped to think.

A little more prayer. It will naturally follow from a little more thinking. God would be taken into consideration and we would try to know his will for us.

A little more Bible. Disconnect the trolley and the car stops. Cut off the steam and the engine is idle. Keep the Bible shut and our soul starves. What we need is to read more about what the "Master of life" says about the way of joy, and we will try better to fit ourselves into his scheme of life.

A little more planning. If you want to do better, take a little more time to figure out what needs to be done—the various ways of doing it—the people best fitted to undertake it, then put a little more effort into getting the best person to do it in the best way.

A little more initiative. Don't be bound by precedent. Oh! yes, they have always done it that way but—there's another way of doing it. You've got brains! Use them to think up something new. Initiative, that's what it's called. It always gets better work.

Now that our vacations are all over and we face another year's tasks—some of them great big ones, almost staggering—suppose we think harder, pray more, open the Bible oftener, plan earlier and be different. Better work will be our reward.

Do you want a better — ? Fill in the blank yourself with whatever it is you desire most. Here's the answer—BETTER WORK.

*"Let your love be a real thing * * * never let your zeal fag, * * * serve the Lord."* Romans 12:9-11.

A genius is one who does something that looks hard to everybody else. It is usually the result of 10 per cent inspiration and 90 per cent perspiration. Work? Yes, but work better.

"I can accept no other Master except Jesus Christ, because in him alone optimism is without frivolity and seriousness without despair."
—Auguste Sabatier.

GOD—THE OWNER

Hymn: "I am Thine, O Lord."

Topic Presentation

I. God owns all that I have and am. We cannot call anything which we possess our own.

"No truth is more firmly entrenched in the Word of God and corroborated by facts of experience. It is the imperial truth for all ages," namely, God is the "sovereign owner of all things."

This includes everything. The psalmist says, "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." (Ps. 24:1.)

In Hagai 2:8 we read: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."

Again we read in Psalm 50:9-12: "I will take no bullock out of thy house nor he goats out of thy fold. For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beasts of the field are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, for the world is mine and the fulness thereof."

If we apply this truth we must recognize that this world with all its wealth belongs to God, for "in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth" (Gen 1:1). "All things were made by him and without him was not anything made that hath been made" (John 1:13).

All the factories, all industries, all the markets, all goods bought and sold, all stocks and bonds, all silver and gold in the banks of men and in the banks of God beneath the mountains, all the railroads and means of transportation the world over, all the jewels and gems of this universe—all—all—are his, for God is the sovereign owner of the world.

"Everything which one possesses is either a bestowment having its source outside the recipient, or it is an achievement through the use of forces of material which the user did not originate. However large the personal investment, nothing which any one has is his own independent creation. Whatever his possessions or accumulations, no man has originated a new force, or created a new element."—John F. Goucher.

Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill are the wheat, and the shower,
And the sun, and the Father's will.
—Maltbie D. Babcock.

II. Even we ourselves belong to God. The apostle Paul says, "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price" (1 Cor. 6:21).

1. This means our wills, first of all. As Paul, writing of the Macedonians, says: "For according to their power they gave of their own accord; and this, not as we had hoped, but first they gave their own selves to the Lord" (2 Cor. 8:3, 5).

Thou seemest human and divine;

The highest, holiest manhood, thou!

Our wills are ours, we know not how;

Our wills are ours to make them thine.

—Tennyson.

2. It includes our time. If I belong to God, it follows that my time is also his. That will mean that a proportionate share of each day or of the week should be spent in doing specific Christian service—acts of helpfulness, acts of worship, teaching, or other service in the church, and so on.

3. It includes our ability. Whatever special ability we may have should be dedicated to Christ. A filing clerk gave herself to Christ, and offered her expert filing skill to the Lord. She is keeping the Sunday school records of that church in wonderful fashion. An advertising expert uses his skill to design church billboards, programs, and advertising copy for the newspapers.

God wants and can use every bit of ability we have. He calls to his service not only the singers and speakers and teachers and givers, but all who will offer him whatever they have.

4. It includes our influence. Each one is somebody's hero or heroine. Some person is greatly influenced by what I am and say and do. The principle of stewardship recognizes that influence is a mighty force for God.

Livingstone, missionary, explorer, and hero, may be taken as a noble example when he said: "My Jesus, my King, my Life, my All; I again dedicate my whole being to thee. I will place no value on anything I have or possess except in relation to the kingdom. If anything I have will advance the interests of that kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping it I promote the glory of him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity."

"To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low,
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go."

Questions for Discussion

If we earn our possessions by hard work, why should not use them as we choose?

Can we find any instance even now in which we admit that what we have does not belong to us as individuals for our sole or selfish use?

Is there a difference between ownership and possession?

Why should we want to acknowledge this ownership?

State the stewardship principle of ownership and possession.

Give opportunity for each member to express himself relative to this principle of stewardship.

Have several prayers voicing the thought of our willingness to recognize God as the sovereign owner of all things.

SPECIAL

Send to B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., for sufficient number of copies of the leaflet "Does a Tenth Belong to God" to supply one for each member of your society.

Just One Minute Please!

Are you listening? Well, the topic for October is "Better Work." On request, Mr. Edwin Phelps prepared the article appearing this week. "Better Work" should be the slogan for all the fall and winter activities. See that Mr. Phelps' message is brought to the attention of the entire membership of your society.

II.

By vote of the Northern Baptist Convention, October has been designated as "Stewardship Month." Plans are under way to enlist our entire Baptist forces in this great program of educational advance. Our young people will be found in the front ranks. If you are interested in pushing tithing in your society, drop a line to the B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., for a sample package of literature.

III.

In addition to the regular weekly topic, we will present a suggested stewardship program. Either one may be used. "Forward with Christ, together" should be the slogan of Baptist young people everywhere. This educational program in the interest of stewardship, is

Convention Impressions

This convention has been the biggest event in my life.—Louise Seem.

This convention has been one of the greatest inspirations in my life.—Clifford Hideen.

This is the first convention of this sort that I ever attended. It makes me feel that I will go home and put all the pep possible into our society and make it a real Christian society.

A blessing that shall remain in my life as long as I live.—C. E. Dahlquist.

I have received more knowledge of Christ from this great convention than I have from any other church organization.—Claribel Gager.

The convention gave me a closer relationship with God.—Harry Graham.

I had never felt the presence of God more since the day I became a Christian. Ralph Trout.

It has been of the greatest interest to us.—Mrs. Sten, Miss M. Sten.

The convention has been a wonderful spiritual uplift and inspiration.—Mrs. J. S. Worthington.

The convention—a nugget of gold towards the wealth of Christian experience that may be ours for the seekings.—Ethel Broholm Beard.

It has been the best ever, and I am going again.—Wm. Frandsen.

Religion is the greatest thing in the world.—Elsie Anderson.

This was the first convention I attended and my desire is to make my life count big for the Master.—Thekla Swenson.

The inspiration of fellowship with Christian young people and the thought of the unknown good for advancement of God's kingdom has been my greatest impression.—Glenn Reed.

The convention at St. Paul has made me think more, pray more, and want to do more.—Ruth Whittington.

I believe that this convention will prove to be a great help and spiritual uplift to the Baptist denomination throughout America.—Victor Harrell.

It has been an inspiration to me to see such a great army of young people with a definite purpose in life.—Myrtle Morris.

This convention has meant a great deal to me in that with God's help I shall go "forward with Christ" and win others for him.—Mabel Hanson.

I felt that I got closer to God in this convention through the brotherly feeling of the various delegates. I begin now to realize the importance of the B. Y. P. U. of A. and the duty before them to men.—Ralph Burgdorf.

It has made me feel the want of Christ's spirit in my church enough to plead with them to take a new start and line up with the program outlined by the convention.—Ruth Johnson.

Words fail to express what I have received. Can work better and cleverer for having been here.—Mrs. L. N. Cadieing.

This convention has meant to me that I have given my life to the Lord to do whatever he wishes to do with it.—Lucille Tuller.

This convention has helped me in many ways. It has drawn me closer to Him who died for me.—Florence Ferguson.

A wonderful inspiration to see so many young people willing to consecrate their lives to Christian work.—Mrs. W. H. Gow.

To see thousands of Christian young people united in the purpose of advancing God's kingdom was the greatest inspiration to me.—Edward Even.

Filled me with a peace and love for fellow Christians as never before. I realize the privilege of being a Christian.—Elsie M. Erickson.

The B. Y. P. U. Convention has revealed to me what a power the Baptist Young People of America are and can be for our great denomination, and I am praying God for the leadership that is coming to the denomination as a result of the wonderful decision meeting.—Rev. J. B. Gleason.

Religious Education

The Burrall Bible Class

What has made the Burrall Bible class a success may make other Bible classes a success.

The Burrall Bible class is founded on the principle that university and college students are interested in the real things of life. Contrary to magazine reports, they are not "jazz-mad, flipper-flappers," but normal human beings seeking to live normal physical, mental, social and spiritual lives.

With this idea in view, the lessons at the Burrall class feature the deeply spiritual always. The business of the class is to put the teachings of Christ into the lives and hearts of its members. One of the Sundays which was most largely attended during the whole of last year was the one on which Miss Burrall had chosen the topic, "Prayer." Several Sundays were devoted to a discussion of "Christian Personality," and others to "Christian Leadership."

It is not an unusual thing for fifteen or twenty members of the class to rise and offer sentence prayers during the opening exercises. Scripture lessons, opening prayers and songs are led by students from the university or college.

Two students at the University of Missouri tell why, as university students, they are interested in this Bible class.

Carl E. Bolte, '23, says: "As a university man interested in the things of the campus, I am attracted to the Burrall class for three reasons:

1. The class is the biggest single activity on the campus.
 2. It is the most representative body in Columbia.
 3. Because it really accomplishes its task.
- "To consider the first reason, there is no other activity on the campus that is so far reaching and big as this class. Every Sunday morning, a thousand students gather in the Stephens College auditorium, six or seven hundred of whom are university men and women. No other voluntary university organization is so all inclusive, I believe.

"If I could have you visit a meeting of our executive committee I could show you representatives from every class. There are engineers, agriculture students, journalists, lawyers, all of them are there. Not because they have nothing else to do but because they realize the bigness of the work and the help it is to them. All of them are outstanding men and women on the campus.

"The class in its short life has been able to accomplish some remarkable things. The agriculture and engineer's Sunday are days every old student of M. U. remembers. Any organization which is large enough to demand the services of the biggest men and women on the campus, which is interesting enough to hold an average attendance of one thousand and give them something real, certainly is far reaching in the results it may accomplish."

Mildred Northrop, '22, expresses herself thus: "One of the greatest needs on a university campus today is the student who thinks for himself clearly, honestly, and fearlessly. And especially do we need clear thinking along religious lines for it is easy to give up what has served us as religion when we first meet Science—and in that stage we always spell science with a capital 'S.'" It is this need that the Burrall Bible class meets. Miss Burrall senses the question in the minds of students today and gives them the best of her own clear thought. But more than that she forces us to think for ourselves and strange to say we do not find it unpleasant or impossible.

"Although a part of a Baptist college, the class extends an invitation to all students 'who do not regularly attend another Sunday school.' It deals with fundamental questions and above all else, gives the college student what he demands, which is the truth. The success of the class lies, I think, in just that—that it is real, vital and seeks to answer the questions in the minds of all of us.

"One cannot doubt the bigness of the work that is being done when she sees, Sunday after Sunday, the hundreds of students who throng the Stephens College auditorium. Nor can one doubt that its influence will be lasting on the university campus."

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for October 1

THE BIRTH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

Lesson: Luke 1 Golden Text: Luke 1:15

Setting

The scene of today's lesson is in the temple at Jerusalem. This temple should have special significance since the story of its downfall and rebuilding was studied last quarter.

A third temple was built by Herod, who had determined thus to gain the favor of the Jews. Their consent was not readily gained, and when it was, the promise was required of Herod that he would not pull down the old temple until ready to build the new and that then no profane hand should touch the Holy of Holies. In Luke we have a most careful historian who obtained his information from eye witnesses of the recorded events, and who recorded these chronologically.

The house of Zacharias was south of Jerusalem in the hill country.

Lesson

Zacharias was a godly priest of priestly origin during the days of Herod the Great, who reigned in Judea 37 to 4 B. C. Elizabeth, wife of Zacharias, was also of priestly descent. It was the custom for the officiating group of priests to cast lots to determine which one should offer incense. This was a duty much coveted, for it was the highest mediatorial act. The priest so privileged was ever afterward called "rich." On this occasion it fell to Zacharias. The altar of incense stood in the Holy Place in front of the curtain of the Holy of Holies. As Zacharias entered the Holy Place alone, the multitude of people prayed without. "And there appeared an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense." (Many angels appear in the recordings of Luke.) Zacharias was troubled, then fear fell from him, for his supplication was heard and the promise given that a son should be born to himself and his wife Elizabeth and the son's name should be called John. The prophecies concerning the coming child were: "Many shall rejoice at his birth"; "he shall be great in the sight of the Lord"; "he shall drink no wine or strong drink"; "he shall be filled with the Holy Spirit even from his mother's womb." Then comes Zacharias' doubt: "Whereby shall I know this? For I am an old man and my wife well stricken in years." "I am Gabriel," said the angel, "that stand in the presence of God. And behold thou shalt be silent until that day that these things shall come to pass, because thou believest not my words." Zacharias reappeared before the assembled multitude dumb, unable to pronounce the customary benediction and they saw that he had had a vision. He finished the week of his officiating and then retired to his home.

Leading Thoughts

1. How much greater would have been the joy of Zacharias in the approaching birth of his son, had he accepted the word of the angel with a simple faith. 2. Dumbness or a cloud of some sort always follows in the wake of doubt. 3. "If our lives were but more simple we would take him at his word." 4. "God sends the angels; thou must bring the eyes."—Langbridge.

Building Good Citizenship

While separation of church and state is one of the inviolable principles of democracy, the activities of each, when constructively applied within their respective fields, are morally interrelated and exceedingly advantageous to both.

The state guarantees liberty of conscience and freedom of worship—a right purchased by centuries of struggle and bloodshed. The church proclaims personal and civic righteousness upon which alone the state can endure. Personal righteousness has always been stressed,

Our Own Folks

Ohio Letter

By J. W. WEDDELL

A Country Association

Have you ever attended a rural association in Southeastern Ohio? Poor, ordinary city pastors, I pity you. The country folks all there, young and old. Chicken piled as high as your hat—help yourself. Song inside and song outside. Baptist doctrine put clear and strong—you should have heard them declare their faith, fellowship and cheer everywhere. Oh, there is nothing like it. The Marietta Association held its ninety-seventh session at Lawrence this year, and Marietta people went over six autos strong, mud roads and all. We knew what was coming. It will be a hundred years since we started before long. Here Baptists began in Ohio in the good old "Ohio Purchase" days; the old-fashioned brand of Baptists, their feet on the rock, taking the whole Bible and taking it as it reads. God be praised!

The Shut-In Places

We're a little off the broad thoroughfares hereabouts, but we can see far and we propose to have a part in everything that is going on. Some things are not so satisfactory, but it is the way of this old world, and we've got to take things as they come. You thought to have a joke on your humble servant, Mr. Editor, when we spoke of the absence of auto thefts down this way, since we came. But that was in the rainy season when the roads were soft—they couldn't get away with it. But now the highways are in comparatively good condition, and the Amelekites are back on the job. We have a battle to fight, and the better the days, the worse sometimes, for such is life. But the roads are opening up, come and see us. Ah, these hills and valleys how they shine. Some time the great traveling public will wake up to discover how much they have missed in passing by the Muskingum and the Miami country.

God's Providence

It is wonderful what comes from these so-called out of the way places. Right out my window as I write in this Marietta parsonage I see a little cottage on the corner where one day some years ago two young preachers agreed upon a double wedding and carried off two of good Elder Pearce's granddaughters. It is a fine piece of Sabine work. Those two noble adventurers are both college presidents today—Dr. Leonard Riley of McMinnville and Dr. F. S. Boughton of Sioux Falls. And young pastors, there are still other good prospects in this vicinity. Ask Villers or Burlingame or Carman. They came from here. The latter came back and spent nine years here as shepherd of the flock—great days!

Other Heroes Besides

Across the street is the Mound Cemetery, hoary with age—a kind of American Westminster Abbey. More generals and admirals and revolutionary worthies buried there, they say, than in any bit of "God's Acre" that might be readily mentioned in the land.

A Mother Church

I love such, their very walls. I loved the "Old Tenth" in Philadelphia and hated to see it go. But I had a new experience, here, the other day. It was mine to lift the Gospel note in the old brick of the Little Muskingum among the hills, long closed. It was the first of our ancient houses of worship in this region. Our Baptist fathers both here and at Cincinnati built in the country. The first Baptist of Marietta, that handsome pile, is simply the Little Muskingum come to town, that is what I call it. We cleaned up the floors, swept away the cobwebs, opened up the organ and dusted the preacher's desk and the pews. Then the people gathered. J. N. Riley was one of them and his sister, whose father preached here fifty years in succession. In later days came Agnew, E. B. L. Moore, and Neff and McCall. "Shiloh Revisited" was the theme, and the songs were the grand hymns of fifty years ago, "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound," "When I can read my title clear,"—the old tunes. And there were tears on our faces but joy in our hearts. God bless the old meeting houses.

Back Again

And I'm just back again from a vacation visit to former scenes in the West—Morgan Park where I had my first student pastorate, a kind of headquarters still, Chicago where at the North Shore I met old friends that helped to throw the net years before at Dearborn Chapel on the South Side—to that work I was ordained at the First Church and Davenport where they called me in the nineties, "sight unseen"—they used to venture thus, and the saints are still there, and a great work to be done. They have had a chance to hear some excellent preachers here while the writer has been on the wing. If they will call one of these good men, as they should, you may see us home again soon, which means Chicago, always dear.

Arizona Assembly

By J. D. SPRINGSTON

Arizona Baptists have succeeded in writing another chapter in the history of their progress, in that the first Baptist summer assembly closed its ten-day session, August 1-10.

In a beautiful camp, "Pine Dells," about two miles west of Prescott and about 5500 feet above sea-level, this assembly was held. Groups of Baptists from many sections of the state, arriving in automobiles and by train, found a lovely camping spot in the tents among the pines. There were 116 registrations from sixteen churches. The attendance upon the classes was especially regular and prompt, beginning at eight o'clock in the morning and continuing up until twelve thirty, noon. The afternoons were given over to hikes and sight-seeing trips, bathing, etc., and the evenings to illustrated missionary lectures and inspirational addresses, so that there was universal expression of a happy time, as well as a profitable session of study and meditation. For several years the matter of a summer assembly had been under consideration, and some attempts had been made to start an assembly in former years, but not until this season did it seem practical to begin this type of work. The general secretary, Mr. Morton, together with those who so enthusiastically assisted in pushing this to success, are to be congratulated on the remarkable success of this first assembly. This promises to be a strong feature of the work of Arizona Baptists for the future, and if the enthusiasm of the people who attended does not wane before their return to their home churches, there will certainly be a large interest created for the next meeting of the assembly. We hope that another session may find at least twice as many churches represented, with the attendance fully double what it was this year. One of the things most vital to the welfare of the assembly is the matter of a suitable place of meeting, accessible to the largest possible number of the Baptist constituency of the state. This is one of the tasks for the committee to work out during the coming year, which we hope may be solved quite early, so that during the year the people may have their minds fixed on the high mountain spot to which they will be looking forward for next summer.

The variety and character of the program this season was such as to commend itself to the people and commanded most attentive interest of all who were in attendance at the camp. The Bible study periods, conducted by Pastors Gott and Shanks, were especially helpful and inspiring. Rev. F. P. Manley conducted a study each day on India, which was most profitable and largely attended. Pastor Hawes conducted a class in personal work and evangelism, in which very much interest was manifested, as indicated in the large attendance each day. Miss Myrtle Love conducted a class in Sunday school methods and Dr. Frizelle of Philadelphia, a class in the study of methods in young people's work. These two especially endeared themselves in the hearts of the folks by their excellent ministry in teaching and also by their happy good-time spirit in camp life and in the recreation features of the assembly. The assembly was also favored in having Dr. W. B. Lippard of New York and President V. L. Duke of Redlands, Calif., each of whom gave two strong addresses on the "Baptist Progress in Europe" and "Christian Education," respectively. Special mention should be made of the splendid work done by Miss May Coggins in her leadership for girls and of Mr. Reeves, who had charge of a group of boys every day. This report would be incomplete without reference to the splendid spirit and kindly courtesy of the camp management and also without special mention of the people of the Prescott church and community, who did so much in the way of personal effort to make this assembly a success and to make those in attendance comfortable. Special mention should be made of Mr. Sandler and Mr. and Mrs. Kittridge, who were always on tap with their automobiles, ready to carry us back and forth to town and out over the highways, country-wide, even down to "Granite Dells" for an occasional plunge. The Baptists of Arizona do well to remember that after all has been said, to no one are we indebted to the success of the first assembly more than to the untiring, indomitable general secretary, Mr. Morton, who never fails to appear just at the right time and in the right mood to solve all our difficulties and meet the necessary requirements of unexpected emergencies.

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Scouting in the Summer

We are giving new meanings, or perhaps more meanings, to that word "Scout." It has been lifted in scale and much amplified. It describes an attitude and life for our young people altogether wholesome and desirable. It has transformed the summer from lassitude and demoralization into opportunity for discipline and character. Girls and boys love it, and teachers and parents are delighted to approve and abet it, because already the results are so extraordinary. One of the outstanding symptoms of the new pedagogy is that immediate as well as permanent effects reward even superficial experiments.

It has been a long time in coming. It is the poetry of teaching, and the hearts and minds of unspoiled children learn as if by magic. Froebel called to us long ago "Come, let us live with our children!" Montaigne implored us "not to submit our children to frantic and melancholy pedagogues." Even our costly public schools with their mass of foreign elements, must depend upon homes and neighborhoods to harvest the efforts of their drill-masters.

Scouting Indoors

The present summer has brought us many sodden days of rain and dampness. There has been a deal of scouting on broad, screened verandas. Under the direction of mothers, friends, and guests, children have been guided into the sort of play that is worth-while. Play that is saturated with history, yielding its most precious "dates," giving peeps into the courts of Castile and Aragon in the days when Columbus discovered us, and into Holland and England in the later day when the Pilgrim fathers undertook this rocky and inhospitable coast. This teaching is done with the accompaniments of semi-pageantry. The children, or "scouts," dress up in imitation of the kings, courtiers, knights, troubadours, and tournaments, that they are told about. History and its high characters are thus made realistic with the help of scissors, highly colored papers, and cunning fingers. Periods of history are clearly grasped as their characters and events are related. Why should not such wholesome play make study fascinating instead of dreadful? The children may understand the tragedies of the generations without their horrible details, and be saved from costly emotional excitements as they learn.

The Coming Voters

All of these children of ours will vote some day. Thus must we build up in them an historical consciousness. We may begin early and continue wisely, then only can we expect to have voters fitted to save and to justify our democracy. It is astonishing how early boys and girls can appreciate the strength of federation and the weakness and doom of schism. They may know why the Civil War saved us, and what it brought us of strength and unity. And why the imperial cities of Greece and the gorgeous states of the renaissance, refusing to learn the lesson, wasted their genius and their resources in hatred and war. No scholar insisted with such simplicity and earnestness as did John Fiske upon the fundamental idea for citizens of a republic: Unity, loyalty to a central government, and freedom in state and municipality. It took centuries to understand it.

We are in a time of riot, revolution, and factional venom. Strikers and demagogues are confusing the public consciousness. It is a time to think clearly, and beget convictions that will help us to pull together. Even in politics and religion we catch the prevailing centrifugal impulse and fly apart. How many political and religious quacks are quacking! It is a good time to hear such words as Robert Cecil's: "We shall always be at the mercy of parliamentary charlatans until from history we have learned the fundamentals of democratic government." Our children may weave it all into their plays both out of doors and indoors, and, with but a few wise suggestions, may become "good scouts" for the republic.

Some of the Charms of September

September is a sort of youthful month. Talk about the resilience of the spring—what about the bounce of September! The streets are full of men, women, and children made new, and ready to spring into a hard job. It is all perfectly natural. Given an active people abounding in motive and interests, why after steeping in rest and change should they not have spring in their purpose as they face their tasks again?

Thus do the churches get the benefit. And the ministers become new ministers. Perhaps it is better to accept the new summer not as religious prostration, as some do fear, but as a new preparation out of which shall filter into both church and minister something that promises to make them fruitful. If there is not something in this, why all this zest and zip that we discover in us in September?

In the Caldron

Politically we are now sizzling. Invisible witches must be stirring the broth for there surely is "double trouble, toil and bubble." By the time this letter gets to print all will be over, except the election, and the cooling politicians, marveling at their heat, will get ready for still higher temperatures. The temperature of the people remains so normal nowadays that the spellbinders, like the prophets of Baal, have to cut and lash themselves to attract attention. They do it. But the people coolly observe and cogitate, then comes the delightful quietness and privacy of the Australian ballot, when the real sovereigns settle everything. The politician has to be pretty slick now-a-days always to "get by."

The papers are as a rule surprisingly fair. Even the "organs" give us all the political tunes. We need not waste ourselves at "rallies" in order to hear the music. The daily "broadcast" suffices. High standards have been set for the new officials. We shall have worthy men who instinctively will want to stretch up to expectations. So the prospect is good. There is noticeable one curiously disquieting element—a deep and bitter distrust of Senator Lodge among what might be called republican intellectuals. It will not defeat him, but is so unmistakable as to compel attention and whet the political curiosity.

Mrs. A. C. Dixon

By HER PASTOR, W. B. RILEY

Mrs. A. C. Dixon succumbed to spinal meningitis August 8, in Kuling, China. She was the wife of Dr. A. C. Dixon, one of the most widely known ministers living. Dr. Dixon has enjoyed an honor not likely to fall to any other man of his or future times, namely that of succeeding Dwight L. Moody in America and Charles Spurgeon in England. He is known the world over as a brilliant orator, and just as widely recognized as a defender of "the faith once delivered." He is six feet, three inches tall, and looms intellectually even as he does physically.

Dr. and Mrs. Dixon shared in service since the days of their decided youth, as they were married early in life. As a minister's wife it would be difficult to imagine Mrs. Dixon's superior. Devoted to her husband, efficient in Christian service, dutiful and delightful as a mother,

In Memoriam

REV. EDWARD R. POPE, D.D.

TWO lofty spires, the sunset, and a star,
And darkling shadows, coming from afar,

While from the larger tower the evening bell

Is chiming forth its peace, and all is well.

A call is heard across the harvest fields,
To which the weary reaper gladly yields;
The home is dearest at the close of day,
If hours were filled with toil, or long the way.

But I who tarry 'neath these spreading elms

Have ear for nothing, since me overwhelms
The message of the passing of a friend,
And I alone this twilight hour would spend.

'Tis wholesome sadness when the memory
Of one, like thee, glides from the mystery
Of life and death, with good of many years,—

It brings a star-gleam to the falling tears.

It has the harmony of evening chimes,
It lifts the soul above our restless times
To things, we feel and throw somewhere abide,

Beyond the changes of life's ebb and tide.

The service humbly given, and in trust
That truth is still supreme to make us just,—

The kingdom's triumph, though still far away,

These would I link with thee, and hear thee say:

"The Christ-like life and spirit, more than creed,

That is the thing we most sincerely need,"
And thou didst image forth this splendid grace,

I found it in thy words, thy deeds, thy face.

The darkness hides the world, but in the west,

The star grows brighter, and man goes to rest,

And 'mid the mystery, enshrouding all,
I hear the echo of the homing call.

—GUSTAV MELBY

she made an ideal companion for so great a soul. She shared with all the devotion of her nature in the work of her husband, and was, in a larger way his aid and inspiration than many, not knowing this modest woman, might imagine. At the time of her death she was, with her husband, a member of First Church, Minneapolis. She will be mourned by a large circle of friends in both America and England. Both she and Dr. Dixon were southerners by birth and education, and their closest relationships by blood and by the ties of service were to the Southern people. She leaves a son and three daughters to mourn her going. She was buried in China. Dr. Dixon is now journeying home. So far as sympathy can lighten sorrow, friends will count it a privilege to help him bear his load.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE AUGUST SUPPLIES at First Church, Manchester, have all been helpful and well received, but none were more acceptable than former pastor, Rev. M. R. Foshay, who occupied the pulpit Aug. 27. Some 600 of the former friends and parishioners were present at the morning service.

THE CHURCH AT DEERFIELD has prospered greatly under the pastorate of Rev. Christina MacKenzie. Miss MacKenzie became pastor in June, 1921. The Baptist church had been closed ten years, the Baptists in the town worshipping with the Congregationalists. Now the arrangement is reversed and Congregationalists worship at the Baptist church. There is no formal federation. Congregations have been uniformly large throughout the year. Prayer meetings are held weekly, and a young people's society has been organized and is active. During the year past eleven persons have been baptized, four of these on August 27. The additions to this church are of such a character as to add much to its strength.

REV. C. B. DANSE had the pleasure recently, on the occasion of his first anniversary as pastor at Rumney, of baptizing five and on the following Sunday gave the hand of fellowship to eleven. A Christian Endeavor society has been reorganized and is giving most helpful service.

THE SECOND CHURCH, Sanbornton, will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary, Sept. 9-10.

REV. G. F. SIBLEY, pastor at New Ipswich, has resigned and will begin his new pastorate at Amherst, Sept. 15. Mr. Sibley has been serving the Congregational church at Temple in conjunction with New Ipswich. Mr. Sibley is held in high esteem at New Ipswich and Temple and his departure is much regretted.

BAPTISMS IN THE CHURCHES of the convention for the year ending April 3 were 541. With one exception this is the largest number reported for any one year since 1876. The churches reporting the largest number of baptisms are Manchester First, 80; Nashua First, 62; Derry, 29; Lebanon, 25; Manchester People's, 25; Rochester, 21.

NEW YORK

AT THE COMMUNION SERVICE on Sept. 3, Rev. C. C. Winter, pastor at Cazenovia, extended the hand of fellowship to five adults, two married couples, and a married woman, three of whom he had the pleasure of baptizing on the fourth Sunday evening in July.

AMONG THOSE WHO HAVE supplied the Lake Ave. Church, Rochester, during the summer is Dr. John M. Moore of the Marcey Ave. Church, Brooklyn.

THE MEMBERS OF THE BROOKLYN Baptist Temple are spending much time in prayer and preparation for the coming of their pastor elect, Egbert Le Roy Dakin, on Sunday, Oct. 1. For weeks past the committee has been formulating plans for making this Sunday a memorable one in the history of the Temple. The recognition service and reception will be held on Oct. 12. The great Temple choir of 150 voices and many of our denominational leaders and ministers will assist in making this a notable event. During September every organization in the church will hold a "setting-up rally" for prayer and the consideration of ways and means of assisting Dr. Dakin in the work of the church. The officers are enthusiastic over the plans Dr. Dakin has for his first year, they are practical and will give the Temple an efficient organization and enable it to do larger and better things for the Master. It was first thought a special effort would be necessary to liquidate the deficit which had been accumulating during the past year or two, but the Temple folk rallied to such an extent after Dr. Dakin was called that the deficit was cleaned up without special effort and the financial returns for July were the largest of any July in the ninety-nine years of the church. Dr. Dakin was in Brooklyn recently and succeeded in securing a beautiful house in the Flatbush section, with spacious grounds, a large porch and a double garage.

WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE ISSUE OF SEPT. 2 we called attention to the work of Rev. C. E. Griffin and the Twentieth Street Church of Huntington. We said that fourteen had been baptized. We should have said 114.

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BIG RAPIDS on Aug. 29 called a council to consider the ordination of Gilbert Miles. Rev. W. E. Orton was elected moderator and Hugh Jamison, clerk. Mr. Miles is a graduate of the Moody Bible Institute and the Northern Baptist Seminary.

OHIO

REV. LEO BROWN of Steubenville has accepted the call of the church at Wooster and is already on the field. He is the third Brown to hold the pastorate of the Wooster Church.

REV. W. F. JONES has resigned the pastorate of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Cincinnati, effective Sept. 1.

REV. A. A. NELLIS, of Warren, was called to the church at Bradford, Pa., last May, but declined the call. In August the Bradford church again extended him a call, under conditions considerably different from the first, and he has accepted. When Mr. Nellis came to Warren, seven years ago Sept. 1, that church had 381 members. He has received 431 into membership, the current expenses have more than doubled, the contributions to missions have multiplied more than seven times. A fine mission has been erected for the Roumanians and a new church organized in the East End, which now has a regular pastor, Rev. J. W. Ely. The First Church has completed a thorough renovation, re-lighting and redecorating of its building, making it one of the most attractive auditoriums in the city, many say the most attractive. Mr. Nellis begins his work in Bradford Oct. 1.

ILLINOIS

REV. EDGAR FORD, who has been pastor at Hudson for three years, has closed his pastorate and removed to El Paso where he has purchased a home. Hudson has a good meeting house and parsonage and a fine membership. A good field for a pastor.

THE WATERTOWN CHURCH, of which Mrs. J. Powell is pastor, is in an encouraging condition. It recently put $400 worth of repairs on the basement. Aug. 27 there were 127 present in the Sunday school.

THE SILVIS CHURCH, of which Rev. N. J. Keithley is pastor, is doing fine work. There was a large number of additions last year, and the meeting house is not large enough to accommodate the Sunday school.

THE EAST MOLINE CHURCH is doing well. Rev. John M. Jones has been pastor a year and a half. The only vacation Bible school held in the city was by the Baptist church. Fourteen nationalities attended. It increased the influence of the Baptist church among all classes of people.

THE MOLINE CHURCH, of which Rev. Roy W. Babcock is pastor, is making great progress. Recently, during the pastor's absence, the church voted an increase in the salary of $500.

THE ROCK ISLAND ASSOCIATION met in Orion Aug. 29-31. More than 200 delegates registered. The interest of the meetings was good during the entire three days. The reports from the churches were encouraging. The young people's session, with a banquet at the Methodist Church, was largely attended. The church entertained the association in a splendid manner. The Orion Church of which Rev. Fred. F. Shields is pastor, is in a good working condition.

THE TWIN CITIES, Champaign-Urbana, are the home of the state university. Besides the University Church four other churches care for the Baptist folk of the two cities. Recently a contest between the young people's classes of the two First churches resulted in a large attendance during the hot months and new life to each church. The Champaign young people won the contest and the Urbana young people responded with a fine social evening. The indications are good that both classes are in shape for a greatly increased attendance the coming fall.

MANY DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS have been held in Illinois down state this summer, one of them at Cornell, where Rev. F. T. Klotzche is in his third year of successful service. This school was a community school, the two churches of the town cooperating in its promotion, conduct and financial support. There was an average attendance of seventy-five. Patrons and pupils express their wish to have the school another year. All other departments of this strong village church are in healthy condition.

SIX MONTHS HAVE PASSED since the Benson Church sought the services of Rev. B. F. Irving as stated supply and acting pastor. In many ways this arrangement has been a source of real blessing to the church. Therefore it was with happy hearts that a large group of the church people gathered at the parsonage Sept. 4 to "pound" the parson and his wife. What might have been "blue" Monday was transformed into a night of fun, hilarity, jolly games and friendly get-together visiting in groups upon the spacious lawn. A pound of this and a pound of that soon made many pounds to be left as a reminder of the kind esteem and respect felt toward the parson and family. A pound o'money in a bag, and a pound o'good wishes on paper, were among the pounds in this "pounding."

Summer Services

Springfield has found what is believed to be an effective solution of the summer Sunday evening church problem, in a series of open-air union services. The services were held in the heart of the downtown district, on the Court House grounds, with eighteen churches and religious organizations participating.

With but one exception the preaching was by pastors of local churches. Sunday evening, August 13, Bishop Charles Edward Locke, of the Methodist Episcopal church, stationed in the Philippine Islands, gave a notable address on the subject, "A Great Adventure in the Philippine Islands."

Donald M. Swarthout, of James Millikin University, Decatur, was engaged for the entire season to lead a chorus of more than 100 voices. The Watch Factory Band, led by Louis Lehman, was engaged for the entire season to render special numbers and to accompany the chorus and the audience. At the closing service of the series the chorus and band gave a program of selections from the oratorio the "Messiah," by Handel, following the sermon.

Two thousand canvas seats were provided for the audience and a large platform was provided for the pastors, chorus and band. A large Magnivox Telemegaphone was provided, which enabled the preacher to reach a vast open air audience with perfect ease. At least 2,000 persons were present at each service and on three occasions audiences numbering 2,500 persons were present.

The total cost of the eight services this year will be about $2,600. A large portion of this amount was raised by a direct appeal by letter and telephone to more than 4,600 persons, asking for $1 and $2 subscriptions. The Sunday evening collections yielded about $800. The treasurer will have a neat balance left after paying all the bills.

The services were held under the auspices of the summer union service committee, composed of the pastor and one layman from each of the churches participating. The following are the officers: Chairman, Rev. Abram G. Bergen, pastor, Fifth Presbyterian church; vice-chairman, Rev. Wilbert Dowson, pastor, Kumlér church; secy., Elmer J. Kneale; treas., William E. Lehne.

A special open-air service was held Wednesday evening, August 9, with twenty-eight Protestant churches of the city taking part. On this occasion Bishop Thomas Nicholson, resident bishop in Chicago, of the Methodist Episcopal church, and president of the anti-saloon league of America, gave an address on "Safeguarding American Ideals." He made a remarkable appeal for the upholding of the prohibition laws. An audience of 2,000 persons was present.

KANSAS

TWENTY-FOUR MEMBERS of the Ku Klux Klan entered the Sixth Street Church, Galena, just before the sermon Sunday night and advancing to the front of the church presented the pastor, Rev. W. E. Stilson, with $25 and then quietly listened to the singing of "America" by the church choir and audience, after which the leader gave a short talk outlining the principles of the Klan. He stated that the Klan stood for clean homes, clean government and good citizenship. After the talk the members of the church gave the Chautauqua salute and the Klansmen quietly left the building and drove away in the motor cars in which they came.

THE CHURCH AT TAFT was organized about two years ago with nineteen members, and no building or property of any kind. For a time meetings were held in the city hall and in lodge rooms. People would be waiting for the service to close so they could get the room to hold a dance or a card party. The church called a pastor, Rev. Mead M. Bledsoe, who took up the work eighteen months ago. During that time there have been baptized into the church over fifty and the membership is now 112; two good corner lots have been bought and paid for; a building has been erected and all of it is paid for. The church is located in the best part of the fast-growing city. During this time the church has grown from a mission church to a self-supporting church and is fast growing into self-sacrificing missionary church. What the church needs most is some pews; if any of the churches want to do a service that will mean much for a church that has lifted hard for the last two years they can help this church secure the pews. Rev. W. F. Harper, 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, can furnish any desired information about the Taft work and pastor.

NORTH DAKOTA

Rev. J. E. NAYLOR of Chautauqua, N. Y., began his work as state evangelist September 1. He is now engaged in a series of special meetings with the First Church of Lisbon. Mr. Naylor will make his headquarters at Grand Forks. During the past year he has been under appointment by the department of evangelism of the Home Mission Society of which Dr. H. F. Stilwell of Cleveland, is secretary. Mr. Naylor has had a wide experience in religious work and travel, having twice circled the globe.

Rev. J. MAURICE HUPP, who for a number of years was the successful pastor of the First Church of Lead, has accepted a unanimous call to the First Church of Jamestown. He will begin his pastorate October 1. Mr. Hupp has been spending the summer at Schenectady, N. Y., where he has been acting as the supply of the First Church.

Rev. ERLING MONNES of Seattle, Wash., who was for nine and one-half years pastor of the Norwegian Baptist Church of Powers Lake, has accepted the call of the church to return for a second pastorate. Mr. Monnes has been in Seattle during the past year. His many friends throughout the state will be glad to welcome him back to North Dakota.

Rev. A. E. BIGELOW, one of our missionaries to the Philippine Islands, who is at present home on furlough, will visit North Dakota churches and associations Sept. 15-Oct. 15.

DURING THE SUMMER two new churches have been organized in the state, one at Van Hook, and a Negro Baptist Church at Devils Lake. Two new church buildings are also under construction, one at Park River, the other at Roseglen.

THE NORTH DAKOTA setting-up missionary conference will be held in First Church, Fargo, Sept. 18-19. A team of five national workers will conduct the conference. The Fargo churches will provide lodging and breakfast for all delegates. It is hoped that the churches adjacent to Fargo will be represented by large delegations. The conference will give special attention to the plans for the observance of stewardship month during October.

NEBRASKA

Grand Island College

As soon as the college closed in June the summer school opened. This was the first time the college had conducted a summer school. Between sixty and seventy students were in attendance, and the work done was of very high character. It is expected that the summer school will be continued next year.

At the close of the summer school the Baptist Young People's Assembly for Nebraska was held on the college grounds. Over two hundred were in attendance, coming from the different parts of the state. It was one of the most successful assemblies ever held in this part of the country. The work done by the classes was of a high order. Some of the speakers who were present were: Dr. M. D. Eubank, of China; Dr. A. C. Hanna, of India; Judge Bayard H. Paine, of Grand Island; Rev. Wilson Mills, of Kansas City; Dr. W. I. Fowle, Mr. A. B. Newell, and Prof. R. B. Stevens, of Grand Island; Rev. F. M. Young, Fremont; Dr. W. B. Lippard, New York. Dr. W. E. Chalmers of Philadelphia who was to have given the closing address each morning was unable to be present and President J. M. Wells gave in his place a series of addresses on "The Living Messages of the Bible."

When the assembly closed work was begun on some of the buildings. The three laboratories have been enlarged and new equipment added. The boys' dormitory has been painted and a vegetable cellar is being built.

President J. M. Wells has given a number of addresses during the summer weeks. He gave a few addresses at the Wyoming Baptist Young Peoples Assembly, at Paint Rocks Lakes, Wyoming, and since returning from Wyoming has given addresses at the North Central Association, at the grand Island Association, at the Southeastern Association and the Southern Union Association, and has a number of other engagements extending through the month of September.

Dean Charles Firth of the college is spending several weeks in Europe. He visited the Passion Play at Oberammergau, he visited the battle-fields in France, and is visiting other historical places. He will return in time for the opening of the college and will share his trip with his friends at the college.

The alumni and former students are busy in raising funds with which to build a home for the president. This new house will be called the Sutherland House in honor of the services which were performed for the institution by President Emeritus George Sutherland.

Prof. Ross E. Conelley of Waterloo, Iowa, will direct the athletics of Grand Island College for the coming school year. Prof. Conelley has been very successful in his coaching in other schools, and with the material which will be available, the Orange and Blue ought to show up well at the end of the season. Professor Conelley expects to be in Grand Island about two weeks before school opens.

Rocky Mountain States

MONTANA

REV. WILLARD OSBORN and Rev. J. A. Hoffman held a series of evangelistic meetings near Sand Creek. A church was organized with five members and ten were at once received for baptism. A Sunday school is maintained. How many churches with 100 or more members have had less than ten baptisms during the past year?

REV. T. E. MACK and Rev. W. R. Millam have each a large territory to which they minister. They have both secured stereopticons for use in their work.

COLORADO

BETHEL CHURCH, DENVER, held its annual meeting on August 30 with a large attendance. Vacancies on the board of deacons and trustees made during the year were filled. Reports of the various departments of the church showed progress. Fifty-five new members have been received into the church during the year. Dr. E. L. Krumreig, pastor of the church entered upon his fourth year of ministry to this church. The church voted an increase of $200 on the pastor's salary. At the September communion two new members were received while five others were to have received the hand of church fellowship but were unable to be present at the service. It is said by some of the older members that this has been one of the best years in the history of the church. The church is active and the future is bright.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

JAMES MADISON PRUETT, M.D., well-known and highly respected in Oregon and California, died at his home in Oakland, Calif., August 21, at the age of 73. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. George Phillips, pastor of Tenth Avenue Church of Oakland, of which Dr. Pruett had been a member for many years, assisted by Dr. Claiborne M. Hill, a friend of many years standing. Mr. Pruett leaves to mourn his death, his wife, Mrs. Precious Pruett, and three sons, Ralph, Clifford and George. Dr. Pruett was born in Oregon, the son of sturdy pioneers of 1848. Largely by his own efforts he obtained an education and graduated from the Ohio Medical College in 1875. In that same year he began the practice of medicine in Pendleton, Ore., where he lived and served in his profession and in many other ways for over twenty years. Owing to failing health he gave up his practice and moved to Oakland in 1898 where he lived until his death. Dr. Pruett was a devoted Christian, gentle in manner and speech, firm in his convictions, willing in service. He was a sacrificial and generous giver to his church, the cause of missions and education. He was deeply interested in the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, served for many years as trustee, and was among the largest givers to its endowment. The Baptist cause has lost, through Dr. Pruett's death, one of its staunchest friends.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles Association Assembly

The Baptists of Southern California have waited patiently for an assembly and the Los Angeles Association has at least partially solved the problem. The assembly idea was incorporated into the program of the association, giving one full week to Bible study, religious education and missions. The makers of the program were fortunate in securing the services of James A. Francis of the First Church, Los Angeles and W. H. Geistweit of St. Louis. These men belong to class A in assembly work. The Bible study hour was largely attended and highly instructive. The class work by G. Ellingwood Joy, Alice Jacobs, W. F. Harper, J. D. Springston and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Rider was one of the best features of the assembly. Over 300 registered and paid the admission fee. Christian education in class work is coming to the front in first-class assemblies as never before. The people appreciated the change from the old-time association. They have something of practical value to take home with them. The old-time association was a good thing in its way but like many other organizations needs new life to meet the new demands of Christian service in this day and generation. The First Church, Long Beach, with its new annex makes it a fine place for assembly work. The pastor, Rev. D. Knights, and his beloved people made every one welcome. The moderator, Chas. Barker, and the secretary, J. F. Elwell, deserve the highest praise for the days and nights of toil in making the association assembly a fine success. The association voted to meet with the Long Beach Church next August and to have assembly features the same as this year.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Moderator, F. H. Thomas; vice-moderator, Mrs. O. T. Ellis; Sec., David P. Ward; Treas., W. A. Robertson; Directors—J. F. Elwell, C. H. Barker, W. R. Litzenberg, Mrs. W. G. Burgess, Willis A. Sanford.

The clerk's report indicates that Los Angeles Association has sixty-six churches with a membership of 21,046. There were 1,099 baptisms during the past year.

"To The Limit"

THE power of the loving witness! What was the power of the early church? It was not the greatness of its preachers. The time was too early for great preachers. It was not the great Bible students. Our New Testament was still an unwritten book. The first evangelists had no book such as we have. They carried no Old Testament scriptures with them. These could be found in the synagogues. Learning was not their strength. It is true that a Paul had been converted but we read of slaves too in the churches. Jesus admitted that the poor were the ones he had the most power with. Paul flat-footedly said that not many of the leaders of the earth had been called. The power of the early church was in the loving witness of those who had felt the touch of the heart of Christ in the salvation of their souls. They told others and the others told others until the gospel had gone to the ends of the earth.

Jesus saw his work with the eyes of eternity yet we discover no program except "go ye and make disciples," "Go home and tell what great things the Lord hath done for you." Paul too was called of God to meet the need of a special crisis. He laid out no program save that of witnessing for the Lord.

What is the weakness of the work of the kingdom today? There are those who are willing to give money and time. God has opened the hearts of many. The need today is the loving witness which nearly 8,000,000 Baptists can give daily for the Lord. Yes, we need men and women, boys and girls who will go home and tell what great things the Lord hath done for them. We need unashamed Christians in all churches; we need unashamed Baptists in our churches who can say: "I'm for my Christ to the limit, you can bet your bottom dollar," and then go out and hold him up in the quiet daily testimony.—C. M. THOMPSON, JR., in Western Recorder.

Collecting Hen Feathers

A farmer's wife had spread a slanderous story about her pastor through the village and soon the whole countryside had heard it. After half a year the woman became sick and then confessed that the story was untrue and after her recovery came to the parsonage to ask for pardon. The old pastor said: "Of course, I will gladly pardon you, if you will comply with a wish of mine." "Gladly," replied the woman. "Go home. Kill a coal black hen, pluck the feathers and put them into a basket and bring them here." In half an hour she was back. "Now," said the pastor, "go through the village and at each street corner scatter a few of these feathers, the remaining ones take to the top of the bell tower and scatter them to the winds, then return." She did so. "Now go through the village and gather the feathers again, but so that not one is missing." The woman looked at the pastor with astonishment in her face and said, "Why, that is impossible! The wind has scattered them over the fields and everywhere!" "And so," said he, "while I forgive you gladly, do not forget that you can never undo the damage your untrue words have done!"—Christian World.

Prize for Posters

Every local church will want a poster on stewardship. The committee suggests that local churches have posters made by people in the church. At the close of the stewardship month if the churches will send these posters to Harry S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, a copy of Dr. McConaughy's book, "Money the Acid Test," will be sent to the person submitting the best poster.

A Wanderer Abroad

II. The Lure of London—Again

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

SOME one has said that cities reflect the soul of the country. Perhaps this may be so, but one would hardly say without qualification that New York, Boston, Philadelphia or Chicago reflect the full spirit of our own land. Yet it must be said that one learns much of the life of a country by a study of its cities. London vast, complex, cosmopolitan, alluring, is no exception to this rule. Here one can feel the currents of thought that are pulsating through the country—and beyond! The opposite may also be true, a city may also reflect what a country does not think. For instance, the American papers lately have had much to say about the cancellation of debts incurred in the war; this has not been taken seriously over here. The pronouncement made some weeks ago in government circles, so I have been informed by a friend in the House of Commons, was largely for political purposes. The fact is, France alone owes Great Britain approximately, 500,000,000 pounds upon which she has not paid a penny of interest, and apparently has given no indication of doing so; therefore the suggestion of cancellation, and the antipathy of American opinion at present toward it, might serve as a "tip" to France. The fact is, that Great Britain is paying her debts. Taxation is heavy, and I am told there must soon come some readjustment. Still in the minds of impartial and careful observers, there is the conviction that the leading nations, including America, must get together for a new understanding as to the debts before there can be anything like economic prosperity.

In the matter of Ireland, the people here are viewing it with composure. There is a feeling that Ireland now has her chance, and that she must right herself. The assassination of General Wilson, and the killing of Michael Collins, the leader of the Free State, created a mixed feeling of profound dismay and regret for the Irish cause, yet both tragedies are looked upon as typical. Ireland is now in the hands of Irishmen, and while they may have much to answer for it would seem that a nemesis was following in her wake. When she seemed on the eve of fulfillment of her national hopes, some unforeseen catastrophe has intervened. Of course "there is a reason." The other day I was told the story of two Irishmen. It was after the passing of the home rule bill, and in accordance with its terms, the British soldiers were being withdrawn from Ireland. Two Irishmen were on the dock as the last regiment went on to the vessel. Mike said to his friend, "Patrick, do you see them? There they go, that is the last of them troops, thank God, now we can fight in peace!"

There is a strong feeling here, even in this "imperial" country, that the cult of nationalism without the saving grace of internationalism is a tragic futility. A sense of universal oneness alone can prevent future wars and save democracy. It certainly is a theme for cynics, that in less than four years after the worst convulsion that civilization has ever known, men and women should have to go about arguing and "demonstrating" that there shall be no more war! The House of Commons has been much like our own congress. Little or no constructive work has been done. Mr. Lloyd George has had no little difficulty, and need of a great deal of dexterity, to keep his restless followers in line. The other day, abandoning his free trade principles, he told his liberal supporters that they owed it to their Tory colleagues to vote for the taxation of imported fabric gloves. He is a "past master" in addressing his free church brethren. Recently at a large gathering of Free Church ministers, he eloquently declared against any more war. Some days later he addressed a large group of military men, strongly endorsing an appropriation of twelve million pounds for war craft. Recently one of the London papers charged him with being a Unitarian, but another paper corrected it by saying that he was not a Unitarian but a "momentarian"! Is this the penalty a man has to pay for being notorious, or famous, or both?

Sunday School Material on Stewardship

By H. S. MYERS

THE International Sunday School Lesson Committee has selected thirteen lessons on Christian stewardship, selected the Scripture passages to accompany them and released them to the publishing houses. The American Baptist Publication Society invited Dr. Edward B. Pollard to prepare the lesson material and these lessons are just being issued in time for the special period of stewardship in October.

The lessons are bound in a form similar to that of the Graded lessons, contain 72 pages and are entitled "Christian Stewardship." Keystone elective course for young people and adults. Each lesson contains the title, the biblical basis, an introduction, such divisions as are necessary to properly discuss the subject, and concludes with questions, and helpful books.

Any church that wants help in studying stewardship will find this course well adapted to the Sunday-school class, and the material such as will help in any wise study of this subject. Orders should be placed immediately so that the class may begin October 1 and continue until the end of the year.

Thank God! When the great cotton-wood tree near our tennis court snapped clean off in the middle, the top spiked straight into the ground between the two houses of our academy Chinese principal and of the acting principal. Had it fallen ten feet to the east, it would have pierced Mr. Daniel Fu in his bed; had it swerved ten feet to the west it would have killed the wife and children of Principal Lin, who is now touring Annam and other southern countries loyally raising up friends among the Chinese dispersion to erect new school buildings here.

But of Swatow! What will they tell us when the boats begin to cross the harbor tomorrow. Rumor already has it that 6000 have been done to death. Chief Lim says officially that the number now reported have reached 1500. Storehouses down; the electric light plant flat; no floating wharves to be found; and the harbor junks piled high inland! The leaf-stripped trees look as if the timber-line of the country had suddenly been lowered to the sea level. The oldest inhabitants say that in sixty years they have not seen such destruction.

Our repairs will cost at least as much as in 1918 earthquake days. Chaoyang and Kityang certainly fell to the gale. What will they report? Was the typhoon only local? Or are all our South China stations in sore distress? These questions surge through my mind as I speed these lines to you. During the last school year we have received more students into the church than ever before. Where's the money for putting our buildings in such shape that we can open them again this fall for the most promising term of our history? It's coming only six weeks off. With the kingdom at hand what shall we do?

Swatow, China.

Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Washington, President of the Foreign Mission Society, and Mr. W. T. Sheppard, of Lowell, Mass., a member of the board of managers, have returned to the United States from their tour of the various capitals of Europe where they had the privilege of addressing immense audiences and holding numerous conferences with groups of European Baptists. They reached New York, Sept. 5 and spoke most enthusiastically of their wonderful experiences.

Disciples Turn from the Theological to the Practical

By O. F. JORDON

AFTER several years of theological controversy in their national conventions the Disciples of Christ this year at the gathering at Winona Lake, Aug. 28-Sept. 3, moved forward to a consideration of the practical tasks of the kingdom of God. The conservatives of the denomination were not present in large numbers, as they are planning to hold a "congress" in St. Louis in October. However, enough of them were at Winona Lake so that their point of view had proper representation.

Rev. John T. Brown went to China the past year to secure reports of irregular practices on the part of the missionaries. He seemed rather dispirited in his address which clearly fixed upon the missionaries a charge, which they themselves admitted in the convention reports, of receiving unimmersed people as members and inducting them into teaching positions in the mission. Henceforth these will be kept on a separate list as "guest" members, and will be listed as belonging to their various denominations.

The question of creedal action on the part of the board of managers at its meeting last winter was threshed out in the convention. The board in a letter to Rev. E. K. Higdon explicitly disclaims any desire to meddle with the private opinions of the missionaries, but asks of them only that board policies shall be carried out. Though many charge a grave inconsistency between the alleged creedal resolution and the interpretation put upon it in the Higdon letter, the convention, weary of the whole matter, buried it by adopting the offending resolution with its inconsistent interpretation.

It is largely in the field of religious promotion that the recent convention finds its meaning. Though the Disciples are not ready to be committed to any possible objectives since the failure of the Inter-church and the payment of $600,000 underwritings, they have appointed a commission to study the world field and to bring in a report at the next convention on three objectives. These are the development of the local church by evangelism and religious education, the raising of funds for buildings and endowments, and the increase of the regular missionary budgets to a point where the annually occurring deficits may be avoided. The women of the convention launched in this convention their Golden Jubilee campaign which involves raising $1,000,000 with which to erect fifty buildings on home and foreign fields, the securing of 50,000 new members of local missionary societies and the enlistment of 50,000 new subscribers for World Call, a monthly magazine presenting Disciples activities. The department of evangelism is in the midst of a five-year campaign to add 1,000,000 members to the churches. The church erection department is moving forward to secure an increase of its fund from $1,900,000 to $2,500,000. This money is loaned to churches building. The foreign department hopes to secure $100,000 as a memorial to Dr. A. L. Shelton, a missionary murdered by bandits on the border of Tibet this year. Five colleges of the Disciples are in endowment campaigns, seeking a total of $3,000,000. These and other great projects are lifting the Disciples out of the fog of doctrinal controversy.

The achievements of the past year are creditable, the United Christian Missionary Society securing a total of $2,702,730.76 for foreign missions, home missions, church erection, ministerial relief and benevolence. The foreign department is utilizing every modern invention in its program beyond the sea. On the Congo in equatorial Africa an electric light and power station is being installed, certain industrial operations will be run with the power, and a wireless service will unite missionaries that are hundreds of miles apart.

A stronger emphasis on spiritual exercise was a feature this year. The morning prayer meetings, the daily sermon at eleven o'clock, and the mass communion service on the last day of the convention, all bore testimony to the desire of Disciples leaders to bring unity to the movement through a renewal of loyalty to the Head of the church.

Leaders Who Know

The time has come for a great campaign for teaching the doctrines of grace; the people are longing to hear the great things of divine revelation preached from our pulpits; they are tired of the equivocal statements on the one hand and the discursive harangue on the other. The masses want to know what God thinks of them and how they can get to him; they long to hear that God can forgive in righteousness; that Jesus Christ is the Daysman betwixt us, and that we have redemption through his blood. The eighteenth century was born and cradled in those truths. We must have some of the old grit and positivism of Calvinism in our pulpits; but before that can be the preachers must believe and be sure themselves. Oh, for leaders who know and are sure, who are not always talking about passing through a transitional period and counting heads as to who has the majority. God is wanting men who will strike a very definite blow for him, and the weapon he has given to strike with is his Word; but if we would strike, we must not doubt the weapon.

but civic righteousness as a religious virtue is an idea of modern acceptance.

The public is apprised of numerous instances of such work within the course of any year. At the present time, for example, 40,000 boys and girls under 15 years of age assemble daily in churches or social settlements in Chicago to attend vacation schools conducted under the auspices of the Chicago Church federation. There hours that otherwise would give them no useful instruction are devoted to manual training or are given over to tales of American history or to talks on good habits. Many summer camps also are conducted where love of outdoor life is engendered and where, in the fellowship fostered by the free environment, sound ideas on many subjects are instilled.

Another kind of contribution by the church to the cause of good citizenship is illustrated in the protest to be presented to the Episcopal general convention in September against moral laxity, against attacks on marriage and parenthood and against the breaking up of home influences.

Such contributions to the moral up-building of the nation, made continually by religious organizations—Catholics, protestants and Jews alike—not only aid the cause of citizenship but perform a service of definite spiritual value to the people.

Trading on Our Fears

IT IS interesting to remember that Christ, who knows what is in man, never trades upon their fears in making his appeals to men. Christ is utterly unlike the kind of evangelism which is sometimes carried on in his name, which works upon the fear of sin's detection and of sin's material consequences, draws lurid pictures of the future punishment of sin, and seeks to drive men into the kingdom just as a shepherd may drive sheep, by a barking dog at their heels, into the fold of safety. I want to say that in my judgment there is nothing whatever in common between that kind of evangelism and the spirit with which Jesus deals with men. He never trades upon their fears. He deals with fear as one of the great factors, I have said, in the moral fight which every man has to wage, but he never trades upon it in order to secure some acquiescence on their part with his declarations of eternal truth. The Lord help us ministers and evangelists and Christian workers to work yet more harmoniously with the spirit and method of our Lord Jesus Christ!—J. STUART HOLDEN, in Record of Christian Work.

Our Book Shelf

Revival Gems. American Baptist Publication Society. 10 cents per copy plus carriage.

An excellent and economical little book for special evangelistic campaigns.

Evangelistic Talks, by Gipsy Smith. New York: Doran Co. $1.25.

The Gipsy held a series of meetings in Nashville last winter and a feature of the campaign was the noon-day meetings at Ryman Auditorium. A local minister gave a ten-minute talk, and was at once followed by an impromptu address on the same text and theme by the evangelist, who did not know beforehand the nature of the message. The book is helpful for its suggestiveness in evangelistic and devotional themes.

Outline Introduction to New Testament. By George S. Duncan. Washington, D. C. Y. M. C. A. 25 cents.

A sixty-page pamphlet prepared for use in Y. M. C. A. Bible Classes, and now made available for wider use. Brief introductions and analyses for all New Testament writings, following in the main the traditional views as to authorship and origin. The author is very sure of the dates of all these writings, giving the exact year in every case. The work should be very helpful for study classes in N. T. Introduction.

A Manual Greek Lexicon of the New Testament, by G. Abbott-Smith, D. D., of Montreal Diocesan Theological College. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $6.00.

This compact, close-printed book of 500 pages, weighing two pounds, completely fulfills the promise of its title as far as convenience goes. Indeed the pages are so closely set as to tax the eye.

All lovers of New Testament Greek will find in the work an important aid to the study of the Word. The author has given especial attention to the researches made during the past quarter century covering the non-literary papyri: "It is now abundantly clear that the diction of the apostolic writers is not a peculiarly isolated idiom, characteristic of Jewish Hellenists, but simply the common speech of the Greek-speaking world at the time when the New Testament books were written."

It is open to question whether the author has not minimized the distinctive quality of the New Testament Greek as being influenced by its Hebrew background and LXX antecedents; although references to the LXX text are copious.

It is perhaps inevitable that a normal lexicon should be brief; but definitions which merely translate a word are hardly satisfying, and for a discussion of the development and modification of the meaning one must still depend on Cremer or a similar work.

Week-Day Sermons, by R. W. Dale. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

A reprint of twelve practical discourses by Dale of Birmingham, who being dead yet speaketh. The book is printed from old plates with small type, but conveys large ideas and ideals.

The Indiana Survey of Religious Education—Summary and Recommendations, by Walter S. Athearn, published by the Committee on Social and Religious Surveys, 111 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price 25c.

This 40-page pamphlet contains in substance Chapter 2 of Vol. I of the three-volume report of the Indiana Survey soon to be published by Doran for the Committee on Surveys. As a try-square for testing out the church school and revealing its defects, this treatise by Prof. Athearn is invaluable. It deals with principles, facts, figures and actual conditions; and any school will be better for being tried out and shaped up by this standard.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

CHOOSING A CAREER

A number of musicians were overheard discussing the merits of music as a profession. About nine out of ten of them declared that on no account would they permit their children to become musicians.

The only reason a musician can have for choosing some other calling for his children is that he does not know the drawbacks of other professions as well as he knows the troubles of a musical career. They talk about the great fees a lawyer gets, as if all lawyers got great fees. They can hardly believe that the legal profession is crowded from top to bottom and that the percentage of lawyers who get as large fees as a successful tenor is exceedingly small.

They hear about the money a famous surgeon receives for operating on a millionaire and they compare it with the meager income of a local church organist or a theater conductor, forgetting that an equally famous pianist or violinist is as royally paid. There are hundreds of little doctors in all parts of the world who have the greatest difficulty in making ends meet. They read with envy of the gold that rolled in when Liszt undertook to raise money. They would forsake materia medica, pharmacopoeia, lotions, pills and ointments in the twinkling of an eye for the endless resources Sullivan found in the coffers of the Savoy Theater.

Musicians talk about the money that is to be made in business, as if there were not thousands upon thousands of small groceries, shoe shops, cigar and candy stores in every back street. Very few of the boys who go into business ever do any business that is worth while. Most of them remain assistants and clerks, working long hours during the best parts of every day for pay which the average musician would consider small.

We have heard lawyers, doctors, business men, repeatedly express the wish that they could become musicians so that they might earn their living more easily. They know only the troubles of their own calling and not those of the musical profession. Ninety years ago a writer in the London Sunday Times for March 18, 1832, wrote a paragraph which indicates that he thought a famous musician earned his money easily. This is the paragraph:

It was observed by a rigid timekeeper that in Paganini's concert last week at Winchester, his own performance, for which he received £200, only occupied twenty-eight minutes.

Ninety years ago £200 was actually worth much more than $1,000 today, yet that sum represented a vastly longer time than twenty-eight minutes. It is the obscure time of preparation which is overlooked by those who have not prepared for a given profession. It looks easy to do the doctor's work of feeling pulses and jotting down a jargon of Latin and Arabic on a piece of paper. It seems simple enough to sit in a court and talk about the prisoner's guilt and innocence. It appears to be a holiday trip to walk back and forth on the bridge of a huge ocean liner and guide it from New York to Liverpool. It is evidently nothing but sport to play a concerto with orchestra and then come back to the platform and bow until the public stops applauding.

A very shrewd Latin poet—Horace, in fact—about 2,000 years ago wrote that every man thought the other man's work was better than his own. If he could have heard those musicians who said their children were not to be musicians he would doubtless have remarked: "I told you so."

The proper course for a parent to pursue is to discover, if possible, what talent the child has. It would have been a calamity for the world if the parents of J. S. Bach had decided that their children were to be kept out of the musical profession. Other musical parents have tried in vain to make their children musical. It is rumored that the sons of clergymen are frequently deficient in the theological urge and cannot be brought up as eminent divines. But we have never heard of a clergyman who refused to permit his son to enter the church. Musicians ought to have more sense than to fight a child's natural talent, if it has any. If it has none, it might as well go into politics or ballooning as music. The failure will be due to the man and not to the profession. —Musical Courier.

O Robin, Little Robin McCollin (50c)

Of song-making and song-publishing there seems no end! But if all the lyrics issued were as pleasing and attractive as the four listed above, all we could say would be, "the more the better!" These samples of modern American songs are without exception, pleasing, singable and individual. To the active singer in search of program novelties, interesting alike to singer and listener, and to the teacher looking for songs of teaching value, these four numbers are cordially recommended. All are published in two keys, the vocal ranges called for are not extreme, the composers have kept in close contact with the sense of the practical, but have been guided by the feeling for the beautiful which must underlie all serious art effort. Both publisher and singers should look for great success with these songs.

Two sets of piano pieces, specifically designed as easy teaching pieces, but of sufficient musical interest to make them available for general use. The name of Gaynor has for many years been significant for valuable pedagogical ideas embodied in pleasing teaching pieces. Piano teachers will require no urging to examine this new volume. It is worthy to rank with the other successful sets put out in the past—which is high praise. The suite by Loudon is equally interesting. It is the fruition of years spent in actual teaching here in Chicago. Miss Loudon's high standing as an artist and a teacher is exemplified in this latest work of her pen. The book is sub-titled "a preparation for octave-study", and therein lies its main educational value. Musically, the short pieces are intensely interesting, will undoubtedly please the pupil, and aid largely in refining and extending the musical taste of the player. Really a fine addition to the piano literature of this nation!

ger). Two young people's organs were published, one in English and one in German. The Yokefellow had 2,339 subscribers and the Jugendfreund had 1,383. Both are to be merged in the above mentioned English paper. The Wegweiser is a monthly paper for general distribution and has 7,321 subscribers. The Cheerful Sower is a Sunday-school paper appearing monthly and has 6,922 numbers, while the Quarterly Lesson Magazine has a monthly output of 20,815.

The society published the following new books and pamphlets: "The Life of Prof. J. S. Gubelmann, D.D.," and a few selected sermons compiled by Prof. Otto Koenig; third edition of the church hymnal called "Die Glaubensharfe"; "The Value of the Bible" by Prof. Lewis Kaiser; "The Leadership of the Holy Spirit" by Rev. E. Umbach; an English tract of eight pages entitled: "The Local Church" by the Rev. C. A. Daniel; the annual Christian Volkskalender; the annual conference minutes, a valuable little annual note book with information about the denomination and all its enterprises. Two other publications are in the process of printing. The publication society has cooperated with the missionary committee in supporting two colporters.

Widows and Orphans

The denomination has a beautiful orphans' and children's home in St. Joseph, Mich., in which during the last three years there were 25, 35 and 33 children cared for. Thirty children have been placed in Christian homes. The home celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, June, 1921, and on that occasion it was learned that 375 orphans and half-orphans had been taken care of.

In 1898 a new society was formed to take care of children with their mothers at their own homes. Eighty-eight widows and 345 half-orphans or fatherless children were assisted and comforted during that period. At present there are thirty-seven widows and 143 children on our list for help. "Because I delivered the poor that cried, the fatherless also, that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." For nearly nine years Rev. F. S. Goergens has had charge of the Orphans' Home at St. Joseph. He and his wife have endeared themselves to the denomination but they feel impelled to relinquish the work and the board has already taken steps to fill the place. Rev. C. A. Daniel is the corresponding secretary of this home and society.

Outstanding Features and Resolutions

A seven years' course for the students who enter the German department of the Rochester Baptist Theological Seminary. This will give them four years in the preparatory department and three years in the Seminary.

A strong young people's and Sunday-school union, which will strengthen and deepen the work among the children and the young people in the line of Christian education.

The launching of a new English paper on an equal basis with the Sendbote, to be published bi-monthly and to have an editor who will devote his whole time to its interests.

The prospect of a new incorporation for charities, which shall look forward toward the amalgamation of all the charitable institutions and hold their real estate for the denomination.

An efficient finance committee to carry out effectively the budget system, which has been adopted.

Imperative measures to meet the immediate physical and spiritual needs in Russia.

The perfecting of the existing ministers' pension fund.

Earnest prayers and evangelistic efforts for the winning of souls to Christ.

An unanimous resolution against war. We pledge ourselves to pray and to work to make the slogan "No more war" effective.

Prof. Lewis Kaiser, who had presided over the triennial conference for nine consecutive terms with wisdom and with an unusual poise and Christian spirit desired to be relieved from this responsibility. He was given a hearty and unanimous vote of thanks. Prof. Herman von Berge was elected as the next moderator. The next triennial conference is to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1925.

Bigger and Better Baptist Church School Advance

The Baptist Church School Advance is attracting attention even outside Baptist circles. Recent mail has brought application of a Southern Baptist pastor, registration of a Reformed Sunday school, the request for use of the material by a county association and commendations by the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education, and State Sunday School Association. Registrations have come from Indiana, Washington, Ohio, Northern and Southern California, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Iowa, New York, North Dakota, District of Columbia. Many registrations are still in state directors' offices. The spirit of improvement,—the motivating principle of this advance,—is growing throughout the Northern Baptist Convention.

For the following states, Northern and Southern California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, all registrations should go to the state director of religious education and all material will be shipped from his office to the local schools so that service will be prompt and efficient. The branch houses of the American Baptist Publication Society will have on display all material available for this church school advance. Book sets may be obtained from the branch houses.

The unique thing about this advance is that every school of any degree of efficiency may join to improve its own status. Every school may register in this movement to raise the level of all our Baptist church schools.

An Early Start

Never before have Northern Baptists been summoned so early to face the tasks of the year. The comfortable month of September instead of the shivering month of January has been chosen for the beginning of promotional activities.

The first scheduled event is a series of conferences at strategic places throughout the country. Their purposes are

1. To face the facts in our present denominational situation.
2. To consider the denominational program for the year.
3. To train leaders in associational districts.
4. To prepare for the stewardship campaign in October.
5. To receive new inspiration and vision.

You Should Attend One of These Conferences

The dates range from September 18 to October 12, and the places selected include points in practically every State from Maine to the far West. Definite information about dates and places will be announced later.

The primary aim of the program will be to furnish opportunity for a full and frank discussion of all phases of our immediate denominational task and a consideration of plans and methods for its successful achievement. The usual inspirational features will also be included.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 30, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

A Prayer for Our Schools

O GOD, thou art the source of all wisdom. If we knew thee aright we would know all things. All truth is a part of thy revelation of thyself. We thank thee for our schools in which our boys and girls may learn to think some of thy thoughts after thee. We pray for those who teach them. Inspire them with the great thought of their opportunity and sober them with the great conviction of their responsibility. Help them to realize that they are not only teaching subjects, but that they are making citizens, forming lives, building characters, and shaping the destiny of immortal souls. We are trusting to them our children who are our most precious possession. May they help our children to be all that we would have them to be. May they help them to become men and women who will enlarge the borders of thy kingdom, who will increase the understanding of thy wisdom, and who will strengthen the cause of thy righteousness in all the world. Help us in our homes and our places of business to do our part to strengthen the hands of those who labor in our behalf in the schools. And, God, bless our boys and girls. Guide their feet into the paths of right. Strengthen their hands for service. Keep their hearts clean and may their lips always honor thee. In the name of our greatest Teacher, Jesus Christ, we pray. Amen.

—J. Sherman Wallace.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Gilbert N. Brink of the Publication Society is seriously ill at his home in Philadelphia. Dr. Brink has been a tireless worker, carrying not only the heavy burdens of the society but also serving on many important denominational committees. We fear that he has worked away beyond his strength.

In 1799, says Rev. W. Camp in the Canadian Baptist, the first church was organized in Sackville, and today the Baptist churches in the Province of New Brunswick, in what are known as the eastern, western and southern associations, have a membership of 28,220.

A noted Austrian astronomer has recently discovered a new planet which he has named "Hooveria" in honor of Mr. Herbert Hoover. We understand that the Austrian Academic Senate has endorsed this name.

The debate between Lincoln and Douglas was recently celebrated in Freeport, Ill., and three women citizens attended the exercises in the same gowns they wore when they heard the great orators over fifty years ago.

On September 7 Brazil inaugurated the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of her independence. The United States received an invitation to participate, as did the other civilized nations of the world. Uncle Sam's answer to the invitation was an appropriation of $1,000,000.

Upon the recent death of the president of the Michigan Sunday School Council of Religious Education, Rev. Clarence W. Kemper, pastor of First Baptist Church of Lansing, as first vice-president becomes head of this important organization. At the coming state convention to be held in Lansing, Nov. 1-3, it is expected that 3,500 delegates will attend. Mr. Kemper is at the same time president of the Lansing Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

Dr. H. B. Benninghoff of Waseda University in Tokyo, Japan, is in the United States on furlough. As a missionary of the Foreign Mission Society he has been rendering remarkable service at this great institution where he is admired and beloved by both students and faculty. He has prepared the way for additional Christian workers, and now two other Baptist young men are assisting him in the teaching and in bringing the Christian message before the students in this large government university.

On September 17 the corner-stone of the new building for the greater Immanuel Church, Chicago, Rev. Johnston Myers, pastor, was laid with befitting ceremonies. This church will be a permanent institution near the center of the city, doing practical religious and educational work the year around, offering ever an open door for troubled and sinning humanity. The building will cost $225,000.

A celebration of the twenty-fifth year of service of Rev. M. P. Boynton as pastor of the Woodlawn Baptist Church, Chicago, was observed Wednesday evening, Sept. 13 at the church. This coincided with Dr. Boynton's thirtieth wedding anniversary and with his thirtieth year in the ministry. Among the speakers were: Dr. Benjamin Otto, Dr. Howard Agnew Johnson, Dr. G. W. Taft, Rev. A. E. Peterson, Dr. Francis Stifler, Rev. J. W. Rees and Mr. Arthur Burrage Farwell. The membership of the church took this occasion to present the Boynton family with a 112-piece set of exclusively designed gold-band china.

Dr. George F. Holt, who closed his service with the Western Washington Convention as director of promotion July 31, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Baptist church of Lindsay, Calif., and will begin his work there Oct. 1.

"The home is the citadel of Hinduism" writes Rev. W. A. Stanton of South India. "In this sacred shrine will be fought out the final conflict between Christianity and Hinduism. This inner fortress of Hinduism, with its doors barred and bolted by the hundreds of wives and mothers, must be taken if India is to be won for Christ."

The Baptists of Detroit have suffered a serious loss in the sudden death of W. Sherman Lister. Mr. Lister was for years engaged in educational work. During the time of his service he was largely responsible for the establishment in the schools of what was then regarded as the radical courses of manual training, domestic science, school gardening and school savings. He moved to Detroit in 1912 and has rendered most valuable service to the Baptist cause in that city.

"It is made possible to us to be benefactors in the highest kind, to give to this man and that a God."
—Marcus Dods.

One of the features of the congressional race in the Michigan primaries was the lead held by Grant M. Hudson of Lansing, the director of promotion of the Michigan Baptist Convention, over W. W. Blackney, of Flint, who had the endorsement of the association against the prohibition amendment. Mr. Hudson was for several years the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Michigan. We expect to visit Grant in Washington.

The First Church, Providence, R. I., wishes to minister in every possible way to Baptist students entering Brown University and also to get in touch with their families. In the case of freshmen it is particularly desirable that early connections with the church be established. Baptist parents are therefore asked to send at once to the pastor, Rev. Arthur W. Cleaves, the names and probable addresses of such students, and any other information which may prove helpful.

The Foreign Mission Society recently received an official communication from the mayor of the city of Braunau in Czechoslovakia, stamped with the municipal seal and countersigned by the headquarters of the police department, conveying the grateful appreciation of the city on behalf of the people to whom were distributed the clothing, shoes and other relief supplies which were part of the shipment sent to Europe in the "Ship of Fellowship" last November. The communication emphasizes that this distribution preserved the health of many a child who might have succumbed to the severity of the winter because of the lack of fuel in the homes. A detailed list was enclosed showing the distribution in the municipal schools and in the poorhouse, and voicing the gratitude of all who were recipients of these gifts. An accompanying letter from Rev. Walter Hoffmann, pastor of the Baptist church in Braunau, indicates that he, as pastor, recently had the privilege of baptizing eleven people on confession of their faith.

Dr. Geo. W. Truett has completed twenty-five years of service with the First Church of Dallas, Texas. Congratulations came from all parts of the country. Dr. Truett in the words of Editor E. C. Routh "has been the uncompromising foe of sin in every form but the friend of every sinner." This doubtless accounts in part for this long and fruitful ministry.

The Swedish Baptists of America according to reports made at the general conference which is being held in Chicago now have 345 churches with a membership of 32,000 and church property valued at $4,000,000. The amount given for beneficence last year amounted to nearly $1,000,000. The first Swedish Baptist church in America was organized in Rock Island, Ill., September, 1852.

Mr. Wm. Dockery, a prominent business man of Memphis who made the largest subscription reported to the 75-Million Campaign in the sum of $400,000, contributed the funds for the erection of the Hughla Dockery Home for nurses, which was recently opened at the Baptist Memorial Hospital at Memphis, as a memorial to his wife.

Rev. Leopold R. Hass was ordained as pastor of the Baptist Church, Marblehead, Mass., Thursday, Sept. 7. Rev. Ralph P. Sherwood, pastor of First Church, Salem, was moderator of the council, Rev. E. H. Prescott, pastor of the Newburyport Church, clerk. At the evening exercises, Mr. Sherwood presided and Mr. Prescott presented the records of the council. The devotional service was conducted by Rev. Morton S. Enslin, Arlington. Prof. F. L. Anderson of Newton, preached.

Lieut. Belvin W. Maynard, known as the "flying parson" was killed Sept. 7, while flying at Rutland, Vt. When the world war broke out Mr. Maynard was preaching at the Wake Union Missionary Baptist Church of North Carolina. He went to work in a rifle factory, but later joined the aviation corps and went to France in October, 1917, where he won the name of the "flying parson." He was an airplane tester, his duty being to try out the newly arrived aircraft. He tested 1,700 machines in the seventeen months he was overseas.

So rapidly are the Baptists of America growing that in the three years from 1918 to 1921, inclusive, their number increased by 1,000,000, according to a survey that has just been completed by Dr. E. P. Alldredge, secretary of survey, statistics and information of the Baptist Sunday-school board at Nashville. It required 220 years, or from 1639 to 1859, for Baptists in the United States and Canada to gain their first million members, the survey reveals, but the second million was gained in the twenty years from 1859 to 1879, a period that included the Civil War and the Reconstruction Days, while the third million was gained in the succeeding ten years. The fourth million came in eight years, the fifth million in nine, the sixth in seven, the seventh in five and the eighth in three years, the total number of regular missionary Baptists in the United States and Canada for 1921 being 8,115,445. Were the several varieties of other types of Baptists included the total would be swelled by a few hundred thousand, perhaps.

Hard Knots

There are a lot of problems which have not yet been solved to the satisfaction of THE BAPTIST. Here are just a few of them: Why are so many ministers called to preach who can't preach? Why do so many men aspire to the office of deacon who simply won't "deak"? Why do so many members of the young people's society have gray hair? Why do so many folks change their voices when they testify in meeting? Why do the people who never read their denominational newspapers and have only the faintest conception of the vastness of our extension work—why we ask do these folks speak with such an air of finality about the way our missionary work, our educational work and even our newspaper should be carried on? We will welcome light from any source.

Killam's Kollum

A Burrallism

"I am proud of THE BAPTIST. I picked up the other day five magazines and periodicals in which I found our paper quoted. I believe it is the most widely quoted denominational newspaper in the country."—Miss Jessie Burrall before the Administrative Committee, New York, September 13.

A Good Committee

It is the duty of the Administrative Committee to appoint a sub-committee on THE BAPTIST. The personnel of the Administrative Committee is so changed that the new committee does not have upon it a single member who has served heretofore. It is, however, a good committee. Dr. Emory W. Hunt is chairman, and Dr. C. A. Barbour and Dr. Hugh A. Heath are the other members. It is a good thing that these men are not superstitious, for they are serving on the thirteenth committee which has had to do with THE BAPTIST, and held their first meeting on the thirteenth day of September.

Not Literature

"Where does THE BAPTIST come in on this splendid program of activities which has been prepared and circulated?" we asked a member of the Board of Promotion. "It must come in under literature," was his generous reply. We object. No one who takes the paper and reads it has ever had the thought even in his subconscious mind that THE BAPTIST was literature. Literature reminds one of an alcove in a memorial library. THE BAPTIST is not literature manufactured to endure throughout countless generations. It is made to give you a glimpse here and there of what Christian people are thinking, planning and performing. Since THE BAPTIST is not literature, what is it? Watch for a startling announcement!

A Sure Sign

We predict that there will be very few changes in pastorates this fall. We base our judgment upon the surprising lack of glowing reports of great accomplishments which usually appear a few months before the actual change takes place. The minister must not be charged with sole responsibility for these symptomatic effusions. The church itself is usually a party to them for does it not want a change, and does it not want to make a favorable impression upon the next martyr to be? Here THE BAPTIST, as usual, serves both the pastor and the church.

The National Christian Conference of China

Part II. Its Message

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

IT was evident that the speakers and commissions, appointed far in advance of the meeting at Shanghai, had made careful preparation. Their deliverances, therefore, reflected the reasoned opinions of the Chinese Christian leaders, and not merely the enthusiasm and emotions induced by the extraordinary occasion. Those opinions, held by many Chinese Christians, may surprise some who have been unaware of the rising tides of national consciousness and the consequent growth of the spirit of self-determination now manifesting itself in every realm of life, the world around.

Frequent Phrases

There were many speakers, and six commissions were ready with extensive printed reports on "The State of the Church", "The Task of the Church", "The Message of the Church", "The Leadership of the Chinese Church" and "Organization and Cooperation." Throughout these addresses and printed reports ran the phrases, "the Chinese church" and "an indigenous Christianity", and although attention was given to many very practical themes, those phrases seemed to furnish the text of the utterances which may be said to constitute the message of the National Christian Conference of China. The burden of that message can best be interpreted, not by quoting single sentences from numerous deliverances, but by quoting rather freely from the address of the chairman of the conference and from the report of the commission on "The Message of the Church."

The permanent chairman of the conference, who presided with skill and dignity, was Dr. C. Y. Cheng, of Peking, a student for several years at the University of Edinburgh, long the pastor of a church in Peking which was established by the London Missionary Society, and more recently a secretary of the China Continuation Committee. The portions of Dr. Cheng's long address, which are quoted here, do not cover the field as he reviewed it, but they do suggest the questions that are uppermost in the minds of Chinese Christian leaders. Dr. Cheng said in part:

Too Many Things for Granted

"We are here to try to concentrate our attention on the future development of the Chinese church and on the adjustment of its work to that of the missions. Circumstances in the past have led the church in China to follow unconsciously the pathway of dependence upon the missions both for their material and spiritual requirements. The most serious aspect of this problem is not the dependence of the Chinese church upon the liberality of Christians in other lands. Its dependence upon the thoughts, ideas, institutions and methods of work of others is an even more difficult problem. The church has thus far taken too many things for granted in an unquestioned way and has not developed sufficiently in independent thinking and in forming its own judgments. How can a church hope to grow in strength and in wisdom under such circumstances?"

"We cannot but regard as something less than the best the mere blind following of what others say or do; the wholesale acceptance of customs, traditions, terms, institutions and methods. Nay, we would go even further and say that to accept even the interpretations of religious truth without searching the original sources and thinking through their implications for one's self is something less than the best. Christianity in China is seriously handicapped at the present time by being regarded as a foreign religion. This handicap should be removed and Christianity which is a universal religion and is capable of adapting itself to the needs of every land in every age, should become naturalized in China.

"The Chinese church must not rest satisfied with anything less than getting completely under the load. In doing so, however, she cannot guarantee that the work will be carried on in precisely the same manner, or by the use of the same methods as has been the case during the period of predominant foreign direction in the past.

"Let no one think for a moment that by the foregoing remarks we even suggest for a moment the preaching of a new Gospel, or presenting of a Christ different from him revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures.

Harvest

"You may have forgotten an interview that we had," so said a stranger once to an old Christian. "It was twenty years ago. At the time I did not thank you for what you said; but I must tell you now that, under God, I owe you my soul."

"The foundation," so said St. Paul, "is already laid and no man can lay another." The church of Christ in China is a part of the Church Universal. It is being built upon the foundation of Christ and on him alone. Truth knows no change, "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever." The whole world needs Christ as much today as men of old, and China is no exception.

"The work of Christ in China has merely been begun, even after 115 years since the arrival of the first Protestant missionaries. The presence of the missionary is not only desirable but necessary. The work demands our united efforts and the joint action if China is ever to be evangelized. What we do desire to see, however, is that the quality of the missionaries who intend to come to China should be very carefully considered by the responsible representatives of the churches in other lands. Especially is it important to find out what is their attitude and spirit toward the Chinese people."

It is significant that the commission on "The Message of the Church", whose work was done so carefully, was composed entirely of Chinese. In the preamble to the report were these words: "During recent years there has been throughout China a growing conviction that the Chinese church has reached a time when she ought to voice her own opinions and when she must state her religious experiences in her own terms." "Since the central theme of the conference is to be the 'Chinese Church', therefore the 'Message of the Church' must be indigenous in character, and the organization of the commission must be wholly Chinese." It is significant too that in the preamble were these words: "We are not aiming to make a statement of doctrines, but a statement of our religious experiences. Most important of all, we recognize that the very heart of the Christian message is Jesus Christ himself."

From this most interesting report of about 15,000 words it is possible to quote here brief extracts only from each subdivision of the topic.

TO CHRISTIANS

A. The United Church

We are not unaware of the diverse gifts through the denominations that have been used by God for the enrichment of the church. Yet we recognize fully that denominationalism is based upon differences, the historical significance of which, however real and vital to the missionaries from the West, are not shared by us Chinese. Therefore, denominationalism instead of being a source of inspiration, has been and is a source of confusion, bewilderment and inefficiency.

B. The Indigenous Church

We notice that the Chinese church is becoming conscious of her own unique mission and duty today. The history of China, the characteristics of the people, the nature of the work, the results of our past experience, and the rapidly changing conditions of the country all demand an indigenous church which will present an indigenous Christianity, a Christianity which does not sever its continuity with the historical churches but at the same time takes cognizance of the spiritual inheritance of the Chinese race.

C. The Deeper Consecration of the Church

We recognize that the personal conduct of individual Christians and the behaviour of the church as a body is the living testimony to the Gospel of Christ. We recognize that the task of evangelization cannot be efficiently done without a genuine Christ-like life.

D. More Diligent Study of the Word of God.

We Chinese Christians accept the Bible as the inspired Word of God and the supreme guide of faith and practice. We believe that since the Bible is the Word of God, the truth of God fears no test. It can stand any investigation of a reverent heart. We wish to make known that we fear no application of any genuine scientific method to the study of the Holy Scriptures.

E. Social Regeneration

We believe that sin is not only fundamentally an individual problem, but that it is also social. We believe that an unjust economic order, an unrighteous political regime, unfair treatment of any human being, or of any group, is unacceptable to the righteous and loving God. We hereby call upon the whole church to proclaim justice as part of the love of God, and to apply Christ's teaching of justice in our social life.

F. International Brotherhood

We firmly believe that the teaching and life of Christ has taught us beyond any doubt the possibility and the necessity of international world-brotherhood. With him nothing is impossible.

The Dynamic of Intelligent Prayer

ANYTHING worth while is worth studying. We all believe that prayer is worth while. But we give it little study. Like farming and rearing children, it is one of the great occupations of life which somehow we suppose will take care of itself. In every church there are people who always lead in prayer when opportunity is given. All too often the prayer is a repetition of former prayers. The same phrases are used and the same objects lift us to God's throne. Pastors are guilty here as well as deacons and others. There is need of more study in our prayer life.

How long would any of us remain at a summer resort where the same meals were served every day? And how must the Lord feel when day by day he hears the same old prayers? We have been in boarding houses where the menu rotates every week. We know that there will be chicken on Sunday and ham on Monday and croquettes on Tuesday and baked beans on Saturday, and we can endure this for a month or two. It is a vast improvement on the other. But it, too, is far from the ideal.

In our homes where the wife and mother cares most scrupulously for our diet she gears the menu to the round of the month. Chicken once a month, Washington pie once a month, corn beef and cabbage once a month, beef tenderloin once a month. And we never grow tired of any of them. The calories are balanced and the vitamins are rightly proportioned. This is the ideal.

What is the difference between the average keeper of the boarding-house and the devoted housewife? One puts more study on her menu than the other. Not that one is endowed with more intelligence than the other; but one has more love for those she serves than has the other. If we really love our God we will put more study on our offerings of prayer to him. We will not say the same thing every time—we will not even follow a cycle of a week. We will adopt the suggestion of the General Board of Promotion appended to the Indianapolis Report and make our cycle of prayer a monthly rotation.

The first week we will pray for our church. We always do that anyway. But we will do it with more definiteness. We will pray that its people may live lives of such joy and rectitude in the community that people will feel the cleansing touch of God upon their hearts when they pass the building. We will pray for the pastor that he may carry the burden of his difficult responsibilities in these critical days so that all who run may read in his life the way of salvation. We will pray for the officers of the church that they may regard their trust in kingdom leadership as they do their responsibility for wife and child. We shall pray for our Bible school and our young people's work that their influence may be greatly extended and that no avenues for the training of the young may be neglected. We should pray for the women of the church. This is the era of woman's progress. She might mean so much more. We should pray for the needy in the church, calling them by name, pouring out our hearts so that on their sick beds, in their grief, amid their doubts, or under their discouragements they may feel the power of our prayers. Here is a cycle for each day of the first week—a cycle of prayers for the church.

Our cycle for the second week might be studied prayer for the organizations of our conventions. We know all about our church, the names of the officers, and the condition of the needy, but we must study during the second week before our prayers may be made. Who comprises the General Board of Promotion, who is its director, who are on its administration committee, who are on its advisory council—what are its tasks and its discouragements? Let us learn these things and then pray for the General Board of Promotion. And so of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's Foreign Board on another day and the home boards on another day, and the Publication Society and the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board on another day. Has our pastor a pension? No, because it will cost him $150 more or less, for the first premium. Could not the church pay this? Let us pray about it. On another day we might pray for our schools and colleges and for the valiant work we are doing at the great religionless state institutions. All this will take study before we pray. Again we must pray for our own state convention and for the great work of the city mission societies. Has some little struggling church near us no hymnals? We have some we can spare. Intelligent prayer will always yield this sort of fruit. And finally in this second week we may pray for the denominational press. It has long been the object of our criticisms. Make it now the earnest object of our prayers. And so we will have made the round of our denominational organizations.

In the third week we may pray for our workers abroad on all our foreign mission fields, in the fourth week for our workers at home with Negroes, Indians, Orientals, Mormons, Alaskans and all other; in the fifth week for our country, for our Baptist president and Baptist secretary of state, for our state and local governments and for our international relationship, just now so full of kingdom possibilities.

This monthly cycle of intelligent prayer might be made the function of the family altar or where there is no family of the daily private devotions of the individual. Secure a copy of the "Cycle of Prayer," make a five-minute study of the daily object of prayer, repeat the names of officers of boards, missionaries on the field and then lift all to the throne of God. How mightily would the cause move on under such a force of intelligent prayer. Out in the farthest Africa there would be a warming of the heart of the lone staunchest bearer of the Cross. Down in the rush and hurry of the offices of New York, out among the Indians in the reservation would go the wave of spiritual strength. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Let us make our prayers effectual because behind them lies a concise study of the objects for which we pray.

The Baptist World Alliance—A Great Baptist Opportunity

IT is none too soon for American Baptists to be thinking seriously of securing a proper representation at the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-27, 1923. The meetings of the alliance in London in 1907, and in Philadelphia in 1911 were occasions of large inspirational value, and they did much to promote a better acquaintance on the part of groups of Baptists in different sections of the world. Moreover, practical plans were made with reference to Baptist work in Europe, which were in process of realization when the outbreak of war prevented their completion. However, on account of conditions in the world at large, the meeting in 1923 promises to be more useful than any of its predecessors.

While bodies of Baptists in different parts of the world have certain distinguishing characteristics, all of them hold in general to certain common historic principles. Sometimes a spirit of independence has led them to forget their interdependence, and until the organization of the Baptist World Alliance in 1911 there seems to have been no serious effort to promote the solidarity of Baptists the world around and to lead them into closer acquaintance and cooperation. Other denominations have held meetings since the war which represented their world-wide constituencies. It is time the Baptists held such a meeting, and it is desirable that the meeting be held on the continent of Europe.

It is exceedingly appropriate that the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance should be held at Stockholm. In 1923 Baptists of Sweden will celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the first Baptist church in that country. In seventy-five years they have made extraordinary progress, and today they compose one of the strongest and best organized groups of dissenters to be found anywhere in Europe. And against the formalism of state churches in Europe there is need for dissent. It is inspiring to know that a group of Baptists in Europe who themselves received a measure of assistance a few years ago are now preparing to entertain Baptist representatives from all parts of the world.

It will mean much to the struggling Baptists in European countries to be represented in the meeting at Stockholm, and, through their delegates, feel the heart-throb of millions of Baptists in other parts of the world. It will mean much also to Baptist churches in Asia, Africa and Latin America to establish direct relationship with their co-religionists the world around. It will mean much, as well, to strong Baptist groups in Great Britain, the United States and Canada to have fellowship with those who have been making the same fight that our own fathers made many years ago. Strange as it may seem to us, the fight for complete religious liberty, from the Baptist viewpoint, has not yet been won in all lands. Our help is needed in several directions.

The meeting of the Baptist World Alliance may be made to serve all humanity at an hour when our historic principles, if rightly understood, are sure to be widely accepted, and cannot fail to have a helpful influence in a solution of many grave problems. As a result of the conference and fellowship, there should be greater enthusiasm in enlisting all our forces, in all lands, in the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

THE BAPTIST rejoices at the prospect of a notably useful meeting at Stockholm in 1923, and desires to do everything possible to insure its highest success. From time to time we shall have more to say regarding the meeting, and in a few weeks information will be available as to the cost of the trip from America. Just now it is sufficient to call attention to the extraordinary importance of the occasion and to urge that many of our people prepare to take advantage of it.

How Long, O Lord, How Long?

THE savagery of the Turks as set forth in press dispatches paralyzes the imagination. Former American ambassador to Turkey says, "Mark my words, Turkey will be a graveyard in which both Christians and Turks will sleep side by side before the Kemalists have finished." The Turkish troops cannot be controlled and there is the same danger of tragedy and destruction at Constantinople as at Smyrna.

It is impossible to get even an accurate estimate of the loss of life in Smyrna and vicinity. It is said that the scenes recall the butcheries of Constantinople in the year 1453 when that city was taken by the Turks under Mohammed II. The Russians, dispatches read, are going to the help of the Turks while the British fleet is to defend Constantinople. We shall watch with great interest the report of Dr. Henry Allen Tupper of the First Church, Washington, D. C., who is making an independent investigation of conditions in the Near East.

Native Sons

IT IS said that there are sections of the country where it is an asset to be a "native son." It is equivalent to being a "blue blood," a Daughter of the American Revolution, in direct line of descent from some passenger on the "Mayflower," or in apostolic succession. There seems to be virtue in the fact that one happens to be born in a certain part of the world, of certain ancestry and heir to certain endowments and privileges. All of which is, of course, interesting. We have a lurking fear, however, that there is danger in any measure of dependence upon these grounds. We cannot forget our Lord's warning to men who claimed Abraham as their father but were faithless, godless and useless. If we have good blood in our veins it is our duty to pass it on untainted; if we are born in some favored spot we should make the most of it. On the other hand if there is taint in our blood and a handicap in our surroundings we need not be cast down for by God's grace we can become as "native sons."

I Will Pay-Up Campaign

CONFRONTED by the alternative of retreat on every missionary front at home and abroad or the raising of $2,000,000 for an emergency fund, the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church have drafted Bishop Fred B. Fisher of Calcutta, India, and Bishop Edwin H. Hughes of Boston to inaugurate a $2,000,000 "I Will Maintain Fund." Bishop Fisher says: "In foreign countries our bishops and missionaries find themselves in a situation nothing less than tragic. In every land they are faced with unparalleled opportunities and daily meet groups of devoted and self-sacrificing Christians who confidently expect our American Christians to make good their announced promises. These nationals have paid their sacrificial gifts. Our board of foreign missions has recently announced that the present falling income makes it necessary to stop at once all further building enterprises, to keep furloughed missionaries in America, and to withhold eager young men and women under appointment from foreign service. This retrenchment policy has already been put into effect and the board will have to make a drastic cut in appropriations for next year."

Every word of the foregoing applies just as accurately to our own situation. We have not inaugurated a special campaign for an emergency fund. What our people need first of all is an "I-Will-Pay-Up Campaign" which will enable us to maintain our work, reduce our debts, and look ourselves in the face.

Why Not All Property?

ATTORNEY General Daugherty has ruled that "In the final analysis title to church property is vested in God" and on this ground he approved the return of certain property belonging to the Reformed Church of Hungary, which had been seized during the war. We do not care to question the ruling of the attorney general but ask if the same method would not lead to the decision that the title to all property "in the final analysis" rests with God.

The Middle Road

IN its leading editorial of August 24, The Continent brings a message which cannot fail to be helpful to many of our own people. It says: "The middle road then is a bad road to travel when it skirts the edge of the King's domain."

"But when you find the path that goes right up through the middle of the King's own ground, follow that. It's the best road of all."

"Not altogether a peaceable road yet, it must be confessed. As you go along you will pass between disputatious parties on either side accusing one another, across the path, of having betrayed the gospel. Not the old debates of a hundred and two hundred years ago indeed, but new contentions hardly less fierce."

"Doubtless the noisiest of these contentions today is between those who charge the critics of the Bible with destroying faith in its inspiration and those who accuse literalists of having construed the Scriptures in terms that the modern mind can't endure."

"Through the midst of these two parties the good 'via media' draws a path of contented faith that neither can destroy the word of God."

"So the pilgrim who 'holds to the middle of the road' need not stay to take sides with either, but may bid both come on together to the place where the truth of both coalesce."

The Great Physician

THE Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church which is meeting in Portland, Ore., will pass upon many interesting questions. The matter of divine healing has awakened wide interest. Dr. J. Wilbur Gresham, of San Francisco, offered a resolution which was at once referred to a committee without debate. We have not to date received the committee report. The resolution follows:

"That all healing, whether of body, mind or spirit, is divine in its character and is the resultant of the life-giving spirit of God."

"That distinctively Christian healing is the manifestation of that life through Christ, who hath life abiding in him. That this life may operate indirectly through the healing agencies revealed to men in the science of material medicine and surgery or directly in response to prayer and faith."

The wording of this resolution is innocent enough. It will not be a difficult matter for most Christians to accept its statements. It is to be regretted that the practice of certain individuals and sects has been carried to such length that the teaching concerning divine healing, like that of holiness and sanctification, has fallen into disuse in many churches.

Bernard Shaw on the Churches

BERNARD SHAW has just had an interview which was printed in a recent number of a parish magazine of a Central London Church. The interview is eminently Shawian, but has some sentences to make us think. Mr. Shaw believes that the churches have "failed infamously," but he also thinks that it would be a "national calamity" if they were abolished. People simply cannot live without churches, and presently "there would be more churches than ever, and fuller ones." Mr. Shaw says a very good thing about the church adopting the world's methods in order to win the world: "At present the church has to make itself cheap in all sorts of ways, to induce people to attend its services, and the cheaper it makes itself, the less the people attend." It's good to see ourselves as outsiders see us.

The Deacon Is Right

A DEACON in one of our churches writes, "Singing about prayer, talking about prayer, reading about prayer are all good in their place, but no one of them is prayer or a substitute for it."

Stewardship of Life

Address delivered before the Thirty-first Anniversary Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America

By CARL D. CASE

WE are nearing the end of our convention. We have been on the mountain top with Jesus, and have seen him transfigured and glorified before us. Now we are ready to go down into the valley of human need, down there, where suffering is to be alleviated, where demons are to be cast out, where souls are to be saved. How shall we serve down there? Really, it is not so important that we have learned something here—something of young people's work, of Bible fact, of missionary achievement—nor is it so important how many emotions have swept through our hearts. The main thing of importance is, what have we decided to do down there in the valley?

To Defy Providence

This is a life enlistment service. But, frankly, I am not concerned primarily today that you decide to be a minister or a missionary, a nurse or a doctor on a foreign field, a pastor's assistant or a director of religious education. But I am concerned that you shall choose that vocation where God wants you to be and where you can do and be your best. To enlist for special religious work when God wants you elsewhere would be to defy Providence. Before you are even ready to make a choice, there are certain previous convictions for you to adopt. No doubt there are some of you here today that are uncertain and undecided about your life's work, who might perhaps long ago have come to your decision with freedom and joy if you had already established these previous convictions in your mind.

And what are these convictions?

I. You must be willing to do anything that God wants you to do before you can select with assurance the special field of your service. When Elijah threw his mantle over Elisha's shoulders, Elisha asked no questions. He did not ask what he was to do or where he was to serve. He erected no conditions. He simply left all and followed Elijah. When Isaiah saw the Lord high and lifted up in the temple, he heard a voice saying, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" At once, without quibbling, without hesitation, Isaiah answered, "Here am I, send me."

Where he should go, what he should do, he did not ask. Perhaps if he had been told at first that he should preach until the country be wasted and the cities destroyed, he would have quailed before his task. But trusting God's guidance, he only replied, "Here am I." Are we, too, ready to let the Lord choose for us our vocation, or are we afraid he might choose what we ourselves would reject?

Jesus said, "If any man will to do his will, he shall know." Will to do what God wants you to do, and then you shall know what he wants you to do. You should not demand that knowledge in advance of your willingness to follow Jesus anywhere. When Jesus was baptized, it was the expression of his allegiance to the coming kingdom, as it was with all others. But what place he was to take in that kingdom he had not been officially informed. One man was baptized, and he went home to his plow; another, and he continued to be a tax-gatherer without extortion; and still another, and a voice declared, "Thou art my beloved Son." Let us first, before we decide anything further, say,

*"I'll go where you want me to go,
dear Lord,
I'll say what you want me to say."*

II. The second conviction you must have is that any vocation into which God calls you is sacred. It is not a question today with you between a sacred and a secular calling. What mistakes we have made because we have regarded a part of our life religious and a part non-religious or irreligious! The old ritualistic and sacramental idea that some kinds of Christian living were more pleasing to God than others has deterred many from becoming ministers or missionaries, because their souls rebelled against what seemed to be an abnormal and unreal life.

We have divided our money into two parts. The one part we have called God's and the other part our own. And there has been a continual tendency to encroach on God's part; and on the other side, not to be quite true to God either in the earning or spending of our part. But we are learning now that all money belongs to God and that the nine-tenths we spend on ourselves must be spent as conscientiously as the one-tenth we spend on the church and missions.

In like manner we have called one day the Lord's day, and the other six days have been too often in the world the devil's days. The cause of Sunday desecration is Monday desecration. He who spends Monday and Saturday for God is not going to misuse Sunday.

Declared "Reverend"

In much the same way we have placed ordaining hands on some and declared them "reverend." The rest of us we have regarded as belonging to the world. But if God appointed you to be a lawyer, is that not a sacred calling to you? If you choose medicine, because God calls you into it, shall God penalize you by making your life's work secular and mine sacred? Was not Jesus' carpenter work hallowed? Your pulpit? Is it not that place from which you present Jesus Christ? It may be the law desk, or the store counter, or the typewriter table, or the kitchen sink. "What God has cleansed, call thou not common!"

III. The third conviction is that you should choose that vocation where you can serve best. Your main business, whatever you do, is to present and represent Christ. William Carey said his business was to preach Christ, but that he cobbled shoes to pay his expenses. Paul preached Christ and him crucified, but he made a living by making tents. You are to seek first the kingdom of God, trusting that the necessary things for support shall be added unto you. Not that business where you can be served best, but

BREAK Thou the bread of life
Dear Lord, to me,
As Thou didst break the loaves
Beside the sea;
Beyond the sacred page
I seek Thee, Lord;
My spirit pants for Thee,
O living Word!

Bless thou the truth, dear Lord,
To me—to me—
As thou didst bless the bread
By Galilee;
Then shall all bondage cease,
All fetters fall;
And I shall find my peace,
My All-in-All.

where you can serve best, is God's place for you.

All over this country there has come a new conception of business. One great business organization has for its motto, "He profits most who serves best." The teaching and medical professions are now being joined by business in the emphasis placed on service. The cross means service. There are two beams to the cross. The upright one, stretching up to heaven, signifies the will of God. "Not my will but thine be done." The cross-beam signifies service to man. "Even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many." And the two beams are fastened together. No one can do God's will without serving mankind, and none can truly serve mankind without doing God's will. Your question must be: "Where can I serve best?"

Among all these possible vocations, all sacred if God calls, all positions of service, where can you give the best service? This is to be determined in the same way, whether you choose the law or the ministry, by prayer, by Bible study and by earnest consideration of the evidences of God's guidance. There are, in fact, just three considerations here:

"Obey Your Polarity"

(1) To what am I best adapted?

For, in general, where I am best able to serve, will be the place where I can give the best service. Longfellow said, "Study wherein kind nature meant you to excell." Emerson said, more uniquely, "Obey your polarity." God has endowed you with certain mental and personal characteristics which express themselves chiefly in a liking for certain kinds of work. Only, let me warn you: you must not be so conscious of your defects that you are not ready to listen to God's voice, if he calls you into religious work. Our excuses are numerous. Remember how Moses, even after God had appeared to him and empowered him to work a miracle with his rod, said to God, "O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant," thus even affirming that God's very presence had not loosened his tongue. And yet God chose him to be the leader of his people. "Who made man's tongue? Is it not the Lord?" "The things which are impossible with man are possible with God." "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Consider then, whether with such powers as you have, fully consecrated to God, you can serve best in special religious work. In every high school of the land, specialists make frequent visits, describing the advantages of their particular profession or business. The ministry of course is never presented except in denominational schools. Rarely are we brought face to face with the question: "Can I

Unity vs. Uniformity

By EDWIN M. POTEAT

In essentials unity; in non-essentials, diversity; in all things charity.

Infinite variety is the order throughout the natural creation. Nature abhors sameness. The leaves of a tree look alike; they are different. Closer inspection discloses multitudinous variations. In fundamental structure and needs and in the way their needs are met, the plants of a given species exhibit a complete unity. But no botanist can cramp their variety into his schedule of characteristics.

All normal human beings have hands, but the thumb prints of no two of them are alike. The attempt to make them alike would involve inconceivable complications; and if it succeeded it would substitute a rigid uniformity for the variety in unity which God ordained.

Thus botany and physiology cry out against uniformity. And psychology joins in to make the demand for uniformity in experience and in idea preposterous. To keep up that demand is to outrage nature, is to despise God's way with his world. What a stupid world it would be if some demiurge with a uniformity bee in his bonnet had made it!

The light waves that reach my eye are not the light waves that reach my neighbor's eye; and while we stand together looking as we say, at the same landscape, we see it differently. Heaven defend us from those who insist that we must see and feel and think what they see and feel and think. Heaven help those who help us to see our unity in essentials, our diversity in non-essentials, and who help us to keep in all things charity.

serve God best in religious work?" Unless our talents are utterly inadequate, we ought not lightly to say, we are not capable of doing this special work.

(2) But the second consideration to help us to see what God wants us to do is the need and the opportunity. Here I want to show you that the world's greatest need is religion and that here is the greatest call for workers. Other professions are running over with recruits. For every place there are a dozen applicants. But for religious work the ranks are never full.

The world needs the gospel of Jesus Christ, and somebody must preach and teach it. Nowhere is the call greater than in the mission fields. China, Japan and Africa call. India, with Burma and Assam, appeals. Nor is there any less need at home. Study what is the greatest need of business, and Roger Babson will tell you: Religion! Read the addresses of educators at every educational convention, and they will tell you that the American youth need training in religion. What is the greatest offset to the country's wave of crime and lawlessness? The answer is the same: Religion! Is there any other field that is more in need of recruits? Can you show the same tremendous need for service in any other field of human endeavor?

Need and Vocation

The Methodists at the beginning of their denominational campaign announced that 13,000 young people would be needed in the next five years. At the same time, the life enlistment department of the Inter-church World Movement announced that in five years 100,000 recruits would be needed by the evangelical denominations. If the need gives you your vocation, hundreds of you must decide for special work in the kingdom.

(3) But beyond and back of both of these considerations of your adaptation and of the world's need, is that deep conviction of God's call. You have a right to it wherever you go. When Elijah was in Horeb, God passed by, and there came a wind and an earthquake and a fire. But God was not in them. Not by anything so external is God's message given. And then there came, so you read in the margin, "the sound of gentle stillness"—the still small voice. But who ever heard of the sound of stillness? And yet there in the inner recesses of the heart, there in the holy of holies of the temple of your life, God will speak and will say, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

You—and by "you" I mean you individually and not in the mass,—you should now ask yourself, "Have I enough talent which God can use, do I feel that the world's need is my call, and do I have down in my heart a growing conviction that God's voice calls me?"

And what holds me back? Is it my unwillingness to deny myself and follow Christ? When Dr. H. C. Mabie in 1891 was at Hangkow, Dr. Griffith John pointed out to him a young Chinese mandarin who had recently joined the church at the risk of his life. Upon his baptism he had presented to the missionary a fine fan on which he had penned the words of Jesus, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

Deny Thyself

Here the cross means our mission—God's will and our service to man. But preceding that is self-denial. This self-denial is not the cutting off of some sin. It is the negation of self that one may find self in Christ. The word in this passage is not the usual word deny, but is an exceedingly strong term used only on three occasions in the gospel: once in regard to Peter's denial of his Lord, once by Christ when Jesus said that he would deny before his Father the one who denied him before men, and third, on the occasion preceding his transfiguration when he foretold his crucifixion which he declared must be duplicated by followers. Delegates of this convention, have you thus denied self, so that you may be ready to take the cross?

Perhaps there is something else that holds you back. It is the consciousness of past failures. Some stain of sin, some consciousness of defeat, make us feel unworthy to accept God's call. If only, so we say,

I could change one past event, how gladly I would give myself today to God's service. Do you remember that symbol used by Jeremiah, when he went to the potter's field? The wheel is spinning around and the skillful hand of the potter molds the soft clay into a beautiful vessel. But alas, it is not perfect. A flaw is there. So almost ruthlessly the potter's hand crushes down the clay, and then builds it up again. The clay is now harder, the molded vessel is less beautiful, but it serves its purpose. It holds the cool water to refresh the traveler. So you may say today, "If only I were what I could have been, how gladly I would answer God's call." But my friend, God can use a second-best vessel and you too may draw water from the well of salvation to give to the weary. God gives you a second chance today. Heed his call.

What a time for a decision! Here old friendships have been renewed and new ones formed. Here our emotions have been hallowed and we have felt the thrill of noble ideals. This is what Tennyson calls "the halcyon hour." What are you going to be—a mere machine grinding out the daily product of life, or God's child cooperating with the Father in his work? Do you wish just to be great somewhere, in some profession or business; or have you the purpose to let your light shine for God somewhere in this world of sin?

Preacher or Messenger?

When G. Campbell Morgan was in his earlier ministry at Rugeley in England, success had already come to him, crowds attended his preaching and conversions were frequent. Every Sunday night he was accustomed to go to his study and think over the day. On this Sunday night, he recalled with pleasure the crowds, their rapt attention, the success of his ministry, when suddenly there came ringing into his heart this question, "Are you going to be a great preacher or my messenger?" It was such a simple question, but it could not be answered at once. The more he thought of it, the harder it seemed to answer it. The hours passed by and it still was unanswered. At last when the morning light came creeping through the windows, he was able to kneel down by his chair and say "Lord, I want to be your messenger!"

Do you want to be just the Lord's messenger?

The Church Program on Stewardship

We have a tougher knot to split than we thought. Twenty-five millions of people have become confirmed in habits of careless use of their trusts.

By W. W. SCUDDER

A Review

REFORMS go by waves. When the time is ripe the movement sweeps the country, prompted and impelled by the psychological forces of the hour. Such a period opened a few years ago, when under the stimulus of certain developments in our common Protestantism, the impulse to the deeper consecration required for the larger tasks of Christendom turned the thought of denominational leaders to the subject of Christian Stewardship.

Widespread Neglect

The situation was desperate. Vast needs loomed up, but the members of the churches were indifferent. There had been a steady decline in per capita giving, with an enormous increase in per capita wealth. Urgent appeals for advance fell on deaf ears. Apportionments were half raised. Efforts to realize and increase them were resented. We seemed to be steadily petrifying in apathy. The sense of world responsibility was lacking in most, and dim in all. Few joined the church for definite service. Widespread ignorance of the principle of stewardship and neglect of its practice were prevalent. Probably not 3 per cent of professing Christians were proportionate givers. While systematic giving had received large attention among the churches, for nearly half a century proportionate giving had been ignored with disastrous results.

Period of Experimentation

It was clear that those who sought to build great advance movements must find more substantial foundations of responsibility. Instinctively it was felt that these must be based on stewardship. For some years now we have been feeling our way through a mass of somewhat chaotic ideas.

What are the principles of stewardship? How should they be stated? How should we phrase our covenants so that they shall be neither legalistic or indefinite? What methods should we employ? Which are spasmodic? Which will endure? Of the flood of literature, how much should we conserve?

Then followed numerous experiments. Drives for the education of pastors, officers and churches. Drives for enrolment of members, usually with indifferent success.

Results

Gradually light is increasing and our course is becoming clear. We see now we have a much tougher knot to split than we thought at first. Popular ignorance and misconceptions are vast and almost universal. They furnish fruitful soil for limidity and silent opposition. With the majority of our membership there is needed patient teaching of first principles by kindergarten methods. Not even the surface has been scratched by missionary education where we need a deep-soil plow. Can we yet say that one-half our pastors have clear convictions of the fundamental importance of the stewardship principle as the true basis of all Christ-like living? They are thinking about it, but have they thought it through? The war-are yet seems to consist of isolated and feeble guerrilla attacks rather than of advancing columns of well-trained troops, and our programs are often uncertain, ragged, and indifferently pushed. In spite of its acknowledged supremacy, we often see the stewardship campaign pushed aside for temporary and shallower projects. This has been the impression left on my mind from a review of the various campaign programs. A few are clear-cut and definite. But most of them appear to lack this feature and some communions have outlined no program at all, depending on miscellaneous distribution of helps to promote local action.

A Program

From this review what suggestions can we gather for the construction of a church program on stewardship? Plainly the main object must be to leaven the church membership with the stewardship spirit. This, we should remember, cannot be done in a year. Twenty-five millions of people—even though they are the best in the world—who are the products of decades of neglect of definite instruction and training in this great principle and have become confirmed in established habits of careless use of their trusts, with consequent narrow and dim views of their responsibilities, cannot quickly leap out of their mental, moral and spiritual grooves. We must remember that to many who are pastorless there is no causeway of approach, and many others are carefully buttressed by pastors who form the chief obstacles to the acceptance by their people of any such program. Now how can the spirit of stewardship permeate our churches? Never, in any real sense, if stewardship is treated as a separate department of the Christian life. It is not a single organ with its distinctive function in the body. It is rather the intricate system of nerves and blood vessels that permeates every part and on which the whole life depends. Stewardship embodies the "I ought" of the Christian—the "I owe" of the gospel. Whatever sense of obligation exists in divine or human nature—the urge that impels to self-giving for others—self-devotion to society—is expressed in that term. Consequently, it must infuse and control and direct all real life. And it should be so taught. No man can be a brother, a father, a teacher, a citizen, a patriot, or anything else that is useful, except as this quality of stewardship governs the discharge of his sacred, God-given obligations in any such sphere. Stewardship is not the financial department of the church, though it controls that department as it does every other. Stewardship—in the Christian sense, of course and always prompted by love—is the center from which we should view all life and from which should radiate all life's varied impulses. This then is the first essential in a church program of stewardship: Give the principle its rightful place and scope. When men see it thus—when they recognize the quality of stewardship as the prime ingredient in all noble living, they will cease to fear it as a shrewd financial scheme, they will respect it as the principle that should control all their possessions as well as all their processes of thought and life, and begin to reshape their practices in accordance with its suggestions.

The Stewardship of Money

After the universal sweep of stewardship has been thoroughly recognized, it will be perfectly safe for us to discuss that most practical and important department of it that we call the stewardship of money, and to suggest a program for its promotion.

A Minimum Program

Such a program should contain these factors at least:

1. There should be a review of the local situation so that the church can see just where it stands in its stewardship of money. Here estimates of wealth of benevolence and of need set forth by chart and diagram, will be stimulating. The "stewardship referendum" and "inventory Sunday" will be found invaluable. Penitential prayer and purposes of consecration might well be provided for, as records are reviewed.

2. The people should be given a clear and broad vision of stewardship in its wider relations to all life as urged above, for this larger view will soon put out of sight most of the trivial objections and misconceptions usually encountered. This would best be done by the pulpit.

3. There should be careful fertilization of the field through some simple, clearly printed statement of principles, parts, program and practices of stewardship, so

The Salt of the Earth

AN article in the editorial column of the "New York Evening Mail" says that a dozen men were discussing in the Pullman smoking-car compartment the downfall of a minister when a quiet man put his finger on a news item and said: "Hear this. It is in the same daily news as the account of the minister's downfall. A hardy bishop of Alaska (Bishop Rowe) reports that he has covered thousands of miles on snowshoes with only an Indian guide. Mercury 70 degrees below zero often—generally 50 degrees below. This clergyman is physician to the sick Indians; he is dentist; he is adviser; he marries them and buries their dead. He begins and ends all with the teachings of the Christian religion. Often he walks hundreds of miles on one trip. Often on his sledges he takes provisions to the starving miner in his solitary hut."

"That's the kind that evens up!" broke in one young man.

The heroic story, on the same page of the day's history with noisome treason to all virtue, is like the "salt of the earth." It cures putrescence.

that all could be intelligent as to the main facts and processes involved. Simple systems of budgeting and accounting could be helpfully explained here.

4. Organization should be simple. (a) It should begin by gathering a nucleus within the church of advocates of stewardship. Reforms must start from within. They can never be established by outside agencies; a new committee, if no existing one is adaptable, should be put in charge of the local campaign. (b) Some intimate touch with the district fellowship forces should be secured for guidance and inspiration through institutes and conferences arranged by trained teams of associational leaders. State and national contacts may supplement but not supplant these local ties. (c) Some definite time should be set apart for focussing the attention of the parish on the program—presumably within the period suggested by the denomination for the united consideration of the subject. The application of these principles should then in some way be pressed — through enrolment of proportionate givers, by an every-member canvass or in the enthusiasm of a church service, or by personal work of a committee. An experimental week of tithing has been tried with striking success in illustrating the principle and demonstrating the practice and advantages of stewardship.

Into such a program, as the discussion will doubtless reveal, can be introduced almost every variety of method and plan.

Towards some such minimum program the varied experiences of our churches seem to be pointing.

If You Were About to Die

Sublime faith in the eternal verities writes this message.

IF you knew positively that you were to die within twenty-four hours, would you be in a proper mood to write a farewell message to your friends to be read at your own funeral service? It would require sublime faith in the eternal verities of Christianity to write such a message. One of the most unusual documents ever received by a representative of the Foreign Mission Society came recently from Mrs. A. L. Bain, widow of Missionary A. L. Bain who died at Valley, Neb., on June 9, 1922. He had recently returned from Africa where he had spent twenty-nine years in consecrated missionary service. Afflicted with a peculiar disease, he sought aid from the best medical and surgical specialists that America could furnish, often spending weeks in hospital institutions of international fame. But his case was hopeless. Sympathetically the doctors informed him that he had not long to live and that the end was not far off. Although painful almost beyond endurance and although it was impossible to take nourishment, the disease nevertheless left his mind unimpaired, so that up to the very hour of his departure he could experience the joy and anticipation of soon being with his Lord.

Two days before his death when he knew that the end was only a matter of a few more hours of suffering, he wrote a message to his friends with the express wish that it be read at his funeral service. Mrs. Bain has sent this message to the society. In view of the revelation which it gives of Mr. Bain's Christian character and the inspiring faith which sustained him during his illness and throughout his entire missionary career, his final message is herewith given to the readers of THE BAPTIST:

"I write this final greeting not because I posed as a saint on earth but because I am only a poor sinner saved by grace. To the redeemed who have gathered in Valley, Nebraska, in order that they may bid farewell to my earthly tabernacle, may you thank God you are gathered together in mutual fellowship through the death, resurrection and exalted life of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Today I am absent from the body and present with the Lord. While on earth Scripture assured me that I would have another building not made with hands. So I will have gone from the home of the soul on earth to the home of the soul with the Lord in Heaven. What a blood-bought privilege it is that I may still continue to add to my knowledge of the mystery of God's eternal evangel! What a blessed place where the soul will serve and adore the risen Lord in unmingled bliss forever and ever! Thank God there the weary are at rest, there the imperfect are made perfect. Bless God for his loving character in Jesus Christ and the blessed privilege of seeing the glorified Redeemer. May the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patience of Christ. Dear friends, till our gathering together unto him, God grant that you may continue to enjoy freedom and victory in Jesus Christ. Fritter not your fleeting life away. Fight the good fight of faith. Walk worthy of our vocation. Be patient, long suffering and forbearing, to engage continually in prayer and supplication, to live blamelessly before men and holily before God. From age to age he controls the long, long procession of events. In my case, as events have transpired, an all-wise and kind Providence has willed that I sojourn with you in Valley; yet during my sojourn the heart has often yearned for the Asalongoes in faraway Africa.

"Many, many a time I have not understood God's ways. I have tried not to forget that the house built on sand and the one built on the rocks were equally exposed to the descending rains and the floods that came and the winds that blew. At times during isolation and depression I have been somewhat perplexed by adversity. Then again I have been most grateful and felt triumphant remembering that all things work together for good. Life is a testing of our spiritual fidelity. God has been most sympathetic with us who suffered on the way. He has taught me to believe his heart cared and suffered even with me in my own suffering. During all my long illness God has been to me a very great reality. During my long affliction with its all too dreary and solitary hours it was also my good fortune to have had you as my friends. I thank you for your brotherliness expressed in many loving ways in things seen and things unseen, and for your abiding fellowship.

"Now just a final word with some of my friends who are present at my funeral service and with whom I talked while in my body at various times concerning the way of life. Men are religious naturally, they are Christians supernaturally. He taught us: 'Ye must be born again.' Have you been? Your eternity depends upon the answer. God sent his Son that

Voting By Mail

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

AN attractive pamphlet under the above caption is getting a wide circulation. It proposes to substitute for our present cumbersome method of indicating our choice of a candidate for office the simple expedient of mailing a ballot through the postoffice. The barest outline of the process is as follows: Every citizen of voting age receives through the mail a ballot. He marks this by puncturing with a hard pencil. The postoffice gathers up the ballots and wholly by machinery unwraps, sorts, counts and registers the vote. You may learn all the ingenious mechanism for accomplishing this.

The advantages of the plan are thus set forth in the pamphlet:

1. "Wide selection and sound election."
 2. An inexpensive, swift and practical modus for the popular referendum on all major measures and policies of federal and state legislation. By this instrument our legislators could keep in close touch with the electorate and receive its constant advice. The results in prompt and precise statutes would have a wonderfully good effect on the country's business, foreign relations and public morals.
 3. The purest form of "direct" government to discipline the wabbly representative form.
 4. A responsive balloting system to revivify all other meritorious political and electoral reforms.
 5. A beautiful form of direct primaries for all purposes.
 6. A presidential primary in connection with the party convention to the end of more liberal selection.
 7. Elections at half the present cost, with the advantage accruing to the taxpayer.
 8. A wide-awake and wide-encompassing electorate, that of itself would prove the most unifying force in America and for Americanism, a popular fascisti, a real bulwark against dangerous radicalism.
 9. Woman's great political opportunity. Twenty million more disinterested women marking and mailing the ballot would mean an evening up of the political voice and that woman's would be heard as distinctly as man's in public affairs.
 10. Effectual government—that is, technically and ethically perfect government.

Principles and Precepts of Stewardship

Luke 16:2

By G. W. CASSIDY

I. Six Principles

1. In this world man possesses many things, but owns nothing. This is illustrated by the foolish rich man, Luke 12:13, and the Laodicean church, Rev. 3:17.

2. God is owner of all things by unquestioned title. Ps. 24; I Cor. 3:23.

3. What man possesses is a trust from God. God gives him power to get it, Deut. 8:18; holds him responsible for it, Matt. 25:14.

4. As a faithful steward, he has to use his possessions for God. Again, see the parable of the talents and note the inclusiveness of the trusteeship, as to time, talents and treasure.

5. He asks for a return of a share of this trust for the issues of his kingdom, not for himself, Ps. 50, but the kingdom, Luke 10:14. Failure to make this return is robbery, Mal. 3:8.

6. He requires that this share be laid upon his altar systematically, I Cor. 16:2; and faithfully, I Cor. 4:2; I Cor. 15:58.

II. Out of These Six Principles Come Six Precepts

1. Stewardship makes God's trust to man the basis of man's return to God. I Cor. 16:2; Matt. 10:8; II Cor. 9:6.

2. Stewardship makes the tithe the minimum of the steward's accounting to God. The basis of the tithe is in the very constitution of things. Its expression is in the law. It was endorsed by the Master, Matt. 23:23. Under grace man should do no less than under the law.

3. Stewardship makes the offering an act of worship toward God. My offering is an expression of devotion, I Cor. 8:8-9.

4. Stewardship makes giving one of the joys of the Christian life. II Cor. 9:7.

5. Stewardship makes possible the occupation of the world field for Christ. (a) It removes the biggest barrier to the progress of the kingdom, the financial barrier. (b) It secures the divine blessing, Mal. 3:10; Prov. 3:9 and 10. (c) It insures human activity, II Kings 12:7 and II Chron. 31:10.

6. Stewardship makes certain a final accounting with the Lord. The text and lesson.

The Message of Malachi

By FLOYD L. CARR

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse."—Mal. 3:10.

I. The Curse (v. 9). "Ye are cursed with a curse."

Malachi's stern indictment. (a) They had repudiated their moral allegiance (v. 7). (b) They had repudiated their stewardship allegiance (v. 8).

Roger Babson says: "The tithing system, if adopted by the churches, would give astounding figures. A compilation shows that the annual business turnover in this country amounts to over $500,000,000,000. It is estimated that of this amount four-fifths pass through the hands of the church people. One per cent of this amount would mean $5,000,000,000 a year. Assuming that there is a profit of 10 per cent on this turnover, it would mean that there is coming each year to the church people of this country an income amounting to $40,000,000,000. If the tithing process were in operation, this would give the church in tithes about $4,000,000,000 a year. These figures seem very extraordinary, but on checking them up no flaws can be found. The facts are that the church people of the country are giving less than 1 per cent of their income to church and missionary work. If this were increased to 10 per cent the church would become the most powerful organization, and the wonderful results which have been indicated in this book could eventually come to pass. Then the church could come to its own in a great big way that heretofore it has been able only to talk about."

IT needs to be written as plainly as if written across the heavens in living letters of fire, that the past standards of giving to missions by our Baptist people will be inexcusable and inadequate and unworthy for the future. We must advance, and advance greatly, and advance now, or we shall gravely sin in the face of the most strategic and commanding calls that have ever challenged our Baptist people, from the first Baptists till now.—George W. Truett.

II. The Challenge (v. 10). "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse and prove me now herewith."

The law of spiritual blessing was fulfilled at Pentecost, and is fulfilled in Burma, and Korea and America today.

III. The Coronation (v. 16-17). "Then they that feared the Lord—and a book of remembrance was written."

The dedication of life and substance is the royal road to immortal fame. Note the Pilgrims—Bradford, Brewster, Standish, Robinson. Consider the supremacy of such names as Carey, Judson, Morrison and Livingstone.

"Will A Man Rob God?"

By GILBERT N. BRINK

Dr. A. J. Gordon has said "Human nature cannot be trusted to carry out its generous impulses. If I should succeed in winding any of you up to the determination to do generous things, you would run down again before next Sunday. That is what a solemn pledge to pay money to God amounts to—a ratchet to hold us up to the pitch we have reached."

Robert E. Speer says "We need some practical abiding principle like this [He is referring to the payment of the tithe] to make sure that the principle of stewardship is a reality in our lives and that we do not inwardly find ourselves swept into self-deception."

It is the easiest thing in the world for a man who does not deal with God in the matter of obligation as he does with his fellows, to find that he has not been giving to God that which is His.

Putting your stewardship relations with God on a business basis safeguards the joy of that relationship; for it means that you are not going to be neglectful of the needs of his kingdom. Honest acknowledgment of ownership never kills friendship. It strengthens its bonds. Disregard of property rights always brings trouble. To be any less sincere, or just, or business-like toward God than we are toward men is to fail as his steward.

Just now God's people have no more urgent duty than to face this truth.

The "separated portion" is business-like. It brings the same system and carefulness into our dealings with God that are required in the business world.

It tends to secure for God's great business at least the consideration that we give to other affairs.

The "separated portion" will provide the means for carrying out Christ's program. All other means for financing the kingdom program have failed. "Trifling means for raising money are a shame to the church in the eyes of the world." The reason for the shame and discredit, the failure and the irritation lies in the fact that these have been attempts to meet the financial needs of God's kingdom without acknowledging that we are His stewards. The primary need however, is not money but the consecration that puts money into the Lord's treasury.

Outline of Work Done In First Church, Bridgeport, Conn., Since Last January

By DONALD B. MACQUEEN, Pastor

By the plan adopted we worked along three lines:

1. A stewardship reading contest.
2. A stewardship institute.
3. A Sunday morning sermon series on stewardship.

We initiated and carried out the stewardship reading contest by means of our church family groups. Our whole constituency is divided into sixteen groups or districts with a leader and committee in each one. We purchased enough copies of "The New Christian" and the "Victory of Mary Christopher" to furnish one of each for every district leader. The leaders were required to circulate these books among the members in their districts, having each reader put his or her name inside the cover of the book. A number of copies of "Thanksgiving Ann" were also furnished to each leader. The contest was continued through two months. Monthly reports were made by the leaders as to the number of readers secured and a prize was offered to the district making the best record. At the end of the second month, it developed that ninety-eight people had read "The New Christian," eighty-four had read the "Victory of Mary Christopher," and 147 had read "Thanksgiving Ann."

The institute began on January 11 and was held on Wednesday evening for eight weeks. We had supper every Wednesday evening and one of the devices used to create interest was the placing on the tables of half quotations from various works on stewardship. The diners were asked to put these half quotations together after the meal and the winner was the one who secured the largest number of complete quotations. Each quotation was read aloud by the person who completed it. Afterwards there were two classes: one for the teen age group and the other for adults, based on "The New Christian."

A brief devotional service closed the evening. The average attendance for the eight weeks was sixty-three.

During the latter part of this same period, the pastor preached four sermons on successive Sunday mornings on the general theme of stewardship.

To conserve the results of the reading, teaching and preaching, a league of Christian stewards was formed, which was joined by forty-seven people. Specific work has been outlined for this league.

An interesting circumstance following the whole campaign was seen in the fact that when the final every-member canvass was made toward the end of March, thirty-five people voluntarily increased their subscription. A large part of this increase is no doubt to be attributed to the campaign on stewardship just preceding.

My Money Creed

I Believe:

1. My money is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

2. This money is not filthy lucre. It is not the devil's coin. It is stored-up human power. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or New York or Colorado.

3. God is counting on this money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

4. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this, my prayers and confessions will be like saying, "Lord, Lord," and not doing the will of my Father.

5. I should set aside a definite portion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all my material possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is businesslike. Giving by impulse without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

6. The proportion to be set aside for these purposes should not be less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the tithe in Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of any former generation. Nevertheless, one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I be able.

7. I should invest this money for God as carefully as in my temporal business and keep strict account of this fund. I should study the church work that I may give wisely. I should give systematically. I should pray with my giving.

Obedience to this creed will lead us into the blessedness of giving. In 2 Corinthians 9:6-15, Paul gives a long list of the blessings that come to the liberal giver.

A Stewardship Catechism

1. What is a steward?

A steward is a man trusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own.

2. What is a Christian steward?

A Christian steward is one who acknowledges his accountability to God for the faithful administration of possessions.

3. What is the purpose of the Christian stewardship movement?

To bring people to the full acknowledgment of relations with God as his stewards.

"Will A Man Rob God?"

By GILBERT N. BRINK

ONCE upon a time, many years ago, there was a man who planted a beautiful vineyard. Then he planted a hedge round about it and dugged a winepress within it and he built a watch tower to protect the same from robbers. Then when everything was ready he rented out his vineyard to husbandmen, who agreed to take care of it and at the end of the year after the crop had been gathered, to pay him a definite portion as rental for the use of his property.

The owner went away into a far country and when the time for the payment of the rental came round he sent his servants empty handed. Then the owner sent other servants but they treated them the same way. Finally he sent his own son to collect the rent for, said he, "Surely they will respect my son and pay the rent to him." But the renters, when they saw that it was the owner's son who had come said "Let us kill him. Then there will be no heir to receive the property and we can get it for ourselves." So because they coveted that which was not theirs they killed the owner's son. But later they paid with their lives for their wickedness.

Can any one read this ancient story and fail to catch in it the lesson of God's ownership and man's stewardship and the price that must be paid by him who is not faithful? Malachi's challenge still rings out, "Will a man rob God?"

4. What is the ultimate authority for stewardship of possessions?

The teaching of the Scriptures; required by law in the Old Testament; in the New Testament the expression of a loving loyalty.

5. Is there any difference between the recognition and the acknowledgment of God's ownership in all things?

Yes. Most people recognize God's ownership, even to the point of saying, "All that I have is the Lord's," but the Christian is taught in the Scriptures to make acknowledgment by the setting apart of a definite portion of his income.

6. Where does the stewardship of possessions begin?

It begins in the setting apart of a definite portion of income, known in the Scriptures as "the first-fruits."

7. What is the tithe?

The tithe is the acknowledgment of God's ownership and man's stewardship by the giving of a tenth of the income to the Lord's work.

8. Why is the tithe or tenth adopted as the minimum standard of giving?

(a) Because it is the only standard indicated in the Scriptures as the minimum acknowledgment of stewardship.

(b) Because experience proves that tithing produces adequate funds for carrying forward the work of God's kingdom.

9. Is the principle of the tithe operative today?

Yes. But this acknowledgment of God's sovereignty is made now in loving loyalty rather than because of legal obligations.

10. Are tithing and Christian stewardship the same?

No. Tithing is but a part, while stewardship involves the whole of life.

11. Should the tithe be expected from the man of limited means?

"Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of Jehovah thy God which he hath given thee." Every one is entitled to all the blessings that flow from a proper recognition of God in the life. God will honor his faithfulness.

12. What should be tithed?

The net income from whatever source; this is easily found by deducting from the entire amount received the actual expense of doing business. Living expenses are not a part of the expense of doing business.

13. What are some of the results?

Southern Presbyterians and Methodists have enthusiastically taken up the plan. Some smaller bodies, for example the Adventists, have practiced it for years with large results. Overflowing treasuries and large fields of activities have generally followed.

14. What are some of the results that must be expected by the unfaithful steward?

Covetousness in heart and life. This sin of covetousness is undoubtedly the greatest barrier to the coming of the kingdom. "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth only to want."

15. What are some of the rewards that may be expected of a faithful steward?

The fulfilment of Scripture: "Give and it shall be given unto you." "There is that scattereth and increaseth yet more." "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." And the resulting enlargement of soul which invariably follows co-operation with God.

16. How does a congregation become interested in stewardship?

The most efficient method so far tried is a well-planned organization that will secure at least three things:

(a) It must secure to every member an opportunity to worship by giving.

(b) It must safeguard the personal liberty of the givers in the administration of tithes and offerings.

(c) It must recognize the value of teamwork in carrying out the kingdom program.

Gleanings from New York State

By BENJAMIN STARR

The First Church of Oneonta organized a storehouse tithers' league that began to function June 1, 1921. The membership during the first twelve months averaged forty-four. During this period all pledges of its members to the church and New World Movement were paid up to date, $17.50 per month paid into the community chest, $1,000 set aside for a building fund and a surplus remained at the end of the

The Missionary Library

Answers to the questions: "How is your missionary library kept up to date?" and "What system do you follow in the purchase of new books?"

IN the issue of August 5 of THE BAPTIST Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery in an article "Some New Books for the Church Library" offered a prize for the best answer to the questions, "How is your missionary library kept up to date? What system do you follow in the purchase of new books?" There were many responses, and it was impossible to decide between the two letters which appear herewith. We therefore print them both in full.

Ladies Reading With Real Enthusiasm

Cincinnati, Ohio, Aug. 25, 1922.

My dear Mrs. Montgomery:

Under the heading "Some New Books for the Church Library," in a recent number of THE BAPTIST, you offer a book to the one sending you the best answers to the two questions; one being, "How is your missionary library kept up to date?" and the other, "What system do you follow in the purchase of new books?"

I am glad to have this opportunity to tell you what we are doing in Hyde Park.

Last year our society voted to purchase the study books listed on the reading contest leaflet, and circulated them among our members. A number of the "other books" were in the public library, and we made good use of them. The conditions of the contest last year were such that many did not read, but this year our ladies are entering into the reading with real enthusiasm.

The reading contest leaflets were greatly delayed in reaching us, but by sending to Chicago for them we were able to secure them, and we have already purchased six of the books on the special list and expect to buy six or more soon. We agreed at our last meeting that each of us would buy a book, read it, and pass it on to others of our circle and friends.

Public Library Aids

There is a fund at the disposal of our Cincinnati librarian, Mr. Hodges, which provides for the purchase of religious books. We lost no time in presenting our leaflet and at least a dozen books have been bought and are waiting to be catalogued and put upon the library shelves. In this way, while we cannot possess all of them, we have access to and can read almost all of the books recommended on the leaflet. Our ladies buy the 50 cent books which wear very well with careful handling, and the more expensive ones, as, for example, "The Americanization of Edward Bok," and "The Soul of an Immigrant," we get from the library. There are nineteen copies of the former in the various branches of our library and several copies of Mr. Pauunzio's book, which is especially fine. In replying to the question of a friend as to just how his viewpoints had changed after coming to America, Mr. Pauunzio acknowledges his debt to Browning for his splendid optimism, and to Tennyson who taught him to disregard custom where it was a choice between right and wrong. And the "big brother," what a friend he was to the poor Italian lad! What wonderful big brothers we could all be if only we would but see the need!

In regard to keeping our books up-to-date, we are kept so busy reading the new study books that we have no time for our old ones. We want to be strictly up to the minute in missionary affairs. The more we read the more we realize the bigness of the enterprise, the beauty of it and the great need.

Very sincerely yours,
MRS. CHARLES ROSEGATE.

An Appreciated Opportunity

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 9, 1922.

My dear Mrs. Montgomery:

I notice that in THE BAPTIST of August 5, you are asking two questions which have been my problem since last December. The second question is so easily answered that I shall dispose of it at once. The Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion has such a good list of classified books that it was not difficult to make a selection even though there had not been the reading contest list to guide one. And then there were the splendid book reviews for which you were responsible, and not having money for the purchase of all that you recommended in THE BAPTIST and in Missions, I read the reviews many times and decided which books were best suited to our own needs.

Many years ago our Sunday school (Linden Avenue) was given a case full of books. They were the usual type of books for that purpose but were popular among the children at that time. Later, a group of young people, fresh from college, renovated the shelves and added a better choice of fiction. After a while there was established in our community, a branch of the public library and our own small collection fell into disrepute. For years it has been locked up and idle.

Last winter the missionary committee of the church met for the discussion of its problems and for the planning of a more far-reaching missionary education. Happily some one suggested a missionary library using our old books as a sort of bait. The idea pleased those who were present and immediately a librarian and an assistant were appointed. The old books were brought to light and it was found that many of them were in excellent condition and really good literature. These were rearranged and enough of the undesirables discarded to make room for new missionary books. It was decided to make the library a church affair and the new departure was advertised in all departments with the result that our women's missionary circle made a large gift for the purchase of the first additions. Several organized classes followed with smaller gifts and there were several personal gifts of money and a number of books were taken from private shelves or bought by individuals. Of course the librarian has tried to suggest titles and to see to it that only perfectly safe books have been received. We have welcomed not only books dealing directly with missions, but also inspirational books, books on church organization, and indeed any sort of wholesome book for men, women and children. We open our library not only at the Sunday school sessions but during prayer services and missionary meetings.

One Hundred Three-Month Books

Just recently we have found that we may borrow from the public library and at present we have a hundred books, our own selection, which we may keep for three months. Our own books we lend for two weeks with the privilege of renewal and a fine of 5 cents per week if not returned when due. Our borrowed books we lend for one week, with the same privilege of renewal and the same fine. Our fines have paid nearly all of the small running expenses, such as rubber stamps, gummed numbers, etc.

Our literature secretary is becoming intense about the new reading contest and we are needing to add to our shelves some of the new books. It is the purpose of the librarian to advertise this fact among some of the departments and classes which have not shown a great deal of interest up to the present time. And besides, she intends to keep looking over the pages of Missions and THE BAPTIST for any possible chance to obtain books as prizes.

Thanking you for this opportunity to try for another book,

Yours sincerely,
SUSAN C. MENDENHALL

The Way of a Boy With a Sermon

By C. R. SWAIN

COMPOSES himself with a deep sigh; listens attentively for three minutes, in unimpeachable form.

Cautiously reaches hymn book from rack; drops it; recovers it; reads hymns for five minutes.

Explores trousers pocket and examines with deep interest one magnet, two nails, three pencil stubs and several bits of unclassified junk. Drops something, and hunts under seat until discovered and as-you-were-d.

Sighs heavily; inspects all the stained-glass windows, and the overhead architecture and decorations.

Puts sole of left foot against back of pew in front, at level of knee, and is highly surprised when foot drops noisily. Repeats same exercise with right foot, with same result.

Sits still and gratefully sucks peppermint offered by merciful aunt.

Sighs heavily. Experiments to see what will happen if he presses on his Adam's apple while head is extended forward; strange choking sound ensues, immediately suppressed by domestic authorities.

Takes a recount of articles in book rack; finds old paper fan, and discovers that it will make a cracking noise if flipped in a certain manner. Flips it in a certain manner until reproved.

Explores coat pocket for solace; looks happier; a mysterious hissing sound, like escaping steam, leads to probe, revealing old camera bulb; confiscated.

Sighs heavily; listens for five minutes. Dissects and reassembles flashlight; finds piece of string in pocket, and practices Scout knots for a peaceful interval.

Stands up with a sigh of relief; thank goodness, it's time for the last hymn.

The New World Movement

The Year's Text: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The Year's Key Word: Personal Responsibility.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

"Forward-Step Sunday"

Superior, Neb., Rev. B. H. Ward, pastor, so named Sunday, Sept. 10 and observed it accordingly. At the Sunday evening service the pastor was present, but took no part in it. Instead, about a dozen men from all walks of life—trainmen, building laborers, factory men, and so on—were on the platform and each told briefly but with telling effect what Jesus Christ was to him.

The following card was given for signature:

Believing That With Christ I Should Go Forward, By His Grace—

- I will attend regularly the services of the church a. m. . . . p. m. . . . prayer meeting.
- I will attend and participate in the work of the Bible school. . . . B. Y. P. U. . . . Mission circle. . . . Helping Hand Circle. . . .
- I will invite and try to bring to a church service at least one person each week.
- I will serve where needed and to the best of my ability.
- I will try to inform myself in the doctrine and work of the church.
- I will teach a Sunday-school class.
- I will act as a substitute teacher when needed.
- I will pray and work to bring one soul to Christ before Christmas.
- I will greet strangers at the church.
- I will contribute regularly to church expenses.
- I will contribute to missions through the church.
- I will subscribe for THE BAPTIST.
- I will remember in daily prayer my church and pastor.
- I will establish the habit of having grace said at table.
- I will establish the habit of family prayers and reading of the Bible.
- I will give a tenth of my income for the work of Christ.
- I will as rapidly as possible pay all that I am in arrears on my pledge to Missions. . . . Building Fund. . . . Current expenses. . . .

Laymen's Work in Northern California

The laymen's councils of the Northern California Baptist Convention have drafted the following as their standard for their respective churches under the title of church objectives, printed on sheets 19x25 for posting on the wall. They purpose before each associational meeting to send out a questionnaire covering the various activities outlined to the pastors and local councilors and to tabulate the answers upon the large printed form upon the wall so as to check up during the association the work of their church for the year in comparison with that of the other churches of that association, including the financial report. The plan was submitted to the pastors during their conference at the last state convention and endorsed unanimously. In many of the churches, after checking up with the church objectives a new effort to "mend the fences" where needed is being made. Best methods for carrying out the various points in the standard will be discussed at the councils and already an increased demand for stewardship, missionary and other literature is resulting.

Church Objectives

1. Evangelization
 - a. A definite annual evangelistic program.
 - b. Two organized home visitations among members each year.
 - c. Definite study for personal work.
 - d. The entire church to make one Sunday each year a day of visitation to the homes of all the members.
2. Attendance
 - a. Congregation averaging equal to 80 per cent membership at each Sunday service.
 - b. Prayer meeting averaging 30 per cent membership.
 - c. Communion service averaging 66-2/3 per cent membership.
3. Missions
 - a. Equal importance with local work.
 - b. Definite consideration in all organizations.
 - c. Presentation from pulpit at least once each quarter.
 - d. Funds forwarded each month.
4. Finances
 - a. Tithing League.
 - b. Annual canvass of every member not in tithing league.
 - c. Use of duplex envelopes (both sides).
 - d. Pledge from new members immediately following admission into church.

Work In First Church, Wichita, Kansas

By JOHN B. SMITH, Pastor

This church is carrying on a constant campaign for Christian stewards and has been successful in enlisting a good many people.

We had Dr. Agar here last spring. We revised our entire list of stewards and discovered some forty who had back-slidden or moved away. We have at the present time 267 tithers.

On the Sunday Dr. Agar was here we reached 166 new ones, which I thought was a great achievement. One of our deacons has been chosen to organize and lead the Christian stewards. We hope to make this a clearing house where many questions may be answered as to "What is stewardship?" "How shall we tithe?" and "How shall we distribute?" Personally I can say, after a long experience, there is nothing in the church life which so concentrates and consecrates the whole Christian life in the cause of our Master like faithful, conscientious stewardship, in personality, prayer and purse. If Christians would become faithful stewards in these three fields of Christian endeavor, our perplexing problems of modern church life would be solved."

One of the deacons of the First Church, Parkersburg, W. Va., made the following statement one night at prayer meeting: "I confess that I have always been stingy in giving money and it hurt me to give it to the church, but January, year ago, I started to tithe and now it is a delight to give and I have never enjoyed my Christian life or my church work as much as now. I advise you to try it."

The Open Forum

STEWARDSHIP LEAGUES OR STEWARD-SHIP CHURCHES—WHICH?

During fifteen years' experience as a pastor I have observed that churches have generally permitted organized groups within the church to take the place of the organization of the church itself. The greatest problem of a pastor is to unify and coordinate church organizations and get the church to function as such.

I am opposed to the "stewardship league" as a group within the church. It is wrong because it is based upon the assumption that the majority can be church members without being stewards. It is wrong because it places the ideals of stewardship before a small group and not before the whole church. Rather than to attempt to form a group of stewards within the church, I have undertaken the larger task of getting the entire church membership to assume the stewardship obligation. My efforts in two different churches have been successful.

Last spring we preceded our every-member canvass with a six-weeks' campaign of education and training along stewardship lines. At the beginning there were no tithers in the congregation and the total weekly income of the church was approximately $50 per week, coming chiefly from sales and entertainments conducted by the women's societies. When I accepted the call to the pastorate of the church last December, it was understood that all "money raising schemes" would be given up and the church would be financed by the tithing plan. I assumed that the entire membership was in sympathy with the plan and would cooperate. At the close of the fourth week of our educational campaign, I sent out income report cards to the entire membership, requesting them to report the amount of their weekly income in order that our committee might forecast an operating budget for a year's work. The reports came in promptly and we found that the weekly income of the congregation was $2,400. The tithe of this amounts to $240 per week. We therefore drew up a budget of $12,480 for a year, taking it for granted that every member would pay his full tithe or more. We trained seven teams of canvassers and took the every-member canvass, asking each member for a minimum pledge of the tithe.

The results show that our plan is not a mere theory. It works and we commend it to other churches. From a resident membership of 228 we secured 214 pledges, representing 273 individuals (in some instances husband and wife pledged together). The membership was practically unanimous in its response to the tithing plan. The total amount pledged was $12,664.78 for the year, or $243.16 per week.

One third of the budget year is now past, two of the months being July and August. Our treasurer's report shows that bills amounting to $3917.01 have been paid during this period. This is only slightly less than one-third of the total budget. The best months of the year are still before us, and from present indications receipts will exceed the total amount of the budget before the close of the year.

The visible results are not all financial and material. The practice of stewardship has deepened the spiritual life of our people and has thrust forth laborers into the harvest. Sixty new members have been added, thirty-five by baptism. Our prayer meetings have increased in attendance and interest. The spiritual life of the church has been greatly revived.

We could not report a stewardship league to our state committee and therefore have not met the denominational requirements in stewardship; but we challenge any church in the denomination to show a larger percentage of tithers, or a membership more fully committed to the principle of Christian stewardship. Our records are open to the stewardship committees of other churches, state and nation; and we respectfully invite them to investigate and study our plan for the establishment of stewardship churches throughout the Northern Baptist Convention.

THE NEW TESTAMENT

The article in THE BAPTIST of August 12 entitled as above is weighted with a great suggestion which can well be the beginning of a great blessing not only to Baptists but to all Christians. Why not have a "renaissance of interest in the New Testament." No doubt it would mean as much to the modern religious world as the Greek renaissance did to the world of letters before the Reformation.

There is a very hazy notion in the minds of most of us about what the New Testament teaches. Our information is altogether too second-hand and fragmentary. Why not "study to show ourselves approved unto God; workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The New Testament contains the teaching of the Great Teacher. Would it not be well to spend a whole year in studying "What Jesus Says" in our mid-week prayer meetings? Let the Baptists lead out in weekly New Testament readings along this line.

The writer and his church a couple of years ago read the New Testament through from October to June, a chapter a day, and the pulpit and prayer meeting study of the year follow on. It was quite a change.

The Pocket New Testament League might be a great help. The spirit of Charles H. Alexander would hover over Christendom as it read daily from this "all-sufficient ground" of our faith and practice.

If I understand my church history aright, it was the New Testament or the material out of which the New Testament shortly came that Jude referred to when he wrote the exhortation "to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." If we are to indulge in a theological cleavage let us first of all become a discipleship of the New Testament. New Testament theology without too much of the marginal interpretation of the ages is what is wanted.

Then too a study of the New Testament might reveal that it is chiefly a book of religion and ethics revealing the thoughts of the Great Teacher under the greatest of Old Testament passages, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might" and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Why not? Let the Baptists lead out.

JOHN W. MERRILL.

The Fact and Responsibility of Privilege

But glory and peace, to the soul of every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile.

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

IF there were no sense of privilege life would lack interest. The most picturesque country is one broken up into hills and valleys. The Bible contains the greatest story of privilege of any form of literature the world has ever known. God chose a nation to make them his special people, surrounding them with privileges. Look at the number of passages in the Scriptures calling the Hebrew people the elect of God. The Jews of Paul's time and before him are a type of the privilege that fills the world today. That privilege that God bestowed on the people of Israel was for a purpose, that through the Jews there might come the light to the Gentiles. They were privileged that they might bless, and that same law holds today. Wherever God gives a man privilege, it is for a purpose. It will answer many of the problems in your life, the struggle, the pain and the conflict. In friendship, the measure or privilege determines the measure of responsibility. The greater the friendship the greater the standard of responsibility. In the making of money, the test of a man's life is not the power to make money, but what he does with that money when he has made it. It is the responsibility of using that privilege for the blessing of others that is the test of one's life.

THE FOLLY OF PROCRASTINATION
Eccl. 9:10.

By Dr. HERBERT HINES

Procrastination consists in postponing some task we should do now; the folly, in that the delay adds to the burden of the task and subtracts from our ability to perform it. You have a business letter which requires a brief, immediate and simple answer. You might write it directly after dinner, but no, you read the newspaper, make a few phone calls, and putter around till bedtime and conclude: "I'm tired now, I'll write it in the morning." Next a. m. work to do—can't find time all day—worry about it. A few days pass; in desperation you dash off a few lines and send it special delivery. The wait added the weight of fear, dread, worry, plus 10 cents, all representing the folly of procrastination. Procrastination is a sucker of vitality.

Two youngsters were building a snow fort, rolling snowballs a half yard in diameter and piling them up. One became interested in rolling a ball till it got so big he could not lift it to the wall. That, too, is the folly of procrastination. You do not do the task when it should be achieved and it gets too big for you. So many folks say, "I'm so busy," when they are only busy worrying about the work they ought to be getting at. They are only waiting to start to commence to begin to go to work!

We get accustomed to letting things slide, never doing today what we can put off till tomorrow, with the result that inactivity and the habit of delay fasten themselves upon us. The fellow who tremblingly fears to propose to his girl tonight will have a horrid day tomorrow, be more trembly tomorrow evening, and what's more, the other fellow may get ahead of him! Delays lose battles, too. In 1 Kings 20 we learn that Benhadad, the Syrian, was drinking himself drunk in the pavilion he and thirty-two kings that helped him, while Ahab, the Israelite, was pressing the battle. The result was that, "The Syrians fled and Israel pursued them." They lost money, also. Three men bought an option on a piece of property, intending to sell it to an institution. They left the matter of insurance to one of their number, who happened to be in touch with that business. He neglected to see to the matter, though questioned about it by the others two or three times. One day his phone rang and one of the trio said: "Have you insured that house yet?" "By George, no, I've put it off, I'll go tend to it right away." "Never mind now," came the words over the wire, "it is burning down."

The folly of postponement is seen in the way some people put off accepting Christ, advancing the decision day from time to time till they procrastinate away the day of grace. It is seen in young people's societies when leaders and presidents put off starting the meeting, waiting habitually ten or fifteen minutes, thus creating an atmosphere of dragginess. It is seen when young people intend to speak in meeting, but put it off minute after minute, week after week. It is seen in preparation for meetings: leaders knowing their responsibility weeks ahead, put off preparation till the Sunday afternoon of the meeting. Lack of preparation is due not to lack of time or lack of ability, but to procrastination.

"Tomorrow, tomorrow, not today, Hear the lazy people say."

There is also a social side to procrastination—the inconvenience you cause others by your delay. So many sorrows in the world are due to others postponing action! How many hours have prompt and punctual people spent waiting for procrastinators. Dante hit it off right when he wrote in his "Inferno,"

*"It is always those who are ready,
Who suffer most in delays."*

A good jack to lift your wheels out of the mud of procrastination is Ecclesiastes 9:10, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might;" which translated into our own language is,

DO IT NOW!

Stewardship Program

YOUTH, THE STEWARD

Hymns: "Jesus Calls Us, O'er the Tumult"; "Christ for the World We Sing."

Scripture: Matthew 25:14-30; Psalm 8.

Prayer.

Hymn: "True-hearted, Whole-hearted, Faithful, and Loyal."

Discussion of the Topic

I. That God trusts us with his riches, is the fundamental idea of this great parable. God has delegated the administration of his world to us as stewards because he believes in us. Time and talents and every kind of human gifts and opportunities are placed in our hands as part of the wealth of God invested in us as faithful stewards of the manifold grace of God.

"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful" (I. Cor. 4:1,2).

II. In the parable we read, "Good and faithful servant." Here are the elements of a great life. Christ does not say a great life is splendid. He does not say a great life is illustrious. He does not say a great life is heroic. A great life is all these and more, but Christ does not say so. He simply says "good and faithful"—faithful to the trust of God.

"What is it to be faithful? It is to be full of faith. It is trusting God down to the end of the journey, through storm and sunshine, through adversity and prosperity, through good report and evil report, saying ever with the last breath, 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust him.'"

"It is fidelity. It is being trustworthy as well as trustful. It is trusting God until men can trust me. It is being loyal to duty; so devoted to truth, so steadfast to principle that no lure of quick success can tempt me to be faithless. It means that I should rather be defeated than lie; that I should rather fail in business than succeed through dishonesty; that I should rather be broken in fortune and ruined in reputation than compromise my honor. And it is all this, not for a day or a year or a decade, but for life; not merely when it pays, but when it costs; not only when it is applauded, but when it is hissed; it is unto death." —J. I. Vance.

In stewardship the greatness of God is manifested in that he asks so little and gives so much. He gives much because he believes in our faithfulness; let us not betray the trust, but rather be faithful unto death that we may receive the crown of life.

"To every living soul that same he saith, 'Be faithful'; whatsoever else we be, Let us be faithful challenging his faith."

The young people of today can play a tremendous part in the advance of the kingdom through our denomination. At the present time an emergency confronts Northern Baptists.

A Crisis In the Work

God has wonderfully blessed all of the great societies at work within the Northern Baptist Convention. The reports submitted at the Indianapolis Convention were inspiring. But, on account of general financial conditions and decreased receipts, all organizations were asked to retrench. This means that practically no new work can be undertaken; very few new missionaries sent out; a number of our noble missionaries kept at home; church buildings halted; decreased work by the colleges. Not only that, but the societies have big debts which must be paid. These are our debts. This is our work. Receipts for the summer have been exceedingly light. There is one way out. We must pray and give our way through! Inquire about New World Movement pledges. Urge people to pay up.

God is counting on us as young people to do our utmost. We must not fail him in this hour of need.

Questions for Discussion

What is the chief requisite in a steward? Apply it in home life, school life, church, other activities.

What change in your view of your life and possessions does this principle of stewardship make?

In what way can the Lord count on me in the present denominational crisis?

Hymn: "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

Benediction.

First Church, Hamilton, Ohio B. Y. P. U.

The annual meeting and banquet of the B. Y. P. U. of First Church, Hamilton, Ohio, was held in the church parlors Aug. 9, 1922. After a bountiful repast we had the annual election of officers with the following results: Pres., D. A. Henninger; vice pres., Raymond Baker; sec., Robert Anderson; treas., Miss Elsie Schroder; chairman social committee, Miss Irene Lordy; corres. sec., Miss Loraine Baker; librarian, Marion Wright; pianist, Mrs. D. A. Henninger; chm. devotional committee, Miss Alice Witters; supt. junior society, Miss Inez Grimes; supt. intermediate society, Miss Fay Randall.

Miss Edith L. Place, our new state president, was the principal speaker of the evening, giving an interesting and inspiring talk on our B. Y. P. U. We are expecting great things from Miss Place this coming year and the Hamilton B. Y. P. U. has very reason to believe that she will not disappoint us.

Our slogan for this coming year is "Forward with Christ Together—Something more for Christ."

Secretary's Annual Report to Church

The past year has been one of the reatest years that the Hamilton B. Y. P. U. has experienced during its thirty years of existence. Many of our young people have risen to the pinnacle of Christian service, as well as the fact that many young people have accepted Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, mostly through the medium of our B. Y. P. U.

Through the efforts of our outgoing president, Robert Anderson, the society has been rescued from the hole into which it had fallen. We regret to see him go, but rejoice in the fact that he is seeking higher Christian service.

The group plan was used again this year, and with great success, each group going to outdo the other in getting up interesting meetings.

A Hallowe'en party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pieper, and every one had a merry time. A hotter time is promised for the next Hallowe'en sociable. Miss Vera M. Rice, vice-president of the B. Y. P. U. of A. was the speaker at the Miami Associational B. Y. P. U. Rally which was held at our church in February. Great enthusiasm was demonstrated.

We came out second in the associational contest, winning thereby an Ohio Assembly ticket. The first winner, Lincoln Park Church, received a St. Paul Convention ticket.

The average attendance for the year was 85 per cent; the largest number present 166; the lowest fifty. Our offering was divided as follows: current expenses 50 per cent; scholarship fund 15 per cent; convention fund 15 per cent; Gordon Ave.

Hello! This Is Headquarters Speaking!

Just want to call your attention to recommendation No. 1 as passed by the 31st anniversary convention of the B. Y. P. U. of America:

"That the tithing and stewardship campaign be carried on with increased vigor during 1922-1923 and that the effort to secure one million tithers be continued indefinitely."

During October we are giving special attention to this subject and we most earnestly plead for your heartiest cooperation.

ALSO

Let me call your attention to the fact that the 32nd Anniversary Convention of the B. Y. P. U. of America, will be held in historic Boston, July 5-8, 1923. Young people's societies should begin planning now to send delegates.

JUST A SECOND

I meant to remind you to order at once some of the stewardship leaflets as mentioned in connection with the topic.

JAMES ASA WHITE,
General Secretary.

Mission 10 per cent. We stressed the convention fund to the extent that we were able to send two delegates to St. Paul Convention and two to the assembly at Granville, the total amount given to the four delegates being $170. We feel that too much stress cannot be laid upon the conventions, and are planning to send twice the number next year.

We have been furnishing the church, free of charge, a weekly bulletin since last February. Time and space do not permit of our mentioning other accomplishments. We do not claim to have lived up to our possibilities, either as a society or as individuals, but we hope and believe that we have made considerable progress and we want to do even greater and better work this coming year than we have in the past.

Let us make our B. Y. P. U. mean "Be Young—Be Pleasant—Be Useful."

May we go forward with Christ in all things, and may our motto for this coming year be "SOMETHING MORE FOR GOD."

RAYMOND G. BAKER, Sec.

All Aboard for Burton

On a certain Tuesday evening in August, a crowd of merry young folk gathered on a dock at Tacoma, Wash. Soon two trim little launches chugged up. It wasn't long before every member of the jolly company was stowed safely away on board.

Who are they? Why the Tacoma bunch: Or in other words, a crowd of Tacoma District B. Y. P. U'ers.

Where were they going? To the Baptist assembly at Burton, Wash., for it was Tacoma night at the assembly!

What good times coming and going! There were games and singing and fun galore. Arriving, there was time for only a peep at the new tabernacle, a squint at a beach party or two, and then the breathless race back to the waiting boat. But all agreed that—

"It's a good thing to go to Burton!

It's the best thing I know.

It's a good thing to go to Burton

Where they have some pep and go.

Then goodbye to sin and Satan,

Farewell, all things bad.

It's a good, good thing to go to Burton

And it makes my heart glad."

(Tune, "Tipperary")

Straight From the Shoulder

Be it resolved that the members of the Baptist Young People's Union of America now urge the Baptists of the United States to support and aid in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, and that we urge the Baptists of Canada to support the efforts to bring about Dominion-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the president of the United States and to the premier of Canada.

Our Baptist young people intelligently enjoying their priceless heritage of political and religious liberty, for which their forefathers unhesitatingly suffered and laid down their lives, keenly rejoice in the new blood-bought liberties of the people of Central Europe, and we believe, and affirm, that the time has come to demand in the spirit of the sacrificial past and the conviction of eternal justice this same liberty for the stricken peoples of Armenia and Syria who have suffered centuries of unspeakable cruelties at the hands of the brutal Turks.

This convention representing over 3,000,000 American and Canadian Baptist young people requests that the leading allied governments of France, Italy and Great Britain, and especially the United States, make immediate efforts to save this martyred race and to guarantee them the right of complete self-determination.

We call upon all young people's organizations and especially upon the heroic veterans of the United States and Canada of the late world war, to join us in this

The Chimney Corner

Programitis

PROGRAMITIS is a disease which attacks good Baptists in the month of September. If allowed to run its course it proves delightfully catching, contagious, and infectious; and in the end reduces its new patients to a state of incurable interest. Programitis symptoms develop in the head, but spread rapidly to the heart; if good circulation is induced, it energizes even the feeblest into accomplishing undreamed-of deeds with their hands and pocketbooks. Entirely fashionable, so catch it! Spread it!

Programitis Germs

You will not have progressed far before you discover that the American Negro is the national mission study subject to be treated in your fall meetings. For a unique program try the title, "Stitched with Black." We suggest souvenir programs for this occasion, made from squares of white cardboard overcast with black wool; a sensible plan would be to leave enough of the wool hanging to form a chain to which a pencil may be tied, so that the audience may have every encouragement to jot down notes explaining the six topics listed, as follows:

Stitched With Black

1. A Stitch in Time Saves Nine.
2. Gathered at the Waste Line.
3. Cut to Fit the Cloth.
4. All Wool and a Yard Wide.
5. Garments in the Way.
6. Through the Eye of a Needle.

Our country is literally stitched with black since every tenth person in the United States is a Negro! The Baptist Literature Department (276 Fifth Ave., New York) has prepared splendid new leaflets which may be used to develop the above topics, for example: 1. What stitch in time so vital as "Schools for Negroes in the Southland"? (5 cents); also "Spelman Seminary" (5 cents); "A Golden Jubilee" (Mather, 3 cents); "Now and Then at Hartshorn" (2 cents).

2. The waste line is in all our northern cities where the exodus of Negroes from the South has brought overwhelming congestion. It is our Christian Centers which gather them at the waste line. Use the splendid leaflets: "Olivet—A Negro Center" (5 cents); "Our Northern Negro" (5 cents.)

3. Simple needs for simple folks is the meaning of "cut to fit the cloth," and for this our Fireside Schools and the little publication called Hope give the Baptist response to the need. Leaflet: "The Fireside School" (5 cents), and "Joanna P. Moore" (3 cents.)

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

4. To be "all wool and a yard wide" is the unstinted praise which belong to those notable Negro men and women who are filling distinguished and difficult positions. "Two Who Serve Their Race" (3 cents) will give you inspiring stories of Mrs. Moore, of Pittsburgh, and President Booker of Arkansas Baptist College. The young people's textbook, "The Vanguard of a Race" (50 cents) has twelve remarkable Negro biographies, among them our own Nannie Burroughs, of Washington, and Mrs. Walker, of Richmond. "Race Grit" by Coe Hayne ($1.25) is brimful of these shining examples.

5. Last year, in the issue of THE BAPTIST for Sept. 17 an attic dream was given in the Chimney Corner pages called "Garments In the Way." If you have saved your back numbers you will be able to re-vamp the end of that dream as a suggestion for sending a box to Mather, our barrel school, where a fascinating work is done at their sale-house with garments new and old.

6. This sixth topic suggests stories, stories, stories! Plenty have already been suggested, but our Baptist Department of Missionary Education (276 Fifth Ave., New York) has just issued three booklets, of nine Negro stories each, for use in Sunday school this fall: "Black Shepherds of Kingdom Come," "Written in Black and White," "Negro Life in the Southland" (10 cents each). A set of four Negro charts may be ordered for 25 cents. So much for Negro Programitis in the fall.

For winter programs the subject is to be India, and for one meeting we suggest:

Brown-Bred and White-Bred

1. Say It With Flours.
2. Wise Men of the (Y)East.
3. Dough Our Mothers Raised.
4. Kneads!
5. The Ten-Cent Loaf.

Souvenir programs should be decorated with advertisements of bread, of course. The topics may be developed as follows:

1. The pathos of heathendom which wreathes its idols with garlands of flowers is seen in "Beauties of Hinduism" (2 cents); "Brahmanism or Hinduism" (2 cents).
2. Wise men are mentioned in "Since India Went Over The Top" (2 cents) and "India, The Land of Contrasts" (3 cents).
3. "Bridal Pictures" (3 cents) and "Woman's Rights in India" (2 cents).
4. See pages 14—22 of Survey for the needs of our Baptist work in India.
5. This "loafer" may be either the Ten-Cent Baptist in America who halts our work by small gifts; or, you may use it to refer to the robber tribes who prefer loafing to earning, see "The Gospel and the Criminal Tribes of India" (5 cents).

A somewhat different set of programs would be:

Investments In India

1. Compound Interest.
2. Principal and Interest.
3. Spell It With Capital.
4. The Balance Sheet.
5. Extra Dividends? Or Mortgages?

1. Since a "compound" in India means a mission station, the number of our missionaries, the influence of their home life, mass movements, etc., may easily be culled from a reading of "Our Year In The Orient." (15 cents)

2. This, of course, will be about Baptist schools—see "Our Work In The Orient";

P'or Lil Brack Sheep

*P*OR lil brack sheep, done strayed away,
Done los' in de win' an' de rain;
An' de Shepherd, he say: "O hirelin',
Go fin' my sheep again!"
But de hirelin' frown—"O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am brack and bad."
But de Shepherd, he smile, like dat
lil' brack sheep

Was the onliest lamb he had.

An' he say: "O hirelin', hasten,
For de win' and de rain am coF;
An' dat lil' brack sheep am lonesome,
Out dar so far from de fol."
But de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
Dat sheep am ol' and gray."
But he Shepherd, he smile, like de
lil' brack sheep

Was as fair as de break of day.

An' he say: "O hirelin', hasten,
Lo, here am de ninety-and-nine,
But dar, way off from de sheep-fol'
Am dat lil' brack sheep ob mine."
An' de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
De res' ob de sheep am here."
But de Shepherd, he smile, like de
lil' brack sheep

He hol' it de mostest dear.

An' de Shepherd go out in de darkness,
Where de night war cool' and bleak;
An' de lil' brack sheep, he find it,
An' lay it against his cheek.
An' de hirelin' frown: "O Shepherd,
Don't bring dat sheep to me."
But de Shepherd, he smile, and he hol' it close,
An,—dat lil' brack sheep wuz—me!

also "Kindergartens in India" (5 cents).

3. Spell It with Capital—money. See pages 14-22 of Survey for needs.

4. The balance sheet refers to "Our Hospital Work in South India" (5 cents). Also see "Our Work in the Orient." For invitations you will find the special packet of twelve hand-colored postcards of India (15 cents) very attractive.

Books breed programitis more quickly than anything else, and every up-to-date Baptist church is having at least one reading contest. But books need a proper inculcation in order to "take", so we suggest that at an early meeting in the fall you introduce either "Animated Bookmarks" or "Big Print for Baptist Eyes."

I. Animated Bookmarks are persons in appropriate costumes sitting on the front seat of the meeting, attached by colored tapes of considerable length to the reading contest books which stand in a neat row (backs to the audience) on a table in front. A reader seats herself at this table, picks up and opens a book, wonders what it is about, pulls lustily on the tape bookmarker and draws its animated end up to the table to give a bright little review of the book. Souvenir programs may be slender bookmarks "headed" and "tailed" by attractive Negro and India pictures bearing the list of books your circle is to read.

II. Big Print To Open Baptist Eyes. This will be a somewhat more graphic elaboration of the same animated book reviewers by means of a little play. Clever programs may be prepared in the shape of white cardboard spectacles: two ovals with a curved bridge between, black-edged. Fold these in the middle of the bridge, lognette style, so that when they are handed to the audience only one-half of the spectacles shows; print on this upper glass: "Big Print To Open Baptist Eyes." Then, when the spectacles are opened, on the left inside glass should appear the list of Negro books to be read, on the right glass the list of India books. Our Baptist Department of Missionary Education (276 Fifth Avenue) has reading contest lists prepared for all ages. Generally speaking, the list for young women is the most attractive for the usual women's circle.

The little play introducing these books should consist of a Baptist lady seen consulting an oculist: "I find great difficulty in reading mission books," she wails, "don't I need glasses?" "Madam, you do!" says he, and proceeds to fit her with spectacles of different types. At each fitting, immense books come walking toward her, she reads title aloud, gleefully crying: "I see! I see!" whereupon a costumed character steps out from the covers and tells about the rest of the book in as fascinating a style as possible.

These giant books are easily made from the largest size of wrapping paper. A paper store, or a furniture dealer, can provide the makings! They should be high enough for the speaker to be concealed between the covers, which are to be folded, book-form,—properly titled, and decorated in a design similar to the real book. Always have piles of these actual books on hand for the costumed characters to sell at the close of the meeting! (i. e., "Strike while the iron is hot.")

Since subscriptions to missionary magazines will eventually increase the active ministry of our churches a hundredfold, we suggest that your prayer meeting is the legitimate place to secure subscribers. Now that so many congregations gather for church-nights with varied features following supper, it is fortunate that there are two short plays, "ready-to-serve," which may be used. A "Tableau Vivant" introducing missions will be found on page 484—486 of September Missions (order from 276 Fifth Avenue) and a dramatic sketch called "Alice in Everyland" to introduce this boys' and girls' magazine. Everyland may be ordered, free from Miss M. H. Leavis, West Medford, Mass. Everyland is published by our own Mrs. Peabody, and for $1.50 a year furnishes delightful stories and plans for any one between the ages of seven and fifteen. It is $1.25 in clubs of five or more.

they can meet and study and worship). These are simply suggestions for your article; write exactly what you really think; and before you begin, read Acts 17:26; Colossians 3:23-25, to decide how God feels towards black men and white men.

There will be a prize for the best boy's article, also a prize for the best girl's article. The rules are:

1. Stories due November 1, 1922.
2. Do not write more than 500 words.
3. Give your age, name and address.
4. Mail to me in care of THE BAPTIST, 117 South Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Now I hope that Genoa, Nebraska and Northwood, New Hampshire and Newburyport, Massachusetts and all the other places where our most interested contestants live, will remember to dip their pens in ink and address their loving friend, Margaret T. Applegarth.

attempt to save a race from destruction by petitioning our own and the allied governments for quick action. We ask that the officers of this convention take steps at once to put this resolution into effect.

Convention Impressions

This convention has given me a firmer determination to "brighten the corner" where I am.—Maysel Bowman.

It has been a blessing to me.—Mrs. E. R. Clarke.

I have been inspired in such a manner as never before. It has been one that will leave an everlasting impression on me.

It is one of the most beneficial and inspiring meetings I have ever attended.—Grace Harris.

I now realize what a wonderful organization the B. Y. P. U. of A. is.—Zella Rush.

This convention has helped me much. It has helped me to understand more about B. Y. P. U. work.—Helen Smith.

The most inspiring convention I ever attended.—Martha Anderson.

My impression of the B. Y. P. U. of A. is that the motto "Forward with Christ" has been carried out.—Forrest Bishop.

The convention at St. Paul was the best I have ever attended. The good it has rendered is unlimited.—Ainslee Hickerson.

Every convention I attend makes the future of the Baptist denomination look brighter to me because of the sort of young people we have.—H. J. Howard.

The convention is the most wonderful, inspiring meeting which I have had the privilege of attending in my life.—Verla Withars.

The most inspiring meetings I have ever attended.—B. Allman.

Nellie L. Mitchell of Detroit, Mich., is the author of the hymn, "The Love Tithe," which is published by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church. It is a stewardship song. It is a new song and may help our own women to make their meetings interesting.

The Young Reserves

New Contest: If I Were Black

Dear Young Reserves,

Do you remember what a perfectly splendid India contest we had this summer when a lot of you turned yourselves into Hindus for a day and wrote me letters about "When I Was Hungry"? Well, the time has surely come for another contest; and of course, since all the grown-up Baptists are spending the fall months reading and studying the Negroes, let every Young Reserve put on his and her thoughtfulest thinking-cap and write the best possible article on the subject: "If I Were Black."

The way to do it is to pretend that you are black; then ask yourself whether you simply ache to be white-all-over, or whether you are content to be black-all-over. You will want to see whether you like the white folks, or envy the white folks, or hate the white folks. You will have to decide how you feel about being called "coon" and "nigger" and "danky." Probably you will want to choose a place to live,—would you rather stay way down South in Dixie in a little log cabin with no school to attend, or move up North to live in some wretched old neighborhood where enormous rents are charged for even a ramshackle "Home, Sweet Home"? No doubt you will think about the Baptists who build schools down South (so that the poorest Negro can work his or her way through) and build Christian Centers up North (so that the poorest Negro can have one big friendly gathering-place where

Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.

What a wonderful old hymn! But we so often omit the stanza which begins:

*Take my silver and my gold;
Not a mite would I withhold.*

Religious Education

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 8

THE BIRTH AND CHILDHOOD OF JESUS
Lesson: Luke 2 Golden Text: Luke 2:52

Setting

The Bethlehem where Jesus was born is six miles south of Jerusalem, Nazareth, the childhood home of Jesus, is a hill-encircled town about eighty miles from Jerusalem. Four days was the usual time required for the journey, but in the case of Mary and Joseph it is probable that it took at least six days. The lesson of today is the only recorded event of the childhood of Jesus.

Lesson

The first thirty-nine verses of Luke 2 are devoted to the story of the birth of Jesus, the presentation in the temple, the meeting with Simeon and the aged prophetess Anna. Verse 40, which introduces the printed lesson for today takes Jesus at a period beyond babyhood. "And the child grew and waxed strong, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him." What a gracious picture of childhood! Thus he is introduced in the lesson, and in the last verse he is described as "advancing in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Between these two significant verses lies the total that we have recorded of Jesus' childhood—yet it is much. The feast of the Passover was the chief Jewish feast of the year. This began April 14. As he was now twelve years old, "a son of the law" according to Jewish custom, it was binding upon Jesus that he also attend the feast. There was no obligation placed upon women, though they often attended. It was obligatory to attend for two days, but it required seven days to observe the three great festivals occurring at this time—the feast of the Pentecost and of the Tabernacle following the Passover. It may have been that Jesus thought his parents were to stay the seven days. They had gone a day's journey before they missed him—not unnatural since there were many returning in the same caravan and the boy might easily have been with other kinsfolk or acquaintances. So "they returned to Jerusalem, seeking him . . . after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of teachers, both hearing them and asking questions; and they were amazed at his understanding and his answers." His mother's mild question of reproval the boy met with "How is it that ye sought me? Knew ye not that I must be in my Father's house? And they understood not . . ." But he went down with them to Nazareth and was "subject unto them."

Leading Thoughts

Every child has something he may teach to his parents if they but have the wisdom to listen. 2. The picture of the ideal child—he "grew, and waxed strong, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him"—is one which every mother should covet for her own children. 3. "Success is growing to your full spiritual stature under God's sky."—Carlyle.

Like Other Boys

*HE was a boy like other boys,
And played and sported with the rest.
He had his troubles and his joys,
And strove for mastery with the best.
He was great-hearted, tender, true,
And brave as any boy could be,
And very gentle, for he knew
That Love is God's own Calvary.
And one thing I am sure about—
He never tumbled into sin,
But kept himself, within, without,
As God had made him, sweet and clean.
—John Oxenham.*

"Different" Sundays

(May not some of these suggestions from one of the most successful Bible classes in the country, reaching and embracing the highest types of manhood and womanhood, be the very thing your class needs to give it a wider influence?)

Every Sunday at the Burrall Bible class, Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., is different from every other Sunday, largely due to the work of the two university committees made up of some of the most prominent men and women on the campus.

When the "Tigers" met the "Sooners," all "Homecomers" were invited to attend the Burrall class. The engineers opened their St. Pat's celebrations by attending the Burrall class en masse. Farmers fair opened with a grand march of 400 "ag" students to the Stephens auditorium.

Some folks skeptically asserted that university men would never come to Sunday school. One Sunday was declared fraternity Sunday, and on that day nine fraternities and men's boarding houses reported 100 per cent of their membership in Sunday school. The sororities, on their day, reported four houses with a 100 per cent Sunday school attendance.

Occasionally, Miss Burrall announced a "date Sunday," and the following Sunday folks streamed into the college auditorium in pairs. "Twin Sunday" was a day on which each member brought another, a "twin" to class. On Valentine Day, the "twin" became a "living Valentine."

On "Poppy Sunday," a five minute sale of flowers netted $263 for French war orphans. The Sunday before Thanksgiving admission to class was a potato, an apple or a coin, but students came to class laden with pecks of apples and potatoes, cans of fruit and huge sacks of flour. So much food was brought that the entire platform was covered with gifts for those in need.

One Sunday afternoon, a member of the Burrall class returned to his room to find one of his "buddies" lying on his back on the bed with the Bible open on his knees. The "buddie" was evidencing keen enjoyment over the verses he was reading.

To the Burrall member, he called, "Say, boy, you ought to read this book. It's the keenest philosophy I've ever heard of. Beats Aristotle a mile," and he handed the newcomer the Bible opened to the Book of Job.

When asked to join the "gang" for an afternoon hike, the "buddie" absolutely refused to lay down the fascinating book.

Many university students are discovering the rich stores that await them in the Book of all books, the Bible.

Bow Wah—and Some Others

By E. E. BOYD

Twenty-two years ago Bow Wah entered the Chinese Mission School, which now is located at 106 South Oxford Street, Brooklyn. He attended the school regularly for twelve years, meanwhile going through the public schools. He then went back to China to finish his medical education at the Boone Medical School, in the Canton district. He has since been a practicing physician in his native city.

During these years he has exerted a strong Christian influence. He has forced the company to which he belongs to close the entire building in which his office is located on Sunday, and he goes always to church and Sunday school. Dr. Bow has now brought his son, Bow Fong, to Brooklyn and placed him in charge of his old teacher, Mrs. Boyd, to be educated under the influence of the mission.

Five of the former students have, this year, brought their sons to have them educated in the school as they were. It was an inspiring sight to see this group of fathers, standing on Sunday not very long ago to present their sons to their old teacher, craving for them the same help which had shaped their own characters.

The men in this school raised the money and built the church at Hokshaw, and the mission house at Nowtung. The pastor of the Hokshaw church, three of the deacons and the Sunday school superintendent, were former pupils in the South Oxford Street Mission.

Do our city missions pay?

Indicative of the increasing number of Southern Baptist laymen who are making a larger contribution of their funds to religious causes, it is announced that Mr. D. Rich, a prosperous business man of Winston-Salem, N. C., has contributed a library to Buie's Creek Academy at Buie's Creek, N. C., as a memorial to his wife.

Our Own Folks

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN.

A just judge has been stirring the city tremendously by a far-reaching campaign against the illicit selling of drugs. Hundreds of weeping unfortunates have been gathered in. Scores of vendors who have been busy handling the coke were brought in also. Then some of the "higher-ups," the master minds who were enriching themselves, the "ring" which proved to be men of the lowest strata, were laid hold on. Now that all this is done, the judge would reach farther. He states that the great, respectable manufacturing companies, the pharmaceutical agencies are producing more of these deadly drugs in a day than our physicians and society at large can use for legitimate purposes in a year. Again it is the demand for an enlarged application of the Christian conscience. The line of connection from the rich, prosperous, respectable companies and stockholders to the distraught, desperate, criminally minded dopestier is unbroken.

The summer has seen plans for the sesqui-centennial in 1923 approved by congress and gathered into the hands of the able Colonel D'Olier as president of the board. Against them are frankly ranged some captains of industry who fear an inflation of the labor market and other values with a subsequent, serious reaction. It is too late, however for the opposition. Our friends can begin with confidence to prepare for a visit to this great city. We do not know as yet how much it will cost us or them. The mayor asks for $40,000,000. We know it will be plenty at any rate and see the undertaking as one of the dominating influences that the churches must face for the next four years.

The Baptist Ministers' Conference had its first meeting on September 11 with an able sermon by J. Francis Behrens as its program. Among the prominent members who will be much missed is the Rev. Joseph Bennett who was very recently called home. An able preacher and much in demand as a pastor at large, Dr. Bennett has filled the latter years with great activity hereabouts and was loved by all.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones is among us again after a wonderful summer in Czecho-slovakia. His friends are glad to see that his health seems fully restored, that the strenuous trip was evidently a great benefit. The First Church and the city will benefit this winter as Dr. Jones gives out the detail of what he has seen and felt while abroad.

Your correspondent started to make a bird's-eye review of the way the conference spent the summer, possibly with a view to finding in the symposium an answer to the question as to the best way for a minister to spend his vacation. It was easy to get information. Mayberry camped; Agate went to the Adirondacks; Main tried to do two men's jobs; Maxwell motored; Igler had a pastorate on Mt. Desert in Maine. Dr. Conwell was on the farm,—but what's the use? One man's meat is another's poison. Enough that we are back, satisfied to be where we are, and eager to realize our plans.

Among the new pastors we welcome Rev. John Day from Yonkers, who begins his pastorate at the fine Memorial Church, succeeding W. H. Main. S. L. Brace has begun his ministry at Lehigh Avenue. Rev. E. A. Harrar has come to the First Church, Camden, succeeding the beloved and sainted Lyell.

The resignation of Rev. S. R. Williams at Nicetown is announced.

Many friends of Rev. Harry W. Barras, director of the Sunday-school literature service department of the Publication Society and indefatigable correspondent of the Watchman-Examiner, will be pleased to hear that at the commencement exercises in June, Temple University conferred upon him the degree of doctor of divinity.

Many pastors have good reason to boast of their young people but Rev. John W. Elliot of Wayne Central has particular reason in that he found when he returned from his vacation, on their own initiative, his young people during the summer had raised the last $1,000 and paid off the indebtedness for the Miller Memorial Mission, the place where his people work among the Italians.

On Nov. 2, in the Logan Church, the Pennsylvania fundamentalists will set up a conference. Among the speakers will be Dr. B. C. Taylor, formerly of Crozer, M. P. Boynton of Chicago, probably Nathan Wood of Boston, and Cary S. Thomas of this city. There will be an open forum discussion with speakers pro and con of the question: Do Baptists need a statement of principles? Some of us would like to feel that the question was settled at Indianapolis but evidently there is still the desire for discussion and light. May it be light and not heat that any of us give to the matter.

Our city mission work among the Italians continues to grow and to demand investment of funds and strength. The latest step is the purchase of property next to the church with an outlay that will amount to $12,000. This will be adapted and used for a dispensary. Already from three to five thousand cases are treated annually in the mission. It will also be used for a part of the Sunday school that is overflowing the church. There are now seven paid workers on the staff of this mission of the Baptist Union.

Gloucester Memorial Church

By CHARLES H. WATSON

The imposing and appropriate edifice for the church at East Gloucester which is to take the place of the meeting-house which was destroyed by fire about a year ago, has already been commenced. Pastor John B. Wilson has inspired his people to build for the future and for the whole community of the East and of the old Provincial city. Gloucester is emphatically a colonial city, with all of the flavors of the Puritanical commonwealth. Befittingly there the new house is colonial. It will stand in a strategical location, and have all the practical features of a modern church: workshop, and will have a minister solid, sincere, Biblical, and modern to the core.

Verily happily the dedication of the new meeting house will come at the time of the celebration of the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of Gloucester, and the pastor's thought was that instead of the Chapel Street Church, which name was attached to the old house, it ought to be called the "Gloucester Memorial Church" because of its interesting association with the city's approaching celebration, and so it will be. All the details of the new house are wisely planned for gospel industry, and the plant will serve the community well for many years. The parsonage standing at the left of the wing of the meeting-house is what it should be. Already the minister's family is in it, anticipating the widening work which the new equipment will make possible.

It will take $60,000 to complete everything. They will finish the wing at once, paying as they go—hoping to dedicate in August, 1923. As a people they are far more willing than wealthy. They will economize and sacrifice and pull together, that is certain. And they will win. But the achievement will be more swift and sure if the prosperous among their brethren will bear a helping hand. Pastor Wilson is always cheerfully busy, and he and his flock are mighty good people to help.

THE NEW GLOUCESTER MEMORIAL CHURCH BUILDING

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

When the $175,000,000 campaign was put on in Missouri, it was hoped that the $3,000,000 asked for would be easily raised. Of this amount, $1,500,000 was to be devoted to missions, and the other half for the six schools and the four philanthropic institutions the Baptists have in Missouri. The week from Nov. 30 to Dec. 7, 1919, was called "Victory Week Campaign," in which subscriptions for these schools and philanthropic institutions were secured, the subscriptions to be collectible in five installments, the first payment coming Jan. 1, 1920. The fund for missions was to be raised in the churches through the regular apportionments and every-member canvass and the duplex envelopes, exactly as the missionary money had previously been raised. Missouri received great inspiration from the campaign and a substantial amount has been secured for both objects. However, our state has not realized its quota, only $981,756 having been subscribed during Victory Week for our schools and philanthropic institutions, and not a few of our Missouri churches having no definite plan or method with respect to the raising of money, under the five-year plan, for missions. About 40,000 new members have come into Missouri Baptist churches since the campaign started, and these must be enlisted for its success, as also the other Baptists of the state who neglected their opportunity to give for these objects. Therefore, the $75,000,000 re-inforcement campaign.

The aim in Missouri will be to make good all arrearages in offerings and push forward to completion the canvass. More than this, to project a great evangelistic effort, whereby the unsaved in Missouri may be reached and saved for Jesus Christ. Dr. J. C. Owen of Fulton, has been released from his duties as pastor that he may give himself for the next few months to this campaign. Dr. R. B. Whiteside of this city will be the general director for our association. Associated with these brethren are others to advise and help. Dr. S. E. Ewing is the publicity director for St. Louis. The campaign will do much, it is believed, to unify and strengthen Baptist work in the state.

Our St. Louis Baptist Brotherhood met in the Water Tower Church on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 10. Dr. James Hardin Smith, pastor of the North Presbyterian Church, delivered an address on his trip through Palestine in 1914. The next Sunday afternoon meeting will be on Oct. 8 in the West Park Church. A meeting for election of officers and general sociability will be held soon after. Brother W. E. Been of the Third Church is chairman of a committee on arrangements for the meeting. Brethren G. M. Chilcotte, E. Matter and B. Short are a committee on nomination of officers for the new year.

The city B. Y. P. U. will hold a training school for B. Y. P. U. workers during the week beginning Nov. 12. A good program is being arranged. There will be a rally in one of the churches of the city on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 12; class work each evening from Monday to Friday, inclusive. The executive committee of the city union is the committee to arrange for the training school, with the writer as chairman. He will also be director of the school. Among the special features this year will be the flashlights, a demonstration each evening by one of the unions of some part of B. Y. P. U. work, also the "pepper-box"—brief talks by the young people on "B. Y. P. U. Spirit and Purpose." Dr. R. B. Whiteside will speak at the Sunday afternoon rally. The faculty has been secured. We are expecting to have the best training school for B. Y. P. U. work ever held in our city.

There is difficulty among the Italian Baptists of our city. Their pastor, Rev. Amedeo Pascuita, was asked either to resign or to give himself entirely to his work as pastor, and he tendered his resignation, effective Sept. 1. For the past three years he has been preparing himself through medical study for the practice of medicine, and he has still about a year for the completing of his study. It was felt by the mission board and the Home Mission Society that he was taking too much of his time for this study and that he could not give sufficient attention to his church if he intended to practice medicine. He intended, he says, to devote his entire time to the study of medicine, but when his congregation discovered he was leaving, they insisted, so he avers, upon going with him, and starting an independent church, to be known as the Independent Italian Baptist Church of St. Louis. Brother Pascuita accepted the offer, but the movement will be probably short-lived. The membership of the church is only about thirty. Work at the Italian center will be continued. The mission board maintains a day nursery and does welfare work in the Italian district. Brother Pascuita has been pastor of the First Italian Baptist Church for six years.

The Ministers' Conference met again, after the summer vacation, on Monday, Sept. 10. Brother H. C. Combs presided. Our meetings are in the Third Church. After a brief time for telling of vacation experiences, Drs. O. L. Wood and J. C. Owen spoke on the re-inforcement campaign. Topic of meeting, Sept. 18, was "Rallying our Forces for the Fall and Winter Campaign." Sept. 25, church federation meeting at the Y. W. C. A. Oct. 2, field reports, election of officers, discussion: "My Church and its Task." Led by the program committee. Oct. 9, Book reviews; paper, "Should the Emphasis in our Preaching be Changed?" by Brother L. B. Arvin. Further program to be arranged after election of new president. The present program committee, consisting of the writer, Dr. R. B. Whiteside and Brother W. L. Nash, continues until the end of 1922.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

September finds our Detroit Baptist brotherhood refreshed and invigorated for an aggressive kingdom campaign. Detroit, the dynamic is back in its old-time stride and pushing determinedly toward the second million mark, which careful surveys made by public service corporations show will be accomplished by 1935. It required over 200 years to gain the first million but the second is confidently expected to be gained in fifteen years. Such is the trend toward the great industrial centers! This mighty migration makes the evangelization of our larger cities the overshadowing problem of our day and generation.

The Detroit Baptist Union has recently closed its fiscal year, the greatest and best year in every way in its history. The churches reported the largest number of accessions, the educational work reached its highest achievement, our work among the foreign speaking groups and among the rapidly increasing Negro group, has been splendidly effective, and the treasurer's report shows a total of $262,052.14. The annual report now in print is being circulated among the churches. It is an inspiring document.

Nine new Baptist building projects are now on, or soon will be, counting both our white and Negro groups. The Royal Oak edifice will be dedicated in October. The Northwestern (formerly the Hudson Avenue) will follow soon after, and then the Redford Church. These three are all splendid and worthy structures, auditoriums only as yet, but to be followed soon with Sunday-school and church-house units. Completed, these will aggregate a value of $375,000. The other buildings are all greatly needed but for smaller congregations if we except one of the Negro churches—the Macedonian Plans for the St. Clair Heights Church are ready for bids and the same will be well under way before snow flies. All this has called for real heroic giving and faith but our Lord commends these virtues and Detroit Baptists have prospered in practicing them.

The Roumanian Baptist Conference held its annual meeting in the Second Roumanian Church, Sept. 2-5. It was largely attended and the reports both from the United States and European fields were most inspiring. Dr. C. A. Brooks of New York, Dr. Frank L. Anderson, president of the International Seminary of East Orange, N. J., and Dr. H. C. Gleiss, general superintendent of the Detroit Baptist Union gave addresses. Detroit has three Roumanian Baptist churches and all in flourishing condition. Several of the ablest leaders in Roumania went from Detroit. The reflex influence of the missionary work done in Detroit is seen in the progress of our Baptist work in Roumania and other European countries.

Rev. Frank Kaiser succeeds Rev. C. A. Daniel as pastor of the First German Church. Rev. T. J. Edwards becomes pastor of the Birmingham Church, Rev. J. C. Hill has accepted the pastorate of the Ferndale Church and Rev. E. B. Jacobsen is the new pastor of the Wyandotte Church. We are glad to welcome these splendid leaders to the large tasks afforded by the metropolitan area.

The Baptist Ministers' Conference which meets Monday mornings in the Woodward Avenue Church has its printed program out and a very worthy one it is. There is a splendid spirit of cooperation manifest.

Sunday, Sept. 10, was a great day at the Woodward Avenue Church. Dr. Hoag had returned from his vacation. It was communion Sunday and the auditorium was not large enough to seat those in attendance. In the Bible school immediately following, the church auditorium was thronged. Dr. Hoag was on the platform with Judge Marsh, teacher of the great Baraca class on one side, and Corporation Counsel Wilcox on the other. In marched the Baracas, who are now compelled to meet in a building across the street, and marching upon the platform each presented the pastor with a scarlet aster until his arms were filled. Then the various classes marched up until the platform was filled with floral offerings. Deacon Fred Wilcox gave an address of welcome and in turn was followed by Dr. H. C. Gleiss who responded for the Baptists of Detroit, telling briefly what Woodward Avenue and its pastor means to our Baptist work in the metropolitan area. It was indeed an inspiring occasion. Never has this great church faced the fall more hopefully.

Dr. C. M. Carter has just returned from his European trip and preached for the First Church, Sept. 10, where Dr. and Mrs. Carter are members. In the morning his sermon was a stirring appeal "Go forward." In the evening he discussed "Is Europe Dying?" Dr. Carter has traversed Europe so often he is peculiarly fitted to discuss its political, financial, and moral conditions. The First Church comes to the fall months with bright prospects. The Sunday school is enjoying an attendance much larger than one year ago. The edifice has been redecorated and a vigorous campaign is in preparation. Dr. Frank L. Anderson was a recent preacher, and Sept. 17, President Hoben of Kalamazoo College was the preacher. Dr. Hoben was a former pastor of the First Church.

Monday, Sept. 25, at the First Church will be an evangelistic conference for pastors, workers, church officers, and Baptists generally in the metropolitan area. There will be an all-day program closing with inspirational addresses by Mrs. Elmore of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Rev. Jacob Speicher, the great missionary statesman of China.

Thursday evening, Sept. 28, the Baptist Young People's Union of the Detroit area will have a great rally to honor International President Sanborn of Minneapolis, who will be the guest of honor and the principal speaker.

The influx of Negroes from the South has set in again, several thousand having come to Detroit this summer. As a large percentage are Baptist, their coming adds much to the problems that confront us in adequately ministering to these brethren. Another education conference is being planned for our Negro Baptists the last week in October. The one held last year was largely attended and rich in constructive results.

Opening Services for Galilee Church

By G. G. LAUGHLIN

Sunday, Sept. 10, was a splendid day for Denver Baptists. The most important feature was the opening services in the new Galilee Church. It was the culmination of over thirty-one years of faithful service of the pastor, Rev. Joshua Gravett. The church has been in need of a better equipment for several years and the opening of this new house of worship was an event which brought many expressions of thanksgiving from the members and friends of Galilee.

The total cost, including parsonage, was about $47,000. The parsonage was already built and the church building was remodeled and enlarged. The property was formerly owned by the Hyde Park Presbyterians. The whole plant as it now stands is worth $80,000. The church began building a year ago with a little over $20,000 on hand. During the year $16,000 more have been paid in by the free-will offerings of the people. The Sunday school has given nearly $12,000 of the total amount raised. There remains unprovided for about $8,000; as soon as this is provided for the church will be dedicated, which will possibly be around Nov. 1.

Many words of commendation were spoken Sunday about Galilee Church and Pastor Gravett. He is now in his thirty-second year as pastor of the church. All Denver and Colorado Baptists look up to him. God has greatly blessed his ministry in this city and state.

Sunday was a red-letter day for Galilee. The Sunday school met for the first service at 9:45 a. m. The officers and teachers who had prayed a long time for a better building, were profoundly thankful that their prayers had been answered. Brother Gravett presided at the eleven o'clock service. The keys were presented by Col. J. E. Huchingson, chairman of the building committee, in some well chosen words, to Mr. Ervin F. Smith, chairman of the board of trustees. Rev. F. W. Hart, a long-time friend of Galilee Church, preached the morning sermon to an appreciative audience. The afternoon service was for Denver Baptists. Rev. Farnum St. John presided. Mr. Walter S. Smith and the choir rendered some splendid musical selections, assisted by a male quartet. Dr. W. J. Bingham read the Scripture and offered prayer. Rev. Aaron Schlessman, president of the Denver Ministers' Conference, offered the greetings from Denver Baptists. The afternoon sermon was preached by Rev. F. W. Starring and the message was one great inspiration. Greetings were then made by Dr. A. H. C. Morse, Dr. Horace W. Cole and Judge Freeman. Dr. Morse spoke as the next oldest pastor, from the standpoint of service, having been pastor of the First Church for ten years. Dr. Cole spoke as the youngest pastor in Denver, having recently come as pastor of the Calvary Church. Judge Fred W. Freeman, while representing state and Northern Baptists, brought in his unique way a very impressive, personal message.

He gave his approval of the building enterprise and added that he thought it would be a good way to treat all Presbyterian churches—make Baptist churches out of them and put such men as Pastor Gravett in charge of them. Brother Gravett preached a splendid sermon to a full house at the evening service. Three adults were received for baptism. Galilee has a great opportunity for service, and its many friends are expecting good things of it.

The Clermont (Ohio) Association

By WILSON A. SMITH

The one hundred and sixth anniversary of the Clermont Association was held with the Withamsville Church Sept. 8-9. It was one of the best meetings ever held in this old Association, especially from the spiritual side. It did not have any motto such as "The Uplifted Christ," which the Northern Baptist Convention had at Indianapolis yet like a red strand there ran through its program the power of the gospel and of the Master.

When Moderator Fitzpatrick called the first session to order it was learned that nearly every church had all its delegates present. The moderator took charge of the devotional exercises and then Rev. George Wiggin, the strong pastor of the entertaining church, delivered the introductory sermon, which proved to be the key-note of the association's work. He took for his text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation," emphasizing the power of God and pleading for us to take hold of the promises and, trusting in Jehovah, to look up to the cross of Calvary.

Dinner was served by the ladies of the Withamsville church. Unless you have sat down to one of these dinners which the women of the southern Ohio counties know how to get up, why, man, you know nothing of a gastronomic feast! That's all.

Rev. J. W. Arnold gave the doctrinal sermon in the afternoon, taking for his subject "The Church." His presentation of the work of the church in the labor of carrying the message of the Saviour to the world was a classic.

The evening services opened with a song period led by Dr. W. A. Smith, pastor of the New Richmond church. This was followed by an address by Mrs. F. P. Lippert, president of the Ohio Woman's Missionary Society. Mrs. Lippert led her audience to Olivet and had them listen to the Master's voice to go into all the world. Rev. A. W. Denlinger then preached the evening sermon which followed along the lines Mrs. Lippert had laid out. Brother Denlinger comes from the Miami Association but he will always have many who will be glad to hear him should he come again.

Friday morning Dr. Smith led in the devotional service and then the women took charge under the leadership of Mrs. Olivia H. Smith. The splendid work these women have accomplished under trying circumstances led us to know that God's promises were made to be kept. He filled their granaries full. Miss Nellie Dunham, one of the state workers gave instruction as to methods of winning the young folks and interesting them in Christian work and leading them to Jesus. Brother Albert N. Coombs gave the report of the work of the various Sunday schools in the association. He had visited every school in the association and the report of his stewardship as president of that branch of the work was the best ever presented at any association. Brother Kilgore made a report of the activities of the young people.

Rev. N. H. Poole, a former pastor of Bethel then gave the missionary sermon. He declared that only as a church gave was it blessed with power. It is the reflected glory of the cross of Jesus Christ which causes us to shine as we "Go into all the world," remembering that he is with us all the way. It was a fitting finale to the work of the convention.

The officers for the next year are: Moderator, J. M. Fitzpatrick; vice-moderator, Rev. G. H. Wiggin; clerk, R. L. Kilgore; treas., Jas. H. Burke; B. Y. P. U. sec., Mrs. Bessie Shaw.

Brother Wm. Coombs, the dean of members, has been the faithful secretary for so long that none present could recall the time when he was not secretary. He was not a candidate for the office this year. Brother Coombs told of his sixty years of service in the association and that he had not missed a meeting in all these three decades save one when he was in the trenches, wearing the uniform of his country while guarding Cincinnati from a threatened invasion by raiders from the south. A rising vote of thanks and appreciation for such faithful service was given the old soldier of the cross. Sixty years! O, for more such consecrated servants. As Brother Coombs stood there telling of the experiences of the many years, the silver hair which crowned his head seemed like a foregleam of that "golden crown" which awaits the "overcomer" in that city not made with hands.

"God be with you, till we meet again," was sung accompanied with handshaking, God-speed you and tears. The next meeting will be held in September, 1923, with the Amelia Church. As the sun was sinking behind the green tufted hills of old Clermont we went to our homes to gird our loins for the fight that lies before us. It was with happy hearts, mingled with sadness that we parted for we know that some of us shall not join our voices in song again until in God's own time we shall sing with angel choir the "song of Moses and the Lamb."

Joel B. Slocum

A Personal Tribute

It is hard to realize that I shall not see my friend again on earth, for at the Indianapolis Convention he seemed in the full vigor of hearty manhood. I first met him when he became my pastor in the First Church of Dayton, Ohio. Common religious and educational interests quickly knit ties of friendship between our families, and in a few months those ties seemed as though they had been formed for years.

I shall long remember his earnest preaching of the gospel, his abounding zeal, in pastoral service and his loyal devotion to the work of the kingdom outside his own parish. But even more shall I recall and cherish the memory of his genial nature and warm-hearted friendship. And what he was to me he was also to thousands of others from Coast to Coast, into whose lives he brought the ever welcome ministrations of "a cheerful heart" that "causeth good healing".

If in the better land we follow the lines of our Spirit-directed activities here I can think of no service more welcome to him than to—"Build a house by the side of the road

And be a friend to man."

Granville, Ohio.

F. G. CRESSEY.

Dr. W. A. Granger

By H. B. GROSE

For fourteen years Dr. W. A. Granger was president of the New York State Convention, and in that capacity rendered a service which gave him a large place in the denominational life, while it endeared him especially to the churches of the state, all of which he had visited and hundreds of which he had cheered and helped. For fourteen years prior to that he was the beloved pastor of the Mount Vernon Baptist Church, in which he retained his membership and there he came to the sudden close of his useful life. It was a most dramatic close.

Although for some time in enfeebled condition, following a partial apoplectic stroke, by urgent request he undertook to give the hand of fellowship to Rev. Harold C. Phillips, the young pastor who was to begin his service on Sunday morning, Sept. 10. Nothing else would have seemed so fitting—the veteran welcoming the beginner to the familiar pulpit. Dr. Granger was in most happy mood as he rose to speak. He told how, twenty-eight years before, he had been called to the pastorate without having been seen or heard by the church; then described the hot July Sunday on which he and his wife had later visited the church, and had a day of welcome and receptions of such exhaustive character that, as he said, "when it came Monday morning I was in a state of collapse"—and as that word was uttered he threw up his hands as if in gesture and sank to the floor lifeless. He had often expressed the desire to die in the harness, and thus, while rendering the last service to the church, he was translated. A very deep impression was made upon church and community by this tragic but beautiful ending of a long service.

Dr. Granger was seventy-two years of age. A graduate of Colgate and of Union Seminary, he had several pastorates before he was called to the state mission work in which he spent most fruitful years. He was an evangelistic preacher, a sincere, kindly, helpful man. At the funeral service at the church, attended by a large delegation of ministers and by representatives of all the churches, attesting the universal esteem and honor in which Dr. Granger was held, the highest eulogy was paid in the expression of a lifelong friend, who said, "He was a good man, with hand always stretched out to help." Only last spring he resigned his position and laid down the heavy burden. His work was finished, and he "fell on sleep." A wide circle of friends will join in sympathy with the bereaved wife and family.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH of Sanford, the second oldest church in the state, observes the one hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of its organization this month. Special services were held on Sunday, Sept. 17, Thursday evening, Sept. 21, and will also be held Sunday, Sept. 24. Among the speakers for the occasion are former pastors Rev. E. S. Philbrook of Randolph, Mass., and Rev. H. L. Tilden, D.D., of Kennebunkport; Rev. I. B. Mower, D.D., general secretary of the Maine United Baptist Convention, Prof. Frederick L. Anderson, of Newton Theological Institution, and Rev. George R. Stair, of Chicago.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

MRS. PAMELIA SMILEY TRUE died in North Sutton, Sept. 1. She was the widow of the late Dr. Benjamin O. True, professor of church history in the Rochester Theological Seminary. Professor True died in 1902. Mrs. True made her home the last few years in North Sutton. She has been in failing health for some time. She was a lady of genuine Christian character and of marked culture and refinement. The funeral service was held at North Sutton, Sept. 4, with interment in the family lot in Meriden, N. H.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF NASHUA, Rev. A. J. Archibald, pastor, re-opened the finely renovated church on Sept. 10. During July and August an expenditure of $17,000 was made. The lower basement has been made into a banquet hall, easily seating 450 at tables. This hall can be divided by folding partitions into five class-rooms for the organized adult classes. An entirely new heating plant has been installed, the auditorium and vestibule re-decorated, a new asbestos roof put on, the whole building re-wired and new electric switches and fixtures supplied, and the tower clock and organ put in fine shape. The church has now 700 members and a Sunday school with an average of over 400. All last winter the prayer meeting was over the 200 mark. The problem of a great Sunday evening service seems to have been solved. A program is now being arranged for celebration of the centennial in October.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE RESIGNATION OF REV. ARTHUR S. Burrows from the Bethany Church, Roxbury, merits more than passing mention. For ten years Mr. Burrows' ministry has been heroic. He has battled with most serious physical limitations, meanwhile both in preaching, pastoral service and authorship, has been continuous and surprising. The predominating spiritual quality of it all has been so evident, that the people loved him and accepted him as a privilege. His pastorate at Bethany has had to be too brief for the church, and all hearts cherish him tenderly and gratefully in his enforced retirement.

DR. R. S. MACARTHUR closed his remarkable summer pastorate at Tremont Temple on Sept. 3. The doctor has had distinct recognition and appreciation from large congregations, and has given them discourses of freshness and power upon strictly Bible themes. Now Dr. Massee takes up the great work.

THE OCEAN PARK CONFERENCE was a great success. Five days of rain out of the seven could not swamp the more than 500 young Baptist "sports." Three times a day they left their tents, ploughed through the mud, and laughed at the tempest, while Director Peterson's big program was proceeding. The Newton summer school rode through the crowd and commotion, but will best thrive next year, perhaps, amid the quiet glories of the seminary hill-top.

WE HAVE HAD A LITTLE FLURRY about the merger of the Andover Theological Seminary and the Harvard Divinity School. In the first test of its legality in the courts the merger wins. Perhaps it should, for Unitarians are less radical than they were, and progressive Congregationalists a little more so than formerly; thus without difficulty, they will live together in some great agreements, without exaggerating their differences.

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE held a regional conference for New England in Pilgrim Hall, Boston, Sept. 18-19. They had their top man here from Washington, D. C., Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, and with other earnest and capable leaders gave an informing and inspiring day. The different ministers' conferences adjourned their meetings and helped to strengthen things. In the sleepless battle of the "traffic" against the law, things are not going by default. The anti-saloon leaders are remarkably watchful and vigorous, and will have the backing of the ministers and churches.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 3, was a red-letter day at First Church, Holliston, when the retiring superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. Morse L. Merritt, was given a farewell reception. Mr. Merritt was presented a copy of the Scofield Reference Bible, the presentation being made by Mr. A. C. Comey, the adult superintendent. In addition to the Bible he received a purse of gold, traveling bag, gold ring and a fountain pen from other of the organizations of the church. Mr. Merritt who is nineteen years of age was licensed to preach two years ago, and has supplied in Milford, Bellingham, and his home church on several occasions. He left Holliston Sept. 9, to enter Montpelier Seminary, Montpelier, Vt., where he will study for the ministry. He has the best wishes of a host of friends.

NEW JERSEY

MEMBERS OF THE HEADQUARTERS STAFF and their associates and assistants of the General Board of Promotion and the two Home Mission Societies, were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mornay Williams, Englewood, N. J., Saturday, Sept. 9. A "good fellowship" tournament was succeeded by a recital by Englewood's beloved poet, Mrs. Amelia Burr Elmore. Supper was served on the lawn by Mrs. Williams, the eight tournament winners assisting.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. HENRY JOHN BAKER has resigned the pastorate of the Peckville Church, after a successful and satisfactory pastorate. His resignation was reluctantly accepted by the church. It will become effective Sunday, Sept. 24. For nearly four years Mr. Baker has had pastoral oversight with the Mt. Bethel Church. Last fall fifteen new members united with that church, twelve of them by baptism. Over 100 people united with the Peckville Church, most of them by baptism. At the communion service, Sunday evening, Sept. 3, the church granted a license to preach to Mr. Gordon Ham. Mr. Ham has proved himself to be a strong spiritual leader among the young people. A successful Bible conference was held recently with the Mt. Bethel Church. The young people under the leadership of Mr. Ham rendered splendid work. Pastor Baker will be available for pulpit supply work after Sept. 24. Prior to the Peckville ministry he has had pastorates at South Clinton, Walden First and First Church, Nanticoke, Pa.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THURSDAY, SEPT. 7, the First Church of Kane held its annual business meeting. One important measure taken by the church is action changing the time for the annual reports and business to the spring of the year, making the reports coincide with those to the state and General Board of Promotion. In order to do that, the statistics in the letter to the association this month will be for a period of the eight months ending April 30, 1922. The reports of the church rendered for the period just named, indicate that the church has made a net gain in membership of fifty-three; that more than $2,400 was expended in the local expenses of the church and that more than $1,000 was raised for the benevolences of the church. Remembering that this is for only two-thirds of a year and that until last April this was a mission church receiving aid from the state board, the membership present felt inspired to sing the doxology with new earnestness and devotion.

INDIANA

SEPT. 3 WAS THE FIRST anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. C. P. Kirby with the First Church of Elkhart. It has been a year of unifying the church. Some disciplinary work was necessary. The Bible school averaged about 250 in attendance. The teacher-training course was followed with a good class; a junior church organized with weekly services; a very successful vacation Bible school conducted. The church sent its Bible-school superintendent to the International S. S. Convention at Kansas City; five of the young people to the Indiana Summer Assembly at Franklin, and a teacher to the Winona Bible Conference, paying all their expenses. The church has added to its number thirty-four by baptism and experience, and sixteen by letter. About $1,000 was paid on an old debt, current expenses met, and a goodly amount paid on the New World Movement. A definite program for the year to come is prepared for the church's adoption at an early meeting.

MICHIGAN

THIS HAS BEEN a great summer for the churches of Traverse City. More tourists have been in this region than ever before, and many of them visit the services. And just as the tourist season comes to an end the annual pilgrimage of hay-fever victims sets in, so folks from as far west as Kansas and as far south as Kentucky are still being greeted. Following a suggestion found in THE BAPTIST a few months ago, about ministers talking too much time in the prayer meetings Rev. George Woolcock has put the mid-week service in the hands of the laymen. When he proposed the change sentiment was divided, some saying that it would kill the meeting and others saying that it would be a good thing to give the laymen more to do. That was six weeks ago, and the experiment is meeting with such success that it will be continued indefinitely. The pastor opens the meeting with singing and prayer and then turns it over to the chosen leader who has had a week to prepare his program. Women as well as men are leading, and all are doing splendidly. At the annual meeting of the Traverse City Church, held Aug. 31, the reports from the various departments were most encouraging. All bills were reported paid, with snug balances in the treasuries. Mr. Geo. Weeks, superintendent of the Grand Traverse County S. S. Association, was reelected superintendent of the Sunday School. Mr. E. Wilhelm, Traverse City postmaster was elected a deacon in recognition of his excellent Christian character. Miss Irene Straub, a recent graduate of the University School of Music, of Ann Arbor, has been secured as chorister and has already entered enthusiastically upon her work.

CALVARY CHURCH, HARBOR BEACH, E. Shepard Bramble minister, closed its church year Sept. 5. After the reports from all the departments had been read, it was unanimously agreed that the past year was the best that local church had ever passed through. Gains were reported from every department, all bills are paid, and the outlook for the new church year is most encouraging. The present pastor has been here fifteen months and during that time the church has become one of the strongest small town churches in the entire state.

ON SATURDAY, SEPT. 2, occurred the marriage of Miss Helen Ruth Crissman, of Washington, to Mr. Calvin M. Thompson, Jr., of Wyoming. The bride had spent four years at Kalamazoo College and a year in the Baptist Missionary Training School at Chicago. For the past eight years she has been field secretary of the World Wide Guild of the N. B. C. The groom, a graduate of Georgetown College and Newton Theological Seminary, was a chaplain with the forces overseas. At present he is pastor of the First Baptist Church, Casper, Wyo., one of the strong western churches. After two weeks among relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson will leave for their home in Wyoming. The parsonage is being completely renovated for them.

Howard Collett says:

"The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. T. M. Hofmeister of Greenfield, his subject being 'Strange Things,' from Luke 5:26. 'We have seen strange things today. It was one of the most inspiring and uplifting messages given during the whole meeting. He spoke with great emphasis on the fundamentals of our faith, so greatly needed in this day of apostasy.'—Clerk, Clinton Baptist Association in 'The Ohio Baptist.'"

The Baptist reports:

"Dr. T. M. Hofmeister, pastor, First Baptist Church, Greenfield, preached the introductory sermon at the Clinton Association, Manchester. His theme 'Strange Things,' was a fountain of inspiration to the many who heard this masterful address."

KANSAS

REV. H. W. COLE GOES from a seven years' pastorate at Hutchinson to Calvary Church, Denver, Colo.

REV. W. G. CAREY, WHO HAS SERVED for three years as pastor at St. John, goes to Altamont.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY delegates attended the Arkansas Valley Association at Hanston, Aug. 21-23. Rev. L. B. Parker, of Pratt, was elected moderator. This is one of the largest associations in Kansas. The meeting next year will be held in the spring at Lyons.

MINNESOTA

DR. E. R. POPE'S FUNERAL WAS a simple service, but one of the most impressive events in the history of Minnesota Baptists. The mass of floral tributes and the many representatives from the churches of all nationalities from every part of the state were wonderful tributes to the memory of the man who for nearly thirty years held the position of executive secretary of the state convention. The only speakers were Dr. Frank Peterson and Dr. N. B. Henderson, who is pastor of the University Baptist Church, Minneapolis, of which Dr. Pope was a member. Interment was at Lakewood Cemetery, Minneapolis. The first session of our state convention, Monday evening, Oct. 9, will be observed as a memorial service.

REV. E. H. RASMUSSEN has been elected to serve as executive secretary and director of promotion for the period of Dr. Pope's unexpired term, until Nov. 1, 1922.

THE MINNESOTA CONVENTION meets at Owatonna, Oct. 9-12. Dr. A. T. Fowler, C. A. Barbour, Dr. J. C. Robbins, and Mrs. George W. Coleman are among the special speakers. Missionaries S. E. Moon from Africa and Lavinia Mead from Japan will deliver addresses. The convention banquet will be held in Jefts Hall on Pillsbury Academy campus Wednesday evening, and the young people are planning a great banquet on Tuesday evening.

THE UNIVERSITY CHURCH BUILDING, Minneapolis, is progressing well. The wing, which will be used for student, Sunday-school, and social work, will be dedicated Oct. 29 and the roof is now being put on the auditorium wing.

FIRST CHURCH, MINNEAPOLIS, is forging ahead with the erection of its new building, which will be in addition to the stately old First Church structure.

AT LITTLEFORK WORK has begun on the new building and Laporte hopes to build one unit this fall.

MINNESOTA WAS HAPPY to welcome the General German Conference of North America, which recently convened in St. Paul.

BETHEL INSTITUTE SUPPLIES a long-felt want by offering a new Bible training course this fall.

REV. C. H. DAVIES has closed his work at Canby and accepted a call to Breckenridge.

SUCCESSFUL EVANGELISTIC meetings have recently been held in Clark's Grove, Albert Lea, Danish, Fosston, Clinton Falls, and other places. Evangelist I. D. Alvord is now at Little Falls. From here he goes to Delavan and Hastings.

REV. JESSE RICKEL becomes pastor at Lake City, S. D. This good brother who has done such faithful work at Lincoln will be missed.

REV. A. C. EARLEY, THE WELL-KNOWN and beloved pastor at West Concord has accepted a call to California.

REV. H. G. JORGENSEN at Artichoke has closed his pastorate and goes to Chicago for study. Rev. J. A. Moe becomes his successor.

REV. J. C. BOTHIC has resigned at Calvary Church, Duluth.

NINE WERE RECENTLY BAPTIZED at Parkers Prairie, making forty-nine during the summer. Pastor Dewey baptized two at Briceyn.

MRS. A. H. ALLEN BEGINS her fourth year of successful service at Delavan.

SINCE THE RETURN from vacation, Aug. 9, Brother W. G. Clark, hospital missionary at Rochester has made $76 calls, of which 229 were upon Baptists. This shows the importance of the work there.

REV. E. W. ANNABLE AND FAMILY of Worthington, miraculously escaped death when the automobile in which they were driving turned completely over. Mrs. Annable's arm was broken and Brother Annable's right hand broken.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of the state recently organized a state-wide organization known as the Department of Young People of the Minnesota Baptist Convention. Richard Hoiland of Minneapolis was elected president; Dora Mitchell of Duluth, recording secretary; Miss Mildred de Laittre, stenographer at Baptist headquarters, corresponding secretary; Stanley Jacobson, of St. Paul, treasurer.

THE VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL in connection with the Bohemian mission at New Prague was very successful and resulted in securing the cooperation of many people in the town. The Sunday school, conducted in English by our Bohemian brethren, is the only Protestant Sunday school in the town of nearly 2,000 population.

THE STATE LIFE SERVICE LEAGUE now numbers 300.

A VERY SUCCESSFUL young people's rally was recently held at Westbrook.

REV. R. N. CRAWFORD, who had charge of religious work on the assembly grounds, Mound, during the summer, has now gone to Chicago to do post-graduate work.

REV. HERBERT MOULE has become pastor of the Oakdale Chapel, St. Paul, and Rev. Walter S. Wood, director of religious education of First Church, St. Paul.

Rocky Mountain States

UTAH

ONE OF THE MOST CONSPICUOUS events in Baptist history of Utah was the coming of the Rev. Russell Brougher to the pulpit of the Immanuel Church of Salt Lake City. The large audiences which greeted Mr. Brougher at his initial services were deeply moved as a great wave of irrepressible emotion swept over them. It was the power of the gospel presented in an attractive and gripping way. Already the word is going around—"If you want to hear the gospel go to hear Brougher." The effect of Mr. Brongher's ministry at Immanuel Church will be felt by all Baptist churches in Salt Lake City. The contagion of his enthusiasm and spirit will spread to those who are holding the lines where the fight is hardest. It will put new courage and hope in them. Verily a new day has dawned in Utah.

REV. H. LYON BAYNES at Bethel Church has been preaching to large audiences on the theme "Why I Am Not a Mormon!" Taking up each Sunday evening, some phase of Mormon teaching, he has pointed out its conflict with the teachings of the Bible. The Mormon elders who have attended the meetings, have tried to reply, but Mr. Baynes has carefully avoided controversy, thus giving no occasion for strife.

DEACON FRED C. BAWDIN, at the Taylor Ave. Church, has been conducting a promising Sunday school. This work has a future and is commended to the interest and prayers of our people.

RIO GRANDE AND BURLINGTON churches are under the care of Rev. Henry Jacobs. These are mission churches located in territory the population of which is largely Mormon.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF OGDEN under the leadership of Dr. L. A. Garrison continues its aggressive work in the Junction City. This church has a strong men's brotherhood which contributes in a large measure to the success of this most important field. It is hoped that work on the new house of worship will soon begin, which when completed will be a valuable contribution to Baptist work in Utah.

REV. HENRY SECOR continues to serve faithfully the little flock at Magna. Amid trials and discouragements Bro. Secor has "fainted not" "holding fast to that which he hath."

REV. HENDRICKS, at Tremonton, has resigned and is expected to leave soon for other fields of labor.

REV. WILSON, THE NEW COLPORTER under the Home Mission Society has been working at Eureka endeavoring to reorganize our scattered forces there.

THE MURRAY, SOLDIER SUMMIT, and Moab fields are without regular workers. State Secy. M. L. Rickman has been supplying these places as often as possible thus keeping up the interest and courage of the people. The greatness of Mr. Rickman's task may be imagined when the fact is known that Soldier Summit is seventy-five miles from Murray, while Moab is 175 miles from Soldier Summit.

year of over $600. The total amount contributed was $4,262.65 or $96.87 per member. In financial ability the pastor and treasurer state this group is not above the average of the church membership.

The Parsells Avenue Church, Rochester, has a strong storehouse tithers' league. For the year ending April 30, 1922, 170 tithers paid $9,921.66 while 375 other contributors paid $9,500. The pastor, Rev. F. G. Reynolds writes, "The storehouse tithers' organization was providentially formed a year ago, thus enabling us to weather in fine shape a time of unemployment and reduction in wages which would otherwise have been serious for our church."

Nearly six years ago Second Church, Auburn, Rev. E. L. James, pastor, organized a tithing band with about fifty members. There has been a steady growth of the stewardship movement with a corresponding increase in both pastor's salary and benevolences. The pastor's salary has been increased every year until it is now twice what it was at that time, while benevolences have increased from $784 to about $4,500.

One year ago they reorganized and now have 143 on the storehouse plan. In addition to keeping up all obligations in other lines they are now setting aside quite a sum each month for a building fund.

Tithing stewards do not stop with the tithe. The Johnson City Church and the Calvary Church of Binghamton, have had campaigns the past year to pay off debts on the property. They both have a band of tithers who are bringing the whole tithe into the church and were already designating a certain percentage of it to the building fund. It was agreed that they should not be asked for anything more, but pastor L. E. Ford of Johnson City says, "It is wonderful how our tithers went over the top. Deacon — $400 over his tithe. Brother A. and Brother B. each $300 over, and nearly all went way over the tithe. The tithers have saved the day for this church as sure as anything can be." Rev. H. M. Pease of the Calvary Church writes, "We have just secured pledges for $4,500 to be paid in 1922 toward the $9,000 debt on the church building. Four or five tithers pledged $200 each in addition to their tithe. Others pledged $100, $50 and $25. Seems to feel good to give when one gets used to it."

The organized tithing league brings in a steady income without any drives or campaigns. The Parsells Avenue Church of Rochester and the Conklin Avenue Church of Binghamton both raised building funds a few years ago on the five-year payment plan. At the end of the five years both were still left with a debt and no income to apply on it except from the tithers. Rev. F. G. Reynolds of the Rochester Church writes, "As our building fund pledges expired in December, 1920, we would have had no income for this purpose last year if the tithers had not paid a designated percentage, amounting to $2,308.85.

Rev. F. N. Darling of the Conklin Avenue Church writes, "We have a small mortgage, incurred a few years ago. The pledges are all past due, and yet there is a small amount unpaid, but the storehouse tithers' league is paying into that fund 25 per cent of its income every week and the mortgage is steadily diminishing."

A bequest made in the will of Mrs. Elbridge Torrey of Boston brings to the Moody Bible Institute $25,000 and to the Hampton Normal Agricultural Institute $10,000. The American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions also receives a like amount.

A special campaign for $2,000,000 over and above the amounts provided in the Centenary was approved by the Michigan Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The greater part of the amount will be used for endowment of Albion College and for the student work at the University of Michigan and other state schools. The campaign begins at once under the direction of Dr. J. W. Hancher.

Unused Powers, by Russell H. Conwell.
New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

Former book buyers who have lost the habit during the period of high prices, should not fail to note the return to a lower range, of prices on the books published this season. Here, for instance, are to be had at a "bit" apiece, ten of the choicest sermons recently preached by Dr. Conwell, in large type and delightfully readable. Besides the title sermon are "Man and His Burning Bush," "Disguised Victories," and "Power to Rise Again." The "human interest" bulks large in these sermons; their author loves folks and that's why.

How To Make the Church Go, by Rev. William H. Leach. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50.

A handy manual for the modern minister. Its suggested plans have all been tried out in the pastorate and are well suited to any parish. It deals with all phases of the business side of the minister's life. Since practically all of the work of the church is done by volunteer workers it gives considerable space to a study of the forces which move men. It emphasizes the value of publicity through the local press and discusses the preparation of copy.

The Safest Mind Cure, and Other Sermons, by W. E. Orchard. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.35.

"The mind of God is peace, and this is his gift to the mind of man." Such is the theme of the sermon which gives title to a collection of twelve discourses on a variety of subjects: The Social Interpretation of the Cross; The Desire to Realize Christ; Mystical Vision and Social Passion; The Jealousy of God. This book will stir dormant passions and beget new purposes in the preacher or mature teacher who will take time to think with this vigorous thinker on Christian themes.

The Rising Temper of the East, by Frazier Hunt. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co. $2.50.

This book sounds the human note in the world-wide cry for land and liberty. It tells the story of common people and their leaders pushing toward light that becomes brighter each year. The "Unchanging East" has become the scene of the most rapid changes, political, social and religious. The writer mingled with the peoples of whom he writes, and talked with their leaders, and tells his story in a forceful way.

The Finality of Christ and Other Sermons, by W. E. Orchard. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.35.

Dr. Orchard's "The Outlook for Religion" was placed on the index in this country during the war, because of its passionate protest against war as a means of promoting the kingdom of God. The versatile preacher at the King's Weigh House Church, London, is a curious combination of the mystic, the sacramentarian, the radical and the champion of orthodoxy. He insists on the finality of Christ: "If Christ be not absolute, he cannot help us now," he wrote while Germany was driving her wedge into northern France. "Christ may exhaust this world," he writes in this new volume; "this world will never exhaust Christ." There are twelve sermons in this series. Some of them will startle Baptist readers by their unaccountable insistence upon sacramental notions of the grace of God: as when in a sermon on John 6:37 he says, "the high sacramental teaching of this chapter is now acknowledged by most scholars, they even admitting that it justifies the doctrine of transubstantiation." With all that, Dr. Orchard is worthy the attention of preachers who want to grow.

The Breaking Point, by Mary Roberts Rinehart. New York: Doran Co. $2 net.

People who want a well-written, closely-woven tale built on the style of the old-fashioned novel will be delighted with "The Breaking Point." Although the setting is in a "smiling, tree-shaded suburb which 'talked,'" nevertheless the story is not a small-town story. Nor is the theme of by-gone days. Mrs. Rinehart treats a problem touching upon the new knowledge of psycho-analysis and Dr. Dick Livingstone is the subject. A background of mystery and tragedy is limned for the hero as the story proceeds. There is nothing prosy about the book or it would not be one of Mrs. Rinehart's. The hectic heroine who is so common in the fiction of today is absent. The modest, simple girl who takes her place in refreshing by contrast.

Pulling Together, by John T. Broderick. Schenectady, N. Y.: Robson & Adea.

"A bargain implies an advantage gained by someone at the expense of someone else, whereas . . . mutual advantage . . . must be the bedrock of industrial efficiency." That is the keynote of this report of a supposed conversation with the president of an employing corporation on a railroad train. The supposed magnate develops his idea of factory representation and shows how he has worked it out in his chain of factories employing 30,000 men and women. Of course the plan succeeded, as the thesis required. The discussion is elementary and the argument plausible, but the solution it narrates of some of the problems in the case is too easy. On the whole it gives the impression that shop representation is a promising experiment deserving a fair trial.

"It Is to Laugh"

The Bible has its limitations, as even its best friends may agree. Dr. John A. Hutton says, for example: "The Bible is no authority on fainting. But," he adds without delay, "it is a great authority on 'not fainting.'"

A countryman with a local reputation as a vocalist attended a dinner, and was asked to sing. Although he had no music with him, and was as hoarse as a frog he consented to try, but broke down.

"Never thee mind, lad," said an elderly guest, trying to cheer him up; "never mind the breakdown, for thee's done thy best but th' fellow as asked thee t' sing ought to be shot."

Out in Wyoming a train ran over the cow of a Swede farmer named Ole Olsen. The claim adjuster went out to the home of Ole to adjust the claim likely to be made by Ole for the loss of his cow. "Well, Mr. Olsen," said the claim adjuster, "I came out to see you about your cow being killed on our track. What are you expecting to do about it?" "Vell," said Ole, stolidly, "I ban a poor man, an I cannot do much because I ban so poor but I will try to pay you five dollars."—Judge.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE CHURCH AND MUSICAL PROGRESS

Since the great war the world of music has been swept by a series of waves of propaganda, some of it directed by personal motives, much no doubt sincere in purpose and method. To read the musical journals is to face the "America-first" announcement of this "foundation", the "Sing-in-English" essay of that, the various manifestations of our new nationalistic art-consciousness. One thing after another is solemnly put forth of the means of our musical salvation—the establishment of funds to send composers abroad for study and solace; other funds to keep them free from the contamination of foreign influences—one says Paris or Rome; the other pleads for Peterborough, N. H. And we have fervent societies organized to produce opera in English, others to coax native writers to produce stage-works in English set to music that is of our race and time. And I could go on indefinitely with lists of efforts along these and kindred lines—the fine results gained by Mrs. Coolidge in her successful chamber-music festivals at Pittsfield, Mass., the interesting work of the Society of American Musicians, the achievements of the society for the publication of New American works, and (of paramount importance) the varied activities of the women's clubs along musical lines.

A Sign of Health and Progress

This activity in the field of music is all a sign of health and progress. We must have interest to spur the composer to produce, appreciation to value what is heard and intelligent valuation as the basis of reward, both artistic and financial, for the creator. A nation becomes increasingly musical as we make good music better known, more widely disseminated. In the realm of finance we have the law that bad money always drives out good money when there is a contest in circulation. The reverse is true in the musical world. Unvaryingly, when good music becomes familiar, the interest in poor, cheap, mediocre concoctions lessens. Distaste for "classical music" is always a sign that the ear and brain have been fed upon second-rate material. The best antidote is to hear enough of the best.

And it is here that we put our finger on the basic trouble of our musical situation. We have been too much interested in material things in the building of our business empire, in the achieving of physical success to pay much attention to the finer things of the spirit. Music has been looked upon as a minor entertainment for spare moments, an effeminate pastime for the weaker sex. We have looked with amused tolerance upon the foreigner in our midst who sacrifices from his earnings to attend the gallery and drink in "Troatore" or "Tosca", who forms a large part of the attendants at the symphony concerts, who is the mainstay of the chamber-music series, who goes night after night to his little group-chorus, there to sing with his fellows the music which to them embodies aspiration and sentiment. But in the main we have left the development of our children's musical taste to chance; and we have paid dearly for this carelessness. Look over the batch of cheap songs which adorns the piano in most American homes; give consideration to the suggestive titles, and the cheap texts; listen to the crude clashing of badly-written jazz-spasms. And then take a few moments to consider whether this is the sort of stuff that will create in you and yours an aspiration for the finer things of this life, an active interest in the better things. Do you expect to create a taste for Thackeray and Spenser with Harold Bell Wright, Elinor Glyn and Ella Wheeler Wilcox? Rest assured you will never gain a comprehension and appreciation of Schubert and Elgar—or MacDowell and Griffes, for that matter—from Irving Berlin and his ilk. Thank heaven, the public schools are making the children acquainted with the better things in music, the memory contests are aiding in the good work, all the varied and various agencies of propaganda are helping things along, and improvement is sure to come.

Which brings me to the point of this article: The church in its relationship to musical progress. It is not very profitable for me here in a great city, to prate of opera, symphony orchestra, Apollo Club, and so on. These great agencies of musical culture can be enjoyed by the majority only as special treats. They have their valuable place—and they get plenty of appreciation and praise. The average small town—and that is the sphere of the most of us—has to depend upon three factors for its musical food: The local teachers of music, the imported concert-artists, and the local churches. In some few small communities the local "movie" music could be legitimately added, but in all too few cases is this factor an asset of any positive value. With the stimulus of the concert series we have nothing to do here; simply to recognize its value. The activities of the local teachers, in the communistic "music-club", and in their individual efforts through pupils and self-service, these activities are the basic foundation of our musical civilization. And this group of teachers and pupils largely determines the status of the church music in the individual community. The condition of much of the music of the church services is woefully ungratifying. Many of our churches put up with a grade of music which would never be tolerated elsewhere. Better a little good music than much affliction of the ear! Certainly God deserves better devotion from us than cracked singing and stumbling playing. And too often that is the honest description of the musical setting for the Sabbath devotions. Too much of the church music is borne as a necessary affliction by the long-suffering congregation; and the tragedy is in the fact that this condition should not be difficult to remedy!

A Course in Hymn Playing

If one or two of the piano teachers in such a town would come to a city such as Chicago, St. Louis, New York, San Francisco, any community where they could find good organists and choir directors—and instead of spending the entire summer attending some high-priced "master-class" in piano, would take a course in hymn-playing, organ instruction and choir-directing, a revolution in the musical status of the local churches would eventuate the next season. chant that "playing the organ hurts piano technic" can be decently buried never to rise again. The organs today—and as built for the past decade—are easier as to action than a piano; as a matter of fact, I would heartily recommend a course in organ-playing to any ambitious aspirant for pianistic honors. He will learn more of the art of clean touch, of color values, of vital phrasing and clarity of utterance than he ever will at the piano alone. I am convinced that such a course as is tentatively outlined above would do more for the furtherance of musical appreciation, and the uplifting of the dignity and beauty of divine worship than almost anything else which could be suggested. Our progress in music depends upon the grade of music we are to hear day after day and week after week. In music familiarity does not breed contempt for good music; it is only the cheap which palls and cloyes after a few hearings. We have untold wealth in anthems, solos and organ pieces designed for the worship of God and the uplifting of man. The rich mine is there to be drilled in; the treasures await the coming of the consecrated souls who have the true vision of beauty and service. Give us the trained singers and players and the hearty support and encouragement of the hearers, and a new day will dawn for music in this country. It is up to us.

G. Evangelism

We hereby call upon all the followers of Jesus Christ to go forth with renewed zeal and consecrated hearts, with persistent efforts, and through united and definite programs to evangelize every part of China.

We hereby declare that in our evangelistic efforts we stand solidly on the evangelical faith of the Christian church, the faith which has given us our genuine religious experience and which has led us into intimate relationship with God our Father through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The second chapter of the report on "The Message of the Church" was addressed to non-Christians. It is possible here to mention merely the headings of paragraphs in the second chapter, which in themselves are sufficient to reveal the nature of the appeal.

Preamble:

- "The Latent Possibilities of China."
- "The Present Danger of China."
- "How Can China Be Saved from Her Present Peril?"

YOU ARE INVITED

A remarkable series of conferences has been scheduled throughout the field of the Northern Baptist Convention for late September and early October.

Those in attendance will include officers and members of state conventions and state promotion boards, members of boards of the national organizations, associational promotional committees and representatives of the laymen, women, young people and pastors of each association. It depends entirely upon yourself whether or not you also will be present to enjoy the fellowship and inspiration of one of these conferences.

The program will be both instructive and inspiring. It will include a series on present conditions in Europe, Asia and Africa by men who have recently returned from tours of observation and study in those lands, and will also present opportunity for frank discussion of present denominational policies, plans, methods and unachieved tasks.

Stewardship is a feature of church activities in October and will receive special attention.

The schedule of places and dates is as follows:

New England States

Maine	Waterville, September 18-19.
New Hampshire	Exeter, October 3-4.
Massachusetts	Worcester, September 20-21.
Rhode Island	Providence, September 19-20.
Connecticut	New Britain, October 16-18.

Atlantic States

Eastern Pennsylvania	Philadelphia, September 18.
Western Pennsylvania	Pittsburgh, September 19-20.
West Virginia	Beckley, October 12.
Ohio	Columbus, September 21-22.

Middle Western States

South Dakota	Dell Rapids, October 7.
North Dakota	Fargo, September 19-20.
Minnesota	Minneapolis, September 19-20.
Kansas	Hayes, October 11-12.
Nebraska	Lincoln, October 12.
Colorado	Colorado Springs, October 17.
Indiana	Indianapolis, September 26-27.
Illinois	Chicago, September 27-28.
Wisconsin	Milwaukee, September 25-26.

Pacific States

Arizona	Phoenix, September 18-19.
Southern California	Los Angeles, September 19-20.
Northern California	San Francisco, September 20-21.
Oregon	Portland, September 25-26.
West Washington	Seattle, September 26-27.
East Washington	Spokane, September 27-28.
Montana	Butte, September 28-29.
Idaho	Pocatello, October 2-3.
Utah	Salt Lake City, October 3-4.

Plan immediately to attend the conference nearest your home. You are needed for what you can contribute to the discussion, and your church needs your attendance for the inspiration you may be able to bring back.

The Year's Objectives: Every member of every church informed, praying, giving, winning souls, and embodying Christ's teaching in community life. Ten million dollars cash paid in by April 30, 1923. Full payment of all pledges made before April 20, 1922. Two million dollars in new pledges on the Continuation Campaign.

D. Suggested Helps to Those Interested in the Christian Way

1. "Search the Scriptures."
2. "Communion with the Unseen."
3. "Draw Close to the Church."

Conclusion

"Listen, brethren. God wants his will to be done on earth as it is in heaven, but he expects us to work with him for the salvation of our fellow-men. But to do this we must ourselves first be freed from sin, be brought into right relationship with God, and be intimate friends and co-workers with Jesus Christ. Then, and then only, can we attain to the loftiest personality, exhibit the spirit which laughs at danger, and so finish the work of bringing salvation to men. Hark, brethren, to the loving voice of God calling for determination to follow the way of Truth and of Life. Come and investigate the religious experience of his people and make a practical experiment. Work together with God and his believers for the speedy realization of the heavenly kingdom here in China and in the whole world."

(To be continued)

The Protestant churches of greater Boston are planning to put on an institute of Sunday-school methods, Oct. 3-8. The sessions will open at 3:30 p. m. and close about 9 p. m. The first five days will be taken up with addresses on various phases of Sunday-school work, group conferences and departmental conferences. The last day, Sunday, Oct. 8, will be devoted to denominational rallies. The mass meetings will be held in the Church of the New Jerusalem, which will be the headquarters. It is planned to make this institute which is being conducted under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association, the largest yet attempted in the state.

The Widow's Gift

HAVING taken a seat opposite the treasury, He observed how the people were dropping money into the treasury, and that many of the wealthy threw in large sums. But there came one poor widow and dropped in two farthings, equal in value to a halfpenny. So He called His disciples to Him and said:

"In solemn truth I tell you that this widow, poor as she is, has thrown in more than all the other contributors to the treasury; for they have all contributed out of what they could well spare, but she out of her need has thrown in all she possessed—all she had to live on."

—Weymouth's Version of Mark 12:41.

Fresh from the Field

Among the preachers for the autumn quarter at the University of Chicago will be Rev. M. Ashby Jones of the Ponce de Leon church, Atlanta, Georgia.

Mrs. Mary Belding, an honored member of First Church, St. Paul, Minn., celebrated her one hundredth birthday anniversary August 31.

The church at Stafford, Conn. has made extensive repairs upon its building during the summer. Dr. A. B. Coats of Hartford spoke at the reopening services. Rev. F. W. Tholen is pastor.

A pastor is wanted for a large rural field in a richly irrigated section of Arizona. There is a big opportunity for the man who can make a success in rural work. Full particulars may be secured by addressing Director H. Q. Morton, Baptist headquarters, Phoenix.

Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, pastor of the First Church, Washington, D. C. returned to America Sept. 12. He has visited Turkey, Syria, Palestine and Egypt under a commission as special immigration agent of the labor department of the government.

The Lake Avenue Church of Rochester, in its rally-day program set its attendance goal at 1,400. Each class in the school was given its quota of this number. The plan enabled each class to know exactly what is expected of it in reaching the desired goal.

The Garfield Park Church, Chicago, has called to its pastorate Rev. E. A. Shulls of Madison, Ind. Mr. Shulls has accepted the pastorate and will begin his work at once. The church at Madison speaks in the highest terms of his ministry both in the pulpit and in the community at large.

Samuel B. Lingle, for many years a resident of Chicago, actively engaged in advancing its material growth and an ardent supporter of social and moral reforms, also a loyal member and staunch supporter of the First Church, was suddenly called to his reward on Sept. 9, at the age of 75. He was a man of few words but of deep convictions, and faithful to his convictions in the full performance of his Christian duties.

The First Church of Rock Hill, S. C., has extended a call to Rev. Walter R. Alexander of the Mantua church of Philadelphia. His decision is not announced. The Rock Hill church is considered a most important field because of the large number of Baptist girls at Winthrop College which has an enrollment of more than 1,200. The church has a membership of 600 and the Sunday school an enrollment of 1,000. The church recently completed a building at the cost of $150,000.

The telephone conversations which take place every day over the wires of the Bell system require in the aggregate an amount of time equivalent to 200 years. In the states east of the Mississippi River there are more telephones than there are in all the world outside of the United States. Over 4,500,000 telephone calls are made in New York City daily. The average number of telephone calls in all the cities and towns of Great Britain is only 2,550,000 daily.

Rev. A. E. Clem, after a pastorate of nearly four years, has resigned at Camden, Ind., to take effect Sept. 30.

The church at Greencastle, Ind., of which Rev. U. M. McGuire is pastor, will celebrate its hundredth anniversary Oct. 1.

The Temple church of Indianapolis, laid the corner-stone of its new community house, Sept. 10. The new building will cost approximately $23,000, when completed and equipped. Rev. Joseph Belcher is pastor.

At a recent conference held at the Hartford Theological Seminary, Hartford, Conn., Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of the Park Avenue Church, New York, was leader. The theme was "Laws of the Christian Life and Experience." The sessions were held morning, afternoon and evening.

The Baptist Minister's Conference of Chicago in its regular meeting September 18, passed suitable resolutions expressing its appreciation of Dr. M. P. Boynton. He was congratulated for demonstrating that

Service

*I SHALL not count my life as vain
If only in some quiet way
I find my chance to serve my Lord,
My debt of love for him to pay.
An unnamed man supplied the beast
Whereon the lovely Saviour passed
Along the way triumphantly,
Acclaimed the promised king at last.
An unnamed man supplied the room
Where once the Saviour broke the bread
And gave the wine—his flesh and blood—
His life—by which our lives are fed.
And unnamed crosses mark the spot
Where common soldiers chance to lie,
Who for the world's true brotherhood
A sacrifice, feared not to die,
O grant me, Lord, the grace I pray,
If I the quiet paths must lead,
To give my humble gift to thee,
And know I, too, have met thy need.*

a long pastorate is possible in a great city in spite of the restlessness and constant shifting of population. He was commended for the active part he had taken in civic affairs.

The Second annual Bible and Christian Life Conference was held at the First Church, Eau Claire, Wis., the first week in September. The pastor, E. R. MacKinney, says "The results have far exceeded our fondest anticipations." Among the speakers were J. E. Conant, Daniel McTavish of Sparta, Wis., F. A. Stephens, London, Can., Paul MacKinney, H. H. Savage and Supt. A. LeGrand.

The "Louisville Post" of Louisville, Ky., has as a feature a weekly sermon printed every Monday on its editorial page. A sermon by Dr. E. Y. Mullins appears in the issue of September 11. In an editorial we find "Dr. Mullins is just home from a trip to Europe. In this sermon he gives some of his impressions as they appear to a Christian minister, to a skilled educator and an American citizen." The subject of the sermon is the "Moral Side of America's World Position."

Rev. S. A. Sherman, for the past five years pastor of the First Church of Howell, Mich., has accepted the call of the First Church of New Lexington, Ohio, to begin his pastorate Oct. 1. Mr. Sherman has been out of his native state for twelve years and appreciates old scenes and friends. Before going to Howell he was pastor in Detroit.

Dr. Arthur S. Phelps is delivering courses of lectures at the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, California, on "Public Speaking" and "The Christian Message of the World's Popular Statuary." These are given in the Seminary chapel, and the sculpture course is open to the public.

A conference of the allied Christian societies engaged in community work will be held in the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, Washington, D. C., October 17-18. The theme is "United Service for Community, State, Nation, World."

A city-wide movement in Elgin, Ill., in which all the churches of the city cooperated was given wide publicity through full page advertisements in the Saturday daily newspapers. Its slogan was, "We automobilize for church-to-morrow." You will find an interesting piece of publicity in our Religious Education Department.

Rev. and Mrs. A. T. Robinson, whose work as titling evangelists throughout the country is well known, gave a series of travelogue lectures at First church, Oakland, Calif., September 24-29. Dr. John Snape, the pastor, has returned from his vacation and the fall work of the church is well under way.

Rev. and Mrs. David Downie of Nellore, South India, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on November 21. They are among the oldest veterans in the service of the Foreign Mission Society, having sailed for India for the first time in 1873. This means that next year they will be able to celebrate a half century of foreign missionary service.

Prof. and Mrs. G. H. Waters of Swatow, South China, have arrived in the United States on furlough and will live in Granville, Ohio, during the fall and winter. Professor Waters is on the faculty of the Ashtore Theological Seminary and has had an unusual opportunity in extending the Christian message in South China. He called at the office of the Foreign Mission Society last week and was deeply distressed to learn of the immense damage which had been done by the typhoon at Swatow, reports of which have recently been received from the missionaries in China.

Before the present "quota law" went into effect, over 60 per cent of those passing through Ellis Island were Catholics; but the present law favors immigration from the northern Protestant countries of Europe. From July 1, 1921, when the law went into effect, until March 31, 1922, 21,000 English people came in, 10,000 Scotch and 11,000 Scandinavians, making a total of 42,000. The astonishing thing about it all is, according to Senator Colt of the Senate Immigration Committee, that the net increase in population for the United States of immigration over emigration from northern Europe during the same period was 36,000, while for southern Europe it was only 6,000. This shows that for the present, people from Protestant countries of Europe come and stay. Therefore the greater need for following them up.

Let Us Be Big These Days

Rev. J. A. Maxwell, pastor of the First Church, Chester, Pa., and a well-known leader among the Fundamentalists writes under date of September 3, "Allow me to take this occasion to thank you for the fairer spirit you are showing towards the Fundamentalists, who are a part of your constituency and hence find representation in THE BAPTIST. Let us all be big in these days of differences and accord to each other honesty in convictions. I appreciate your work." THE BAPTIST is human and makes mistakes but it is its purpose to deal fairly with all groups while refusing to become the mouth-piece of any group in the denomination. We believe that our common devotion to Christ and his work is more important than all the definitions in which we differ.

Killam's Kollum

An Appreciated Appreciation

Dr. David P. Ward of the Bible and Field Department of the Publication Society, Pasadena, Cal., writes under date of September 12, "My first recollection of a newspaper was the Christian Times. I have been a lifelong reader and subscriber to The Standard, now THE BAPTIST. The last three or four numbers of the paper have been to my mind the best ever issued. I give to you my cordial words of greeting and state that you are often remembered in prayer in our home." We wonder how many of our readers can say what Dr. Ward says in his last sentence.

Borrowed and Converted

The Michigan Christian Advocate is an enterprising newspaper. It has furnished us with some live material which we were glad to use just as it appeared in that journal. The paper evidently wanted to reciprocate. It quoted in full a recent editorial from THE BAPTIST but to our dismay it was under the caption "Borrowed and Converted."

It Is Not So Bad

"It must be a nerve-racking job to be editor of the denominational newspaper" writes one of our solicitous friends. Well, we do have the annoyance of having some of our wisest sayings questioned. We do find here and there a man who thinks that an editor ought to think just as he thinks if he is to represent truly the Baptists of America or any part of them. We do have some few people who write to us and ask that their names be put on the subscription list and a bill rendered, who overlook the bill and finally reply that they "never subscribed" and therefore cannot be expected to pay. (How we pity them, for their minds are going wrong.) But then, it is not so bad. As a pastor we had to deal with the same kind of folks and they were right there on the spot and said their say. Some of them are good speakers but find it difficult to express themselves with pen and ink. Yes, we have something to be thankful for. By the way, if you "never subscribed" for THE BAPTIST and do not want it and do not intend to pay for it, pretty please, just drop us a postcard to that effect.

Query

If the members of the B. Y. P. U. of Texas can set a goal of 5,000 new subscribers to their state paper, the Baptist Standard, and secure every one of them, how many new subscribers should the members of the B. Y. P. U. of the entire Northern Baptist Convention secure for THE BAPTIST? You are a long way below this record. Get busy, please!

The National Christian Conference of China

Part III. Its Significance.

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

IT WOULD be easy to make too much of the National Christian Conference of China and to infer that the victory is already won. It would be a mistake to draw any such inference. On the other hand, it would be possible to make too little of the meaning of the great gathering and thereby fail to discern the requirements of the hour. Any such failure or lack of discernment at this strategic moment would be tragic to the last degree. We must endeavor to appraise the situation correctly, rejoicing at the signs of real progress, but avoiding the peril of unwarranted optimism and satisfaction.

Large Growth

First of all, the conference marked large growth on the part of the Christian forces of China. If Robert Morrison, Peter Parker, Hudson Taylor, Ashmore, Graves and others looked upon the scene their souls must have been satisfied at seeing 565 Chinese leaders sitting in conference, representing nearly 400,000 church members, and in control of their own great gathering.

In the second place, the Christian forces of China appeared to recognize their spiritual unity in Christ Jesus. "We believe that there is an essential unity among all the Chinese Christians," was their bold statement. And in that connection they were particularly insistent that the divisions in western lands, whose historical significance they affirm they do not share, should not be thrust upon them with a resultant disturbance to their unity of spirit.

Again, the consciousness of a real unity of spirit and purpose had led to a widespread desire for cooperation, without compromise of conviction, in many practical measures, and in their task as a whole, which is expressed in the slogan, "China for Christ." The entire conference breathed the spirit of cooperation, that found expression in the creation of a permanent council of one hundred members, composed chiefly of Chinese, but representing the missionary forces as well. This permanent council will endeavor to study the entire task of the Christian forces in China and to advise as to how all bodies may serve most effectively in the light of conditions that prevail. So far as the writer is aware, the formation of such a council is favored not only by the Chinese in general but by nearly all the missions. The general purpose of the council is stated as follows:

"It is understood that matters of doctrine and ecclesiastical policy lie outside the province of the National Christian Council. In regard to other matters the functions of the council shall be advisory, but it is intended that the council should act on behalf of the cooperating churches and missions in matters which concern their common interest when it has been ascertained that the action taken will be in accordance with the wishes of the cooperating bodies."

The duties of the council, whose members are chosen by the denominational and other groups in a thoroughly democratic manner, are very practical and will tend to heighten the usefulness of Christian bodies in China who wish to cooperate in various ways.

One of the Chinese speakers referred to the conference as the birthplace of the Chinese church. A missionary said, "The Chinese church comes of age." Perhaps both were thinking of the awakening of the scattered churches and the Christian forces in general into self-consciousness and of the growing sense of solidarity. Certain it is that a new self-consciousness has been aroused.

From the viewpoint of the writer of this article, nothing was of greater significance than the recent development of Chinese leadership. Ten years ago there were a few men, and an occasional woman among the Chinese Christians who were regarded as able, independent leaders. Today there are many such men, and women too. Not a few of them have secured the best education obtainable in

LEAVE God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him whate'er betide;
Thou'lt find him in the evil days
Thy all-sufficient strength and guide:
Who trusts in God's unchanging love
Builds on the rock that naught can move!

China and then have studied in American or European universities. Many have proved their ability, and their devotion has sometimes been tested by great tribulation. Their addresses in the conference indicated both wisdom and power. Speeches were made and exhaustive reports were written by Chinese leaders, which were worthy of any religious gathering in the world. Under such conditions it is inevitable that there should be a sensitiveness at all attempts by organizations in foreign lands to control the program of the Christian movement in China. The quotations in a preceding chapter give evidence on that point. And here emerges the question of changes in the administration of the work. Happy the boards and the missionaries who voluntarily have placed large responsibility on Chinese shoulders for the actual administration of the work in their own land. All this leads up to the Chinese cry for an indigenous Christianity. They have seen Buddhism and Mohammedanism become indigenous in China, while Christianity remains a "foreign religion" in the eyes of the people. This hindrance must be removed. So said the National Christian Conference.

That many leaders are qualified to make a program for their own work and to interpret the Scriptures for themselves can hardly be doubted by any one who reads the addresses delivered at the conference and the reports of the several commissions. The printed proceedings of the conference should be read by every one who is interested in what is happening in China. It will be evident that Chinese Christian leaders have been on a mount of vision and that the program they have written down was what they saw on the mount. That program is both social and evangelistic, and national and international in its outlook.

Missionaries Still Needed

But let us not make too much of the significance of the National Christian Conference of China. Such a mistake, which is easily possible, would prove calamitous. It is a great moment in the Christian movement in old Cathay, but we are very far from the goal. It would be an almost fatal error to assume that the Chinese Christian army is now so strong and so well officered that it can from this moment bear the entire responsibility in the campaign. There are grave problems still involved, and there are elements of weakness which must not be overlooked. It must be remembered, too, that there is yet only one member of an evangelical church for every one thousand of the population. There are many sections of China already occupied by missionaries where the Chinese leadership is deplorably weak, and where that which has been written here will seem like a dream. And there are vast reaches where the Gospel has never been preached. In the National Conference one saw the flower of all the Christian forces in China. Still the moment is comparable to that in an offensive, when a post of the greatest strategic value has been taken, and when efforts must be redoubled in order to take advantage of what has been gained. We need to have fellowship with the Christian forces of China as never before. Rejoicing that we have lived to see Christianity achieving such a triumph, our sense of the urgency of the hour should prompt us to a much larger measure of cooperation with the Chinese Christian forces of China. Now that there is vision and program and able leadership on the part of the Chinese, it is safe for us to make larger investment. Moreover, missionaries of noblest type are still needed there for cooperation with the Chinese. However, the missionaries should be men and women with well-stored minds, professional excellence, a richness of Christian experience and a passion for winning disciples to Christ. The Chinese leaders say they shall be like Elisha following the missionary Elijah from place to place, praying that when he is taken a double portion of his spirit may fall on them. There is great need still for great missionaries to China, but only missionaries of the right type can help at this hour. Men who desire to dominate rather than serve are likely to irritate the Chinese. In some sections it is already true that the missionary must be prepared to take second place and to serve with not for the Chinese churches and leaders. And what is happening in China is happening in other lands. We must change our methods to meet the changed conditions. These are facts of tremendous significance and we must reckon with them.

This is a crucial moment in the history of the Christian movement in China. Are

God's Schedule

BACK in the woods somewhere under a tree sits a man. He is dressed in old khaki clothes, he has a new growth of beard, his hair is long and shaggy. No, he is not a bum. He is a preacher. In his hand is a book, by his side on the ground are three more books. There is a pencil over his ear and a pad of paper on his lap. He is on his vacation. He has emptied his life, for a month, of telephone calls and doorbells and meetings and personal interviews. But he is filling it with God. God is speaking to him through those books, and through the fragrance and music of the forest. God has a gift for him. It is the gift of a new church year commencing with the opening of the schools and stretching on to the beginning of another vacation period. And he is getting ready to receive that gift.

A hundred other people, young and old, scattered all over the world, are at work with the pastor. Just now one of them is sitting in a little boat against which the ripples are lapping. He is taking a fish off the hook. Another is riding a burro to the top of a mountain, another is bracing himself against the gale that sweeps across a steamer's deck. Another is chatting with old friends at the family home a thousand miles away. Some of the young folks are working. One is waiting table at a resort, another is crossing the Atlantic on a tanker, another is roughing it on a ranch. What a picture it is of the membership of the church in August. They are all getting ready to receive the gift that God is about to give them—a new church year, brimful of possibilities and bristling with opportunities.

On the pastor's desk on Labor Day lies a little bunch of papers pinned together. There is the scent of the forest about them. With them lie a half dozen letters that have come in recent days from members of the church. They have been thinking of the best ways to receive this new gift of a year of opportunity and they have written the pastor their thoughts. He assembles all their suggestions with the notes he made under the tree and he thanks God that he is not alone on the reception committee for the new year.

Every month has been thought of in the light of all the other months. There is no printed list of sermons to be preached throughout the year, nothing as rigid as that. But the months have their sentiment and their special meaning which they offer for the service of the kingdom. This should be the background of all the plans, for this is of God.

September is all ready to make its entrance. It is the month that finds the members full of vigor and refreshment of spirit. It is the month for perfecting the plans for the other months. It is still summer time. The officers of the church spend a day together in some quiet place. The pastor has his notes and his file of letters there. They sit around the calendar. First they check off all the regular dates for meetings provided in the by-laws of the church—board meetings, quarterly business meetings and the like. Then they note the anniversaries and other dates that have a meaning for their church. They locate Thanksgiving and Christmas and Easter and Mother's Day and Children's Day. Shall they talk about the Sunday-school picnic next June? By all means, settle on a date now. And who are the boys and girls who will graduate this year from grammar school and who are those who will graduate from high school. Let us know these things now.

Rally Day is set and plans are discussed. It is primarily a day of getting started. It needs wide advertising. Posters will help and items in the paper and telephone calls—but personal invitations alone do the task right. So the Sunday before Rally Day is made a day of personal calls upon the people. There are new people. There are people whose interest has flagged. There are people who cannot come unless they are assured that someone will bring them in a car. This is September, the month of school bells and asters and equinoctial storms and scores of personal calls, and rallying to the task.

October is the month for organizing. It is the month of consecration to Christ. It is the month for the enlistment of workers. The return of cool weather brings to its highest the vigor gained in the summer's rest. Every task in the church should be manned and new tasks set and assigned. This is the month for setting the stage for the rest of the year. Budget deficiencies should be provided for and every obstacle to the successful reaching the year's goal removed.

November, December, January, February, March with Easter as a climax is the productive period of the church year. Here we should expect to see the flowers appear in the garden of the Lord. These are the months in which church people should give themselves without stint to their Christian stewardship of talent, time and money. There should be a rising emphasis that stresses at first the training of soul-winners, then the winning of souls and finally the commitment of lives to Christian service. November lends itself naturally to training. The Christmas season is as fruitful in meaning for conversion as Easter. And the spring is the time for the commitment of life. Every church should expect that each year shall yield at least one young life given to Christ in its entirety. This expectation should be voiced in the pulpit, freely discussed in the homes, held always before the Bible school and frankly faced in the young people's society.

Many churches plan well from Rally Day until Easter, and there the plans terminate. Easter falls early this year—on April 1. There are after that at least four great months before the heart of the vacation season. They may be made the most fruitful months of all. The close of the denominational year falls on April 30. About this fact may be profitably built the emphasis of the world task of the church. This very emphasis may in turn give new vigor to the unending evangelistic work—especially for boys and girls which so profitably culminates with Children's Day.

Most of our churches do not make enough of the summertime. We are too ready to say that everybody is away. A careful count will reveal that most of us are here. The difficulty is that we do not adapt our activities to the summer season. Many churches could profitably, in this day of the automobile, motor to some quiet outdoor spot for an occasional service. Outdoor evangelism is just in its infancy. Many more can follow it. There should be just as many baptisms in July as in January.

And so the year presents itself, each month freighted with significance, each season offering its special gift—all flowing on in a harmony of promise for the church that meditates and plans and works with forethought and vigor according to the schedule of God.

Elements of Hope

IN our efforts to awaken our people to the vastness of the task which faces us as a denomination, we are in constant danger of overlooking elements of encouragement in our present situation. We face a hard task, but not an impossible one. We face a critical situation but not a hopeless one. At the meeting of the Administrative Committee in New York, September 13, certain facts were set forth which are full of hope.

A digest of letters and reports from all sections of the convention brought vividly before our minds the invaluable asset we have in our Baptist folks. One of the glories of our denomination is its wide diversity. There are numbered with us some of the very rich and some of the very poor; some of the wisest and some of the most simple, but the great body of our membership is what Edgar Guest would call "just folks." We belong to a wonderful brotherhood. We love freedom and cherish our independence. We have our human foibles, but in the vast majority of our people there is a Christian heart and the power of a Christian purpose.

We have great encouragement in the fruits of our work during the past year. Thousands have been and will be stirred by the reports of our representatives who have recently returned from Europe, Asia and Africa. No year has ever been more fruitful in evangelistic results than that just closed. You will find a summary of evangelistic results on our foreign field. These fruits are God's endorsement upon our efforts.

Then, too, we have cause for encouragement in our finance. During May, June, July and August an amount equal to 88 per cent of the receipts for the same months one year ago has been received and eliminating a special item the sum is still above 80 per cent of those receipts. The general financial situation is improving. Our people are almost all employed and we have every reason to expect an increased income as our people set themselves to the task of paying the vows that they have vowed unto the Lord and his work.

Why a Month of Stewardship?

WHY is a whole month devoted to stewardship and why is that month October, the first month in which we really get down to work and in many respects the best of the year?

Of course, everybody understands that stewardship month is only the suggestion of the Northern Baptist Convention. No one is required to observe it. It is an entirely voluntary movement within the denomination. A pastor or a church may take the whole suggestion or a part of it, or none of it. And yet we hope thousands of churches will fall in with the general plan. There is a great inspiration and value in all moving together.

A whole month is suggested because stewardship is a many-sided subject. One of the great mistakes, which we ought to get out of our heads, is that stewardship has to do only with money. It is a fundamental principle of the Christian life and applies to our time, our energy, our talents, the blessings of salvation, our prayer, our children, our money, and everything we receive from God. It needs a month to set it forth largely and effectively. We should begin with the basic propositions on which it rests, and go on to its many-sided applications. If stewardship is only a new method for extracting money from the churches, it has no spiritual worth and will soon be thrown into the discard, but if it is one of the very elemental factors of the Christian life, it will come to its own, and bring forth the fruits of simplicity, devotion, self-sacrifice, emancipation and joy.

The first month of the working year is the right time for it, for stewardship involves reconsecration, the new and more complete surrender with which we must begin every new effort for Christ and his kingdom. The New Testament rings the changes on the value of real reconsecration of ourselves to God's service, and this month of stewardship is needed to explain the reasons for our self-devotion, to deepen our motives and feelings with reference to it and to broaden our ideas of what it involves. Lastly, a whole month is suggested because the object is a practical one, viz: to get as large a part of the church membership as possible to make this reconsecration of themselves and all they are and all they have; and to bring about an association of such awakened Christians for the purpose of mutual help in their new experience. To do this on any large scale needs time as well as careful teaching and loving persuasion. It is a great endeavor, blessed of God in hundreds of churches. Let us devote a month and two months, if need be, to it.

The Two New Testaments—Where Are They?

THE BAPTIST receives each week manuscripts offered for publication, far in excess of its capacity; and one of the duties of the editors is to select from these offerings such articles for immediate or for later publication as seem most timely and available. In this process of selection the authorship of the article under consideration is far from being the only factor. The theme and content of the manuscript, its relation to the current program of the paper and of the denomination, the amount of space already given to the general topic of which it treats—all these elements enter into the decision.

Naturally the contributor is unable to determine the question from the editor's angle; for he has not the editor's point of view: and it therefore follows that when his article is refused publication he draws inferences which tend to become proved facts in his mind.

We say it is natural for the contributor to draw inferences. We also say it is unnatural for another editor to support those subjective inferences and then to publish them as facts. It would seem that his editorial self-respect would restrain him from impugning the official integrity and the Christian character of his brother who found it advisable or necessary to decline the proffered article.

The Western Recorder publishes an article by Rev. J. E. Conant which the editors of THE BAPTIST considered unavailable in view of the present task and purposes of THE BAPTIST in connection with the New World Movement. Furthermore, much of the substance of the article had already appeared in other newspapers, and THE BAPTIST dislikes to use in its contributed articles overmuch material which has been used elsewhere.

We pass by the caustic words which the editor of the Western Recorder applies to us in connection with our inability to use Dr. Conant's article. We desire to appeal to the good faith of the editor, and of the writer, in connection with a statement repeatedly made in the article in question.

The editor states in his introductory note: "Two parties in the Convention (the Northern Baptist Convention) have two New Testaments." This statement is also made by Dr. Conant in his article—indeed is the text of his article.

We ask the editor, or the author, to produce these two New Testaments. It is difficult to believe that the author could have written the article, or the editor have published it, without having been able to verify their explicit statement that "there are two Bibles among us, and therefore two New Testaments." Surely they must have seen them, handled them, pondered them; for they quote from them, unfold their contents, define their doctrines. Where may these two New Testaments be found? Who publishes them? Who sells them or gives them away? In what language are they written? Where is the unequivocal certification of their respective sources as defined by the author of the article in question?

Has the editor seen these "two New Testaments"? Has the author seen these "two New Testaments"? Will the editor inform us in his columns where these "two New Testaments"—both of them—may be seen? Are they in print, in any language? Has the editor actually seen them—both of them—with his own eyes? Does he know on his editorial, ministerial, Christian honor, that these "two New Testaments" are in existence in fact? Or are they fanciful, hypothetical, argumentative, imaginary New Testaments—such stuff as dreams are made of, the creation of the pure reason of the author and of the editor? If they actually exist and if the author has actually seen them, and if the editor knows that there are "two New Testaments" and has seen them—tell us where to find them. If not, then frankly admit that the article is a tour de force built on a pure assumption for polemic aims, and saturated with fallacy. With the arraignment of certain scholars included in the article we are not now concerned: our one concern is to see those "two New Testaments" for whose actual existence both Dr. Conant and the editor of the Western Recorder vouch. Where are they?

Stop and Consider

IN The Continent for September 7, a former pastor who has engaged in business recounts his experiences. He plans to return to the pastorate and gives his reasons for this step. He says:

"I am prospering. I make by far more money than I ever made in the pastorate. My family can have more pleasures than it did before. There is a contagion about business life that is alluring. Things are expeditiously done, and results are apparent immediately. There is the constant meeting with different people on free and easy terms, varying work to be done, and a certain feeling of material security. That is one side—but here is the other:

"I cannot rid myself of the haunting feeling that I have not been faithful to my Lord and Saviour. In the midst of business conferences, while dictating letters, while planning campaigns, or rushing through the street to fill appointments—anywhere and everywhere the thoughts come rushing in, not to be downed."

He sees in his imagination his Sunday morning congregation, his Sunday school, the sick and the shut-ins, and he is not there to give them encouragement and spiritual strength. The business house sends its sales agents, its circulars, its letters, the theater amuses, but only the church sends the minister to give that help for which earth can offer no substitute. After his years in the business world he declares that "it requires more patience, more tact, more self-sacrifice, more forbearance to do the work of the church, but the harvest is infinitely greater." He has heard anew the call which came to him in his youth, the call "of a world that has met only failure in attempting to solve its problems without divine guidance, of races that are sick and weary of strife and reprisal, of hosts of boys and girls growing up to juvenile delinquency and crime because of a lack of a sense of moral responsibility and spiritual obligation."

Holding Out on God

By GEORGE E. BURLINGAME

ANANIAS the First (not to be confused with his honorable namesake of Damascus) has a deserved reputation for lying—a reputation considerably enhanced by the bad eminence into which he was elevated during the Roosevelt régime and the fiat creation of the Ananias Club.

Ananias was, however, more than a liar. He was an embezzler. His falsehood was conspicuous and notorious; yet it was but the superstructure elevated on a more obscure but an even graver sin which led the way to the other.

The Christian church at Jerusalem in those wonderful days of its infancy was trying to find itself, as all forms of infant life seek to do. The disciples of Jesus were face to face with a practical social problem for which even our boasted brilliant modern Christian civilization has found no adequate solution: namely, the problem of poverty.

The Fruit of the Spirit of Jesus

Loving one another, as all Christians are taught to do, and seeking not first their own things but the things of others, as Jesus had inspired them to do, they counted not the ownership of farms and houses and shops and warehouses a thing to be selfishly retained. They knew the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for their sakes he had become poor, that they through his poverty might become rich. They remembered still his assurance that a disciple is not above his teacher, nor a servant above his lord; and that it were enough for the disciple that he be as his teacher, and the servant as his lord.

The sequel was natural, indeed, inevitable. A spirit of tender sympathy and practical regard for their poorer brethren manifested itself as the fruit of the Spirit of Jesus in their renewed hearts. The peculiar manner in which that spirit asserted itself is to be accepted, not necessarily as a political or economic program for the community or for the race; but as a heroic adventure in Christian brotherhood which sought to solve in the name of Jesus the haunting and harassing problem of poverty. With the economic significance of the adventure we are not now chiefly concerned. With the spirit and principle involved in

TAKE me a captive, Lord,
And then I shall be free;
Force me to render up my sword,
And I shall conqueror be:
I sink in life's alarms
When by myself I stand;
Imprison me within Thine arms,
And strong shall be my hand.
—George Matheson.

the adventure we are mightily concerned, for herein is a dramatic portrayal of a primary element of Christian discipleship and fellowship.

The familiar story is given us in Luke's fine narrative of the early history of Christianity: "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul: and not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common . . . Neither was there among them any that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto each, according as anyone had need."

The sale of property for the common good was not compulsory, but voluntary; nor was the surrender of the entire amount received compulsory, but at the volition of the donor. Their action was no formal service in conformity with rigid rule of law, but the indulgence of their loving Christian souls in the splendid luxury of such entire consecration of themselves and their possessions to the cause of Christ that they veritably entered into the fellowship of his self-emptying when for their sakes he had become poor that they might be rich.

Upon the rich and splendid background of such a spirit of unreserved consecration is revealed the hideous poverty of soul and meanness of spirit which have secured to two members of that early Christian church the infamous distinction of being encysted with dishonor in the imperishable story of the beginnings of Christian life and service in the world.

"A certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession, and kept back a part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet." They were caught in the rising rushing tide of devotion and self-sacrifice. They desired for themselves the satisfactions, the distinctions, the eminence, which attached to this fine act of Christian love. They coveted the red badge of crusaders who "took the cross" and won recognition as whole-hearted followers of Christ. They would stand with that noble company who were stepping into line with their Lord in the glory of self-emptying in order to the relief and redemption of others.

Ananias' Transaction

Thus moved, Ananias, with his wife's full consent, placed his piece of land on the market, and with the completion of the sale took his place in the goodly fellowship of those who refused longer to say that the things they possessed were theirs to keep and use as they wished for selfish ends. As far as outward action and open profession went, the consecration of Ananias and Sapphira was complete. Their devotion to their Lord and his cause could not be impeached. They publicly brought (so it appeared) the proceeds of their sacrificial sale and laid it on the altar of God for Christian uses in solemn dedication to their Redeemer—

But, they kept back a part of the price, and brought a certain part. While they professed to give all, they withheld a portion. Their profession was absolute; their consecration was relative. They publicly pledged all; they privately gave a part and kept for themselves a part. In the blunt phrase of the West, they held out on God.

The chief and singular sin of these professed Christians was not their falsehood, shameful and inexcusable though that was. Their eminent sin was the sin of robbing God. They were common thieves—no, not common thieves; for no common thief will be mean enough to steal from a generous and loving master. They were embezzlers, perpetrating deliberate fraud against him whom ostensibly they loved with unreserved affection and served with utter singleness of heart.

Paul writes in his letter to Titus a stirring admonition to servants who have become Christians, warning them against the peculiar temptations which beset servants, and charging them that by Christian integrity they adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things: "Exhort servants to be in subjection to their own masters, and to be well-pleasing to them in all things . . . not purloining, but showing all good fidelity." (Tit. 2:10.) That is to say, a good servant will not steal from his master, but will use his confidential relations and peculiar opportunities as an occasion for manifesting his fidelity as a good steward of his master's grace.

He Embezzled

"Not purloining"—or as Weymouth renders it, not pilfering: and the word which Paul uses here is exactly the word which Luke uses in the story of Ananias and Sapphira. Moffatt faithfully translates the latter passage (Acts 5:2): "He embezzled some of the purchase money . . . he only brought a part of it." Ananias was a professed servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had named him as Master. He had publicly espoused him in the baptismal confession. He had solemnly remembered him in his death in the holy supper. He had sought and obtained a place in the fellowship of the church, and was numbered with men and women who bore the name of Christ: but with all this he was purloining from his Master; he was keeping back part of what he had ostensibly given to his Lord; he was holding out on God.

The contemptible thievery of this pretentious pair of pilferers is the more shameful by contrast with the splendid integrity and sincerity of their brothers and sisters, notably Barnabas, who is named as typical of the common spirit of entire consecration which inspired and characterized the church. "Barnabas, having a field, sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet . . . but Ananias . . . kept back part . . . and brought a certain part and laid it at the apostles' feet." Barnabas professed to give all, and he gave all; but Ananias held out on God.

There is a veritable apostolic succession in Christian life which finds its source and fountain head in these two contrasted men and their diverse characters. Barnabas is the prince and file-leader of a noble company of professors who pay 100 per cent on their pledges of devotion and fidelity. Ananias is the archetype of a numerous and ignoble multitude who call Jesus Lord but do not do either what he said or what he did, who hold a form of godliness but have denied the power thereof, walking after their lusts while their mouths speak great swelling words; they profess that they know God, but by their works they deny him. Like Ananias, they proclaim themselves consecrated to Christ, while they keep back a part, and so hold out on the God who bought them by giving all for their ransom.

Take, for instance, that group at the supper at Bethany shortly before the Passion of our Lord. The conspicuous figures in the scene, next after Jesus himself, are Mary and Judas: Mary, who like Barnabas, brought all she had and laid it in utter consecration at the feet of Jesus; and Judas, who, professed disciple and recognized apostle of Jesus, and nominated treasurer of the apostolic band, was yet like Ananias, a pilferer who held out on his Lord. H. R. Glover has a fine comment on the devotion of Mary, who brought her precious nard and poured it lavishly on the feet of her Master as the tangible and expressive symbol of her complete consecration of herself to her Saviour, provoking the cynical rebukes of Judas for such wanton waste of what might have been sold for the benefit of the apostolic company. Noting the account in the gospel of Mary's love-offering, Professor Glover says: "A little of it would have been a great gift. But perhaps the lid of the box jammed, and she realized in a moment that it was to be all or nothing. She drew off her sandal and smashed the box to pieces. However she broke it, and whatever her reasons, Mark's words mean that it was thoroughly and finally shattered . . . Something had happened which made this woman the pioneer of the Christian habit of giving all for Jesus."

But Judas, her critic and self-appointed exemplar, posing as himself the more exceedingly careful of the interests of his Master, was a pilferer from his Master; he held out on God: for John tells us that his vociferous solicitude concerning the wasted ointment was inspired by the fact that he was treasurer, and stole from the funds placed therein. He was a member in full fellowship of the Ananias club.

Prototype and Progeny

It is an ancient business this, of betrayal of trust by the professed people of God. Ananias had his prototypes, even as he has in so abundant measure his evil and shameful progeny. There was Achan, a soldier in the army of the Lord, a veteran warrior of Israel: and he held out on God. The spoil of Jericho was declared to be "devoted" to Jehovah—devoted without the possibility of being redeemed. "All the silver, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, are holy unto Jehovah: They shall come into the treasury of Jehovah." (Joshua 6:19.) "But the children of Israel committed a trespass in the devoted thing: for Achan . . . took of the devoted thing." (In the Greek version here the verb is that used by Luke in Acts 5:2 and by Paul in Titus 2:10;—"He pilfered from that which was devoted.") Achan marched around Jericho with the rest; he rushed over the crumbling walls with the rest; he shouted in triumph with the rest; he went up to Ai with the rest. His profession was unassailable: but he held out on God. At this bold professor was directed the indictment by Israel's God: "Israel hath sinned, yea they have even trans-

The Master of My Boat

I OWNED a little boat a while ago
And sailed a Morning Sea without a fear,
And whither any breeze might fairly blow
I'd steer the little craft afar or near.

Mine was the boat, and mine the air,
And mine the Sea, not mine a care.

My boat became my place of nightly toil.
I sailed at sunset to the fishing ground.
At morn my boat was freighted with the spoil
That my all-conquering work and skill had found.

Mine was the boat, and mine the net,
And mine the skill and power to get.

One day there passed along the silent
shore,
While I my net was casting in the sea,
A man who spoke as never man before;
I followed Him,—new life began in me.

Mine was the boat, but His, the voice,
And His the call, yet mine the choice.

Ah, 'twas a fearful night out on the lake!
And all my skill availed not at the helm,
Till Him asleep, I waken, crying, "Take,
Take Thou command, lest waters overwhelm!"

His was the boat, and His the Sea,
And His the Peace o'er all and me.

Once from His boat He taught the curious throne,
Then bade me let down nets out in the Sea;

I murmured, but obeyed, nor was it long Before the catch amazed and humbled me.

His was the boat, and His the skill,
And His the catch, and His my will.

—Joseph Addison Richards.

gressed my covenant which I commanded them: yea, they have even taken of the devoted thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have even put it among their own stuff." (Josh. 7:11.) And that was where at last it was found! When that interminable night had been flushed with the dawn, and the slow-moving sun had flashed on the tents of Israel, and the tedious lot had finally separated Achan from all his fellow-soldiers, he told the story of his pilfering and his treason: "When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish mantle, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them; and, behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it."

False to God

Oh how terrible are these moments of revelation and of judgment, when the inconsistencies and the infidelities and the infamies to which we have accustomed our selfish and worldly souls are revealed in all their hideousness and monstrousness, and we writhe under the arraignment which our own blindness and folly have made not only possible but inevitable! "All the silver and gold . . . shall come into the treasury of the Jehovah" . . . "I coveted them, and took them, and they are hid in my tent." And the awful drama of exposure which followed: "So Joshua sent messengers, and they ran unto the tent; and behold it was hid in his tent, and the silver under it. And they took them from the midst of the tent and brought them unto Joshua, and unto all the children of Israel, and laid them down before Jehovah." O Achan, why hath Satan filled thy heart to keep back part? How is it that thou hast conceived this thing? Thou hast been false to God!

Master Solsgate, the fanatical Puritan preacher of Scott's "Peveril of the Peak," is by no means a lovable character or a worthy exponent of the spirit of Christ: and yet he uttered solemn and weighty words in his noble affirmation of the claims of God upon his professed children: "God will not have from us an imperfect obedience. We must not, like Ananias and Sapphira, reserve behind some darling lust, some favorite sin, while we pretend to make sacrifice of our worldly affections. What avails it to say that we have but secreted a little matter, if the slightest remnant of the accursed thing hidden is in our tent?"

In its essential definition, the Christian life is a life which in all its elements and experiences is possessed and dominated by Jesus Christ our Saviour. Jude (v. 4) defines ungodly men as those guilty of "denying our only Despot (for this is exactly the word he uses, found also in Acts 5:24) and Lord, Jesus Christ." The Christian life consists in the soul's trustful submission to a benevolent despotism wherein the sovereignty of the Lord Jesus is absolute and unremitting. Any other or lesser definition of that life is both defective and deceptive, not to say disappointing: for in his service is perfect freedom; and only in the entire surrender of all we have and are to him do we find our joy made full. Ananias provides the clue to the reason for much of the unrest and discontent which attaches to Christian life. We have held out on God; we have kept back a part; we have some of the consecrated treasure hid in our own tent; we have been unwilling to pay 100 per cent on our profession of discipleship: and because we would not pay the price of perfect peace, perfect peace has not come to us. We would let drippings fall from the flask of precious ointment, but to shiver it utterly in absolute devotion to Christ was too much for us. We would march with Christ's army and bear his arms and shout at his victories: but to admit his kingship over all our goods and lands and money—to that utter and sweeping experience of Christian stewardship we have never attained. There are treasures hid in our tent which should be in his treasury. We would not hesitate to come with Ananias and lay our gifts on the altar—but we would hesitate long before we come with Barnabas and lay all our gifts on the altar in such glad and unreserved allegiance to Christ as to vindicate the purity and the finality of our fitness for stewardship in his kingdom and over his goods.

A gifted young business woman of splendid character had withstood the prayers of her Christian mother and the pleadings of her minister until she was well along in her twenties. In a powerful revival she was finally led to trust Christ and became a very happy Christian. The friend who had witnessed her confession said to her, "Minnie, please tell me why you so long resisted the call of Jesus to give yourself up to him?" She quickly replied, "I did not want to be conquered"—and then with a smile she added, "but it is sweet to be conquered by Christ." Barnabas knew, in the moments of his entire consecration, what Ananias never knew, how sweet it is to be conquered by Christ. His compelling and consuming mastery of us is the intervention of love come to save us from tyranny of selfishness, from the barrenness of a divided allegiance, from the tragedy of an adulterous alliance with the world which so soon passeth away.

The Power of Love

Lionel Strachey in his brilliant work on Queen Victoria, recounts an episode in the life of that noble lady, which is here given without meticulous concern for quotation marks. In the early days of her career as queen, Victoria was very powerfully influenced by the cold and worldly Lord Melbourne, many years her senior, and her most influential advisor. It was inevitable that such a companionship should have produced eventually an effect. The change was visible even in her public demeanor. Her expression, once ingenuous and serene, now appeared to a shrewd observer to be bold and discontented. She had learned something of the pleasures of power and the pains of it. Was it possible that she was beginning to listen to siren voices? That the secret impulses of self-expression, of self-indulgence even, were mastering her life? For a moment the child of the new age looked back, and wavered towards the eighteenth century. It was the most critical moment of her career. Had those influences lasted, the development of her character, the history of her life, would have been completely changed . . . On the evening of October 10, 1839, Albert of Saxe Coburg Gotha arrived at Windsor, and the whole structure of her existence crumbled into nothingness like a pack of cards. "He was beautiful," she gasped. Then, in a flash, a thousand mysteries were revealed to her; the past, the present, rushed upon her with a new significance. The delusions of years were abolished, and an extraordinary, an irresistible certitude leapt into being in the light of those blue eyes, the smile of that lovely mouth.

The advent of the lover and the birth of love which Strachey so brilliantly relates, transformed the wavering maiden, and forever redeemed her from the menace of Melbourne's materialism and policy to a career of nobleness and of loving service to her people. While Albert lived she adored him, and through all the years after his death she worshipped his memory and sought only to fulfill his wishes and continue his policies and perpetuate his memory throughout the wide expanse of the empire on whose flag the sun never sets. Albert's love and companionship transformed and glorified her life: and yet only six months before he came to Windsor she had said to Lord Melbourne, "At present my feeling is quite against ever marrying."

So in our coldness and blindness we thrust from us the intimation that any Love, any Life, may be trusted absolutely and without reserve: that any Person is to be received as the Despot of our souls: that any Redeemer is to be so far relied on as to leave us destitute of any other reliance anywhere in earth or heaven. And so we trail along in company with that pretentious couple of old, contenting our souls with a partial confidence in Christ and a partial surrender to him: keeping back a part of the life for which he paid blood that he might deliver it from endless ruin: bringing to him a part, only to find that such unlawful division brings satisfaction neither to him nor to ourselves: fearing to shiver every confining fetter lest we be wasting life by giving it all to him: taking a part of what he claims, and hiding it under our own tent, and thereby burying his treasure in the tattered napkin of our own unbelief and selfishness: saying to our proud souls: "At present my feeling is quite against ever making a complete surrender of my life to Christ."

And yet, if at last he comes to you with such compelling revelation of his love as will close your reckless lips and open your blinded eyes and quicken your cold heart, you also may whisper, "I did not want to be conquered—but it is sweet to be conquered by Christ."

"Is there a thing beneath the sun
That strives with thee my heart to share?

Ah, tear it thence, and reign alone,
The Lord of every motion there;
Then shall my heart from earth be free,

When it hath found repose in thee."

A Christian and His Money

By GEORGE C. ALBORN

IN our subject we are using the word "money" loosely, to cover property, possessions, riches, wealth of any sort. The subject might be more briefly stated as "stewardship", were it not for the fact that to some this word is synonymous with tithing, while a complete definition of stewardship must embrace time, talents, life-service, and we propose to deal with only one phase of that wide subject.

At once let us remove a possible misapprehension by stating emphatically that the interest of the church in promoting a right understanding of the relationship of the Christian to money is not primarily a financial one. The pastor does not discuss this subject merely in order to secure large offerings to church work. God could abundantly finance the work of his kingdom without any help from men. He has hidden millions of gold, countless treasures of precious gems which men know nothing about. And Sir W. Robertson Nicoll is undoubtedly correct in saying, "Christ's cause has never yet stood still from sheer lack of funds." The history of the church reveals great progress in times when its financial resources were almost nil.

Yet even a cursory reading of the Bible reveals the fact that God is greatly concerned that men shall give liberally to religious work. Much attention, much space is given to this phase of the subject. Only one explanation is possible. God and his church desire not so much the money that is given as the character that is (in part) developed by the giving. As Paul says, "We seek not yours, but you." The whole problem is a spiritual one. The church's interest in it is spiritual.

This subject is of importance to the Christian because we live in a world in which money is accorded such a preeminent place. Prof. Wm. James says, "The prevalent fear of poverty among the educated classes is the worst moral disease from which our civilization suffers." Then, too, the Christian must sustain some sort of relation to money. As life is lived today, he must handle money in larger or smaller sums. He must have money to provide honestly his own living. Paul wrote, "He that will not work, neither shall he eat." The Christian is under special obligation to provide for those that are dependent upon him. "If any provide not for his own, and specially his own household, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever." (I Tim. 5:8.) The Christian must have money to enable him to minister to the needs of others. Suppose the Good Samaritan had possessed no beast, no wine and oil, no money!

Then, too, the possession and administration of money broaden the Christian's sphere of influence and increase his ability to "go about doing good." Harry Emerson Fosdick well says, "It is one of the miracles of science, mastered by the spirit of service, that a man busy at his daily tasks at home can yet be preaching the Gospel in Alaska, healing the sick in Korea, teaching in the schools of Persia, feeding the hungry in India, and building a new civilization at the headwaters of the Nile." But if he has no money, he is shut out from this broadened participation in the kingdom work.

Paul and Jesus both teach that money may be made to contribute tremendously to the spiritual upbuilding both of ourselves and others, while a modern apostle has truly said that Christ must come between you and your money, or your money will come between you and Christ.

In any study of this subject there are certain fundamentals which apply to all men, whether Christians or not. There are three factors in the creation of property values, which all must recognize and take into account.

(1) The individual. He gives to the creation of property values, his time, ability, and labor. He has a just claim on the values produced. This is conceded always.

(2) Society. Society supplies the market, the demand, and protects the property and the individual in his possession of it. We are coming more and more to admit society's claim on the wealth that society's protection has enabled men to accumulate.

(3) God. He created the raw materials. He created the individual. He gives the power to get wealth. He contributes most. He has the highest claim.

The Christian, however, stands in a more advanced relation to this whole subject. He realizes that he owes himself and his all to Christ, not merely because of creation, but also because of redemption. His life-motive is gratitude and love to Christ. His life-purpose is to follow Christ, to do his will, to be like him in all things. It is the Christian's joy to carry this life-purpose and life-motive into all the experiences and relations of life. Naturally, then, he will rejoice to bring his relations to money under this sway. To him the great question will be: What is Christ's will, example and teaching concerning money and my relation to it?

Christ's personal attitude toward money was one of indifference. So many other things were of greater importance to him that money mattered little. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." But he was a keen observer of the power of money in other lives. He taught that if we exalt riches to the chief place in our lives we thereby turn away from God and become practical atheists. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon". He showed his disciples that trust in riches endangers one's chances of entrance into the kingdom. "How hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God". Through his apostle he taught us that "the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil".

Positive Principles

The foregoing are negative, but Christ's religion is not negative. It is always positive. He gives us certain great positive principles to live by. Among them are these: "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature." And that which we have called the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them".

And the Christian must apply these principles to the making (or earning) of money. He must not procure it in a way that will dishonor God, or injure his neighbor; but in such a way that God will be honored, his neighbor benefitted, the kingdom of Christ promoted. He will earn for Christ, not for self.

He must apply these principles to the saving of money. It is a curious fact that Christ did not think very highly of saving money. He nowhere commends it. He saw great dangers in it. He urged men to seek other treasure more worth while. His parable of the man whose large crops led him to build larger barns (to save) is illuminating. The man got his money honestly. He was thrifty. Most men would commend him. Christ said, "Thou fool". What was the matter? His whole concept of life was "I—I—my—my". No love for his neighbor, no thought of using his money to do good, no love for God.

The principles of Christ must be applied to the spending of money. We are to "do all to the glory of God". No money is to be spent in ways that will dishonor him; nor in ways that injure one's neighbor. A magazine article written by a man with an income of $30,000 per year, stated that he was spending $9,000 per year on his three children. Is that all right? Is it best for the children? Is it best to set such a standard that other children may long after it? And how about other

What Have We Done Today?

WE shall do so much in the years to come,

But what have we done today?

We shall give our gold in a princely sum,

But what did we give today?

We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,

We shall speak a hope in the place of fear,

We shall speak the words of love and cheer;

But what did we speak today?

We shall be so kind in the afterwhile,
But what have we been today?

We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,

But what have we brought today?

We shall give to truth a grander birth,

And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,

We shall feed the hungering souls of earth;

But whom have we fed today?

We shall reap such joys in the by and by,

But what have we sown today?

We shall build us mansions in the sky,

But what have we built today?

'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now do we do our task?

Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask:

"What have we done today?"

children? So far as revealed in the article he was spending nothing for any one outside of his own family. And children by the thousands starving in Armenia!

Let us not get the idea that in order to administer money to the glory of God we must be niggardly, purchasing only the barest necessities of life. God isn't that kind of a Father. He wants us to have all that is fit and best for us. He wants us to enjoy life. But we must make our money serve higher ends than style, show, self-indulgence. Christ taught that money might be so used as to purchase "true riches".

Giving May Dishonor God

Finally we come to the giving of money. This is not an easy task, since here, too, we must apply Christ's life-principles. It is quite possible to give money in such a way as to dishonor God, to work harm to other men. Money may be given to unworthy causes, or it may be given to worthy causes with an unworthy motive. Simon Magus would have given much money to the early church, but his motive was unworthy, and Peter said, "Thy money perish with thee".

Mere money can never bring about the coming of the kingdom. Mere money can never relieve the distress of the world. One must give something besides, something with, his money.

How would Christ have us give? This in itself is a great theme, and we have space here for only a few hints:

(1) Without ostentation. (Matt. 6:3).

(2) Cheerfully and readily. (II Cor. 9:7).

(3) Liberally. (Prov. 11:25. Matt. 10:8).

(4) Sacrificially. (II Sam. 24:24. II Cor. 8:1-4).

(5) Systematically and proportionately (I Cor. 16:2)

Christ never set a definite, universal standard, or proportion. He commended Zaccheus for giving half of his goods, and especially the poor widow who gave all. He commended Mary when she lavished upon him the treasures of the alabaster box. He said "freely ye have received, freely give". He seemed to feel that for the heart that truly loved him no legislation was necessary. The loving heart could be trusted to apply his life-principles to the whole relation to money—earning, saving, spending, giving; doing it all "to the glory of God".

Wanted—A General Manager

The question is not, "What proportion shall I give to God?" but "Shall I give myself to God?" If we are spending God's money without aiding God's business we are misappropriating funds.

By CARL D. CASE

IT ISN'T easy to make a just division between what we spend on ourselves and on kingdom needs. We feel quite sure that the physical, educational and moral welfare of our own family is really a part of our kingdom service. Certainly this looms large before our imagination, and the other kingdom needs seem always to be in danger of being minimized.

Who knows, after all, what should be given of our income to outside kingdom needs,—the church, missions, general philanthropy? A tenth? So say many, some from what they consider a direct Biblical requirement, and others from the standard of privilege. Many sane Christians believe that under modern conditions, the great majority cannot give a tenth. Some are sure that with large incomes, more than a tenth should be given—by certain other people. The views are various, but the tendency is uniform to reduce constantly the higher standard to the lower. One thing chiefly stands in the way of such a depression of giving, the Christian habit which has become reasonably fixed to give regularly a definite proportion of our income to the church.

This is just like the problem of wages. Wages will never be fixed permanently under our present industrial system. Where is that delicate unseen line between dividends and wages? What judicial authority will determine for us what is the really just proportion of profits that should go to the investor and what to the workman? But one thing is sure, the constant tendency on the whole of the laborer to secure larger wages and of the employer and capitalist to secure larger returns.

In the kingdom, there is only one solution of our problem of division between ourselves and world missions which includes our own church, and that is to turn over our whole productive business to God and to seek employment from him as his general manager. In fact, this is the only inevitable result of accepting Christ as our Master. The primary question with us is not, "What proportion shall I give to God?" but, "Shall I give myself to God?"

What Is The Gift of Self?

At once with the gift of self is the inclusion of both what we have and our business of living. The slave was not fully owned by his master, if the slave owned independently his property. "Who-soever ye be that renounceth not all that he hath cannot be my disciple." Paul laid down the order: the Macedonian Christians who gave according to their power, yea, and beyond their power, first gave their own selves to the Lord and to Paul by the will of God.

The
"Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold," comes very naturally after

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee."

We really have started at the wrong end in discussing our philanthropic contributions. The question is not, What of my income shall I give to the church and missions? But, What of my income shall I spend on myself and family? And even the amount spent on self and family must be strictly limited by the question of efficiency. Just so much and no more must be spent on self and our family as will make our service the largest and most effective to the kingdom, no more, no less. The underestimate and overestimate are equally bad. This is God's business of which we have charge, and we must make it profitable, not to ourselves but to him.

Considering ourselves general managers of God's business in our own particular field of endeavor will at once eradicate many knotty problems without even the necessity of solving them. For example, the conception of Lent, or seasons of special denial. There is no time left now for us to do anything else but to observe Lent. If we, at any time, are denying self to the detriment of our service, we are poor managers of God's business. If we, at any time, are spending God's money without aiding God's business, we are misappropriating funds. Vacations are needed by all, but not from being Christians. No time, no money, is ever left to be used for other than kingdom purposes. Ice-cream sodas when increasing fellowship and refreshing the body are entirely justifiable, not as a momentary luxury, a slight let-down in our standard, but as the best way to spend the money for the kingdom.

Such a conception of God's business also puts us in the right attitude toward God

The Upper Room

By BERTHA C. THORNE

*THERE'S a room where the windows
Open wide
To a rustling leaf-world, just outside.
There's a stream below, and a star above,
And the flute of a thrush in a call of love.
Within a little group is gathering there
For the mid-week hour of song and prayer.*

*O wondrous power of sacred song!
The souls of the singers are swept along
Beyond and above the world's alarms,
As they feel the Everlasting Arms.
The pastor speaks—leads each one there
To mountain summits of thought and prayer;
And from these, life's pathway, winding far,
Shines with the light of the Bethlehem
Star;
And a glimpse of that glory, seen again,
Gives strength for struggle; peace for pain.*

*There is prayer and praise in that upper room,
While without, gleam the stars, through the gathering gloom.
There are friendly greetings, and handclasps warm,
And faith renewed for the stress and storm;
For they've caught the vision—earth's fret and jars
Give place to the peace of the quiet stars.*

as recipients of his blessings and grateful for them. We are partly converted to this idea, for we do thank God for the $3 meal our family is just about to eat. But we buy a $50 suit of clothes and even a $5,000 house and forget either to consult or thank Him. Such a large part of our income must be spent on ourselves, that a careful watch is needed here to reduce the expenses of carrying on God's business.

Monday Desecration Means Sunday Desecration

And plainly this conception so concentrates our attention on the kingdom as such, that it not only adequately furnishes money for the church and missions, but puts religion and morality into both the getting and spending of money. They tell us that Sunday desecration is increasing, and are urging strenuously strict laws for the observance of the so-called Sabbath. But what is the trouble with Sunday desecration? Why, Monday desecration. Let any man keep Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday holy to God, and Sunday will take care of itself. What is the trouble with the tithe? Why is there so much difficulty in securing what we have called the "Lord's money"? Because, we have not learned that the nine-tenths is the Lord's money too. He who earns his ten-tenths as God's manager, and spends his nine-tenths conscientiously, will spend his one-tenth all right. In fact, his constant desire will be to decrease the amount that he spends for the expenses of the business and increase the amount that he spends on God's work in general. As long as God is to countersign every order on the exchequer, it will cause no special twinge when God directs what shall be spent for missions.

Then maybe, by this conception, we shall elevate our motive of giving. No doubt, other things being equal, the Christian will prosper more largely by giving his tenth. But there is always the danger of driving a sharp bargain with the Lord. If a man believes he can get a greater income during the year by spending one-tenth on the Lord than by not doing it, it is not particularly to his credit that he speculates on the Lord's promise. But it does not produce that disinterested Christian service that it should.

Being God's general manager is the best way of developing character. The big thing produced in God's factory that we are running is Christlikeness both for ourselves and others. Jesus said it. He knew. No one else could have discovered and revealed the method as he did. He that is faithful in a very little, temporary values which are indeed very little, is faithful also in much, the spiritual values. He that hath not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, cannot have committed to his trust the true riches. If any has not been faithful in that which is another's, that is money, property, who will give to him that which is his own, character, salvation?

Reverse our former problem! It is not how much can we save to give to God, but how much out of our savings God assigns to us.

Fair Dealing With God

By LUCIUS E. FORD

If it is God's money, where does he want it placed? The Jew knew that it was not enough to have a Lord's pocket or box, or to have part of his bank account marked "Corban." It was the failure to bring in the tithes and offerings into the "storehouse," which brought the famine and the terrible accusation of "robbers" (Mal. 3:10). No wonder we squirm as we read such statements, and try to brush them all aside as "Jewish," but are we ready to do away with the Sabbath and all that was Jewish? If so, what would be left of Christianity? "The tithe is the Lord's," and was so reckoned before the law was given through Moses, nor was ever changed by Christ or his disciples. It was commended by him in Matt. 23:23; "this ought ye to have done" shows up his approval, if not his command, as to tithing. "The earth and all it contains" still belong to God, and includes all we have and are; but it is the one-tenth brought to him for special use which acknowledges his ownership and our stewardship. God has never failed to "open the windows of heaven and shower blessings" upon his people as they brought in the tithes and offerings. They had to learn, in sorrow many times, that robbing God was robbing themselves of temporal and spiritual blessings. Is it not time that we learned the same lesson? Rabbi Wise is reported as saying, "If either Jews or Christians had been living up to their teaching, the awful World War would not have been possible." Is not the church the bank to which we are to bring our personalities, talents and money, so that God can have the use of his own at any time? All too long we have been singing "All to Christ I owe" and then kept "all" under our own individual control.

If we owed our landlord we would never think of saying to him, "We have your rent set aside in a safe place, and will bring it to you as we think you have need." We would soon move if we did. Yet is that not the way we pay God what we acknowledge as his in a special way and for a special purpose, i. e., his spiritual work, salvation of the whole world?

Why not deal with our God as fairly as with our fellowmen, and bring what we owe and put it to his account in our church treasury?

Some ought to give more than a tenth, of course. Some could well afford to give nine-tenths. Others could give all of their income, as some are now doing—income of business while they live on their capital. But why not start at one-tenth and then increase "as God prospers," as he always does those who "seek first his kingdom and his righteousness" (Matt. 6:33).

A Cycle of Prayer

Special topic for emphasis during October: Stewardship, of talents, time, mind, money.

Our Church

1st day—The church as a force for righteousness in the community.

2nd day—The pastor.

3rd day—The deacons and trustees.

4th day—The Sunday school and young people's societies.

5th day—The women's societies.

6th day—The laymen.

7th day—The individual in relation to the church.

Distinguished American Guests in Czecho-Slovakia

By H. PROCHAZKA

CZECH-SLOVAK Baptists have always been greatly pleased and thankful for every visit paid them by their English and American brethren because such visits always brought blessing and help. Our first guest from America after the war, remains still in our loving memory—Dr. Charles A. Brooks. He visited the brethren in Prague, Brunn, Vsetin and in the Carpathians. Some months later came Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke to report about the situation in Central Europe to the conference of the Baptist World Alliance in London in July, 1920. Since then Dr. Rushbrooke, as the Baptist commissioner for Europe, has come to Prague several times bringing always tokens of love and most useful counsel for our work. His conference will never be forgotten by our executive committee. With the executive committee of our Union, he laid the foundations of our present Baptist work in Czecho-slovakia. Once he held a conference with the committee that closed at five o'clock in the morning, having lasted eighteen hours. And Dr. Rushbrooke did not seem tired. His work for Czecho-slovak Baptists will have its outstanding place in their history. Last year Mrs. and Dr. Harlan and Dr. S. Z. Batten paid their visit to several places in Czecho-slovakia.

Arrivals Bring Joy

In the spring of this year we were happy to receive a letter from Secretary Franklin telling us that the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society was about to send Dr. C. H. Jones and Dr. F. E. Taylor to our country to spend the summer in bringing gospel messages to our churches. Dr. Franklin told us also that Dr. W. S. Abernethy, the pastor of the president of the United States, with Mr. W. T. Sheppard would come to Prague. After hearing this news there was a great joy amongst the brethren all over the country. The joy was still greater when Dr. Franklin and the president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Dr. Taylor, and the poet minister, Dr. Jones, alighted from the train at Prague station.

The beautiful morning of the next day was spent by arranging some important matters and by going about through the city of John Hus. In the afternoon our honored guests had a look at the First Baptist Chapel, after which they met the committee of the Czecho-slovak Baptist Union. The members of the committee gave a survey of the work, discussing some important problems. The brethren listened to these reports about different branches of the mission with sympathy and interest. At three o'clock in the afternoon a great congregation gathered together to hear the message of our honored guests. After a cordial reception given them by the pastor, Mr. Tolar, Dr. Jones spoke with his gentle wooing voice from I Tim. 1:15 about Jesus Christ who is worthy of all acceptance to every one. Then Dr. Franklin spoke. His somehow dreamy eyes and unspeakably loving face seconded what his mouth said from the fullness of his heart. He spoke about Baptist success on different mission fields throughout the whole world where Christ's banner is flying high. He assured the congregation that Baptists of the world are indebted to the land of John Hus for many blessings, and he laid stress upon the fact that the Baptists have a message to preach to the world and so to the people of Czecho-slovakia too. At last Dr. Taylor in his strong way appealed that there is no salvation for individuals or nations except in Jesus Christ. It need not be said that the congregation was filled with enthusiasm and holy zeal.

Before seven o'clock on the next morning our brethren were at the station. Drs. Jones and Taylor had to travel to the east of Slovakia to begin their evangelistic campaign. Touching friendship and love of our American friends to each other impressed me strongly. We departed, committed into the hands of God. And I had the privilege of being in company with two of the best American Baptists, indeed with two best men of the world.

Our program was to visit at least twenty different places where our brethren would preach the gospel. The aim thereof was to show them the Baptist work, the thirst of people after the Word of God, the outstanding opportunity of preaching the Gospel and the spirit of the people of different nationalities. The brethren witnessed all of this. They wondered at the beauties of the Carpathians, at the fertile land in the valleys; they experienced the spirit of Czech, Slovak, Magyars and Germans; they gained an impression of the political condition and its possibilities. They visited cities, towns and country places, and so they crossed the whole country in a way such as no other American citizen has done.

We started in the East and then shortly moved to West. Mukacevo is a town with Jewish majority. But our work led by Mr. Stumpf in the Magyar language is successful. During this year there have been over fifty baptisms. Our meeting was held in the town theatre which was packed. The interpreter into Magyar was a young Hungarian Jewish physician. Both our brethren spoke and then I spoke to the Slovaks and Czechs in their own language. There was immediate success. The newspapers wrote about this visit and the position of the Baptists has been strengthened.

A Spiritual Banquet

Then the brethren preached for two evenings in Kosice in the second largest city in Slovakia. A good, fine and eager audience gathered together. As we wanted to preach to Slovaks as well as to Hungarians it was needed to translate from English into Czech and then into Hungarian language. God blessed the meetings in many ways. From Kosice we moved to Kezmarok in the Carpathians. Here again the gospel was preached in English, Czech and German to some 500 men. On the following Sunday and Tuesday the brethren preached the gospel in the new chapel at Svaty Nukulas and on Monday in the village called Vavrisovo. The ride in a primitive carriage to Vavrisovo and Pribylina was difficult and connected with some bodily exercise, but it was forgotten when we could rest on a beautiful spot under the mountains at the spring of fine mineral water. But this day of discomfort and tasting beauties of God's nature was crowned by the moving of his spirit in the evening meeting. "We had a spiritual banquet," wrote Mr. Stupka afterwards, "and we shall never forget it."

I was sorry to leave my brethren, whose great hearts I had learned to know very closely. So Mr. Tolar, the pastor of the Prague church, accompanied them to Luceneo and Jelsava. Jelsava is a stronghold of Magyarona, that is, those of Slovak Magyars and Magyarized Slovaks who make propaganda against and undermine foundations of the state in all possible ways and with all possible arms. They tried to hinder the large meeting that was held in a public hall by disconnecting the electric lights. But Dr. Jones spoke in the darkness. After three days in the capital of Slovakia, Bratislava, where Mr. Vaculik is the pastor, the brethren hurried to Brunn. They spoke two nights before full houses in the greatest hall in that place. Then after another journey they had a blessed meeting at Vsetin. And then again they moved westward to see a new Baptist community at Lipova. The story of the work there is wonderful. It is an exceedingly poor place. The people are straw-weavers, who, working from sunrise to sunset, earn just enough to live on water and bread. Their stony little fields are poor. The place was known as a village of whiskey drinkers. Mr. Dvorak began to work there one year ago. Drinking has been stopped, peace has come upon the village. There is now a church of seventy members, and a further seventy are ready to be baptized. There Dr. Taylor and Dr. Jones preached the gospel to the poor and their message and impression were mighty.

During the fourth week of the brethren's stay in Czecho-slovakia they visited Jedlina where the personality of Mr. Kavka, a teacher, appealed to the brethren.

My Schoolboy

MY little lad is a schoolboy today.
Take up his playthings and put them away.
Close to my feet on the toy-littered floor
With engine and blocks I shall see him no more.
At the call of the school bell he passed from my side,
With the step of a man and his eyes showing pride.
My six-year-old soldier, they've marched you away!
My baby's a schoolboy today.

Good Teacher, I've sent you my treasure of gold;
Carefully, prayerfully willingly hold
And polish one gem I have placed in your hand;
For the making or marring is yours to command.
But the house is so still—only pussy comes mewing;
I sit idly dreaming, my work waits the doing.
My strong little man has gone forth to the fray—
My baby's a schoolboy today.
—Katherine R. Marsh, in "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate."

ren. In order to visit all the other places we had in view, Dr. Jones and Dr. Taylor separated here. Dr. Jones went to Pardubia and then to Roudnice, while Dr. Taylor visited the German church of Mr. Hoffman and then Turnov. After this we met again in Prague. After their arrival Dr. Jones and Dr. Taylor had to preach many times in large public halls. One of the most beautiful and spiritual meetings was that in the Representative House on August 18. Dr. Jones stirred in a most tender way the feelings of the whole congregation, recalling to their memory unforgettable scenes in Liberty Hall and Liberty Square in Philadelphia in Oct., 1918, when the Proclamation of Independence was signed by twenty liberated nations of Central Europe. And after that the president of the Northern Baptist Convention spoke of the sacrifice of life that must be lost to be saved.

There was a large meeting on Sunday afternoon in the Baptist chapel. A great congregation was gathered together to listen to the last sermons of the brethren that have become dear to them. It was again the president of the Northern Baptist Convention who spoke mightily about the conditions of growing church. And he let Dr. Jones speak of the impressions they had gathered during their journey in Czechoslovakia. The hearts of the congregation burned when they listened to the frank, sincere and kind words of Dr. Jones that came out from the heart and touched the hearts. And then the congregation stood up and when Mr. Tolar expressed thanks on behalf of the Prague church and the secretary of the Czechoslovak Baptist Union on behalf of the union for everything the brethren have done in the country, many eyes were filled with tears.

And so they went away, after they had done a great work, had sacrificed much more than we would have dreamed of. And we are immensely grateful for their labor in our Lord's field. Its harvest will appear in the days to come as we eagerly and in strong faith look forward to them. Their days of sacrifice, discomfort and hardships of journeying must disappear before the results. They have done an excellent work which will not be forgotten either before the throne of mercy or with the Baptists and other people of this republic. We are immensely grateful to all our guests, and to the board of American Baptist Mission Society and especially to Dr. Franklin, who was the author of the excellent idea that these representatives should pay a visit to this country. We also thank the representatives of the Czechoslovak ambassador in Washington, and Mr. Spacek, a member of the Czechoslovak legation in Washington, who with exceeding kindness rendered many very useful services to our American visitors. May God bless and reward our brethren-apostles, who "came, saw and have triumphed."

Facts of World Evangelism

Missions

TEN missions are now maintained: in Burma, Assam, South India, Bengal-Orissa, South China, East China, West China, Japan, Belgian Congo and the Philippines. In these fields are 126 stations and 3,400 outstations. Aid is also given to the Baptists in Europe.

Missionaries

Eight hundred and thirty-six men and women represent Northern Baptists as missionaries in this great world service. These include ordained ministers, physicians, teachers, industrial and agricultural experts, business managers, printers and several builders. They are assisted by 7,370 native workers. There are also 2,796 workers in Europe. More than 200 missionaries are definitely supported by churches or individuals, who thereby consider them as their own foreign representatives.

Evangelism

Last year was a record year in evangelism. On all fields 12,174 converts were baptized. In non-Christian lands 203,586 members are enrolled in 1,889 Baptist churches, of which 1,114 or 59 per cent are self-supporting. You can have a large part in these evangelistic achievements through the support of a missionary or a native preacher.

Industry

Along with the necessity of leading the men and women to Christ exists the need of providing means of self-support. Several industrial schools teach brick-making, building, tailoring, farming, book-binding, carpentering, iron-work, engineering and surveying.

Education

There are 2,898 schools, including 4 colleges, 29 seminaries and training schools, with a total enrolment of over 103,000 pupils. Sunday schools number 2,371, with 98,613 pupils. Missionaries have translated the Bible into over thirty dialects and languages. Three printing plants publish Bibles, periodicals and other literature.

Medicine

Twenty-eight hospitals and fifty-five dispensaries are maintained and are in charge of fifty-one medical missionaries, assisted by 255 American and native nurses. More than 200,000 patients received treatment during the past year.

Property

A work as large and as varied as this needs considerable material equipment to make it effective and to guarantee permanent results. Missionaries must have homes; schools require buildings, equipment and libraries; congregations need preaching halls and chapels; doctors require dispensaries and hospitals. For evangelistic touring there must be provided outfits, consisting of horses, tents, wagons, motorcycles, etc.—all needed for carrying the message to the people in cities and villages, mountains and jungles.

Faith

If on this night of still, white cold,
I can remember May,
New green of tree and underbrush,
A hillside orchard's mounting blush,
The scent of earth and noon's blue hush,
A robin's jaunty way;

If on this night of bitter frost,
I know such things can be,
That lovely May is true—ah, well,
I shall believe the tales men tell,
Wonders of bliss and asphodel,
And immortality.

Expansive Christianity

By FREDERICK B. GREUL

EXPANSIVENESS is a modern term for an old biblical idea. The glory of the human mind is its expansiveness.

To be non-expansive is to live an imprisoned life. Such a life is a calamity. When this non-expansiveness appears in religion, it promises all sorts of ill. Of this, church history gives abundant testimony. Expansiveness is not necessarily out of place in a stiff denominational church. Sifted to the bottom, expansiveness is simply a continuation of the personality of the founder in the life of the church.

We cannot conceive of the perpetual residence of the Lord Jesus in a human life, or a church, without a continuous expansion of vision and service. This quality can neither be ignored, nor substituted by anything else. When operative this feature prevents corrosion. Such a church cannot become a social company of luxurious non-producing adherents.

"Productivity is an outstanding characteristic of the expansive church. It possesses a mother spirit that expresses itself in continuous propagation. Such a church is a wonder-working factor in the community. It manifests a delightful adequacy for making friends for our Lord Jesus Christ. It is out of sympathy with cock-sure attitudes and cannot be confused with hard and fast doctrinaire fossils. It vibrates. It is viril. It has a manly broad-gauge sympathy, in pulpit and pew, for all the current conditions to which the great head of the church calls it. It cannot be traditionalized. It advocates an intelligent and vigorous interpretation of God to men.

Divine being, life incarnate, it draws life to itself. Live men want to cooperate with it. It indicates a modern well-set-up Christianity. It stands for intellectual expansion, and an expansion of experience. Jesus was the greatest expansionist known. He wishes his church to be like himself. We may say Jesus is the most continuously expanding personality in the history of the race. He has broken every mold ever made for him. As embodied in his church he is adequate to produce his likeness in all who willingly associate themselves with him in his world purpose. His purpose is the completion of his kingdom. His purpose will be victoriously realized.

Expansiveness in men and churches is the quality best calculated to bring the realization into being. Its operation prevents excessive emotionalism and enriches experience. It avoids staleness by its perennial vitality. The expansive church is advertiseable. It delivers the goods as advertised. Men of virility believe in it, and want to be identified with it. It reflects the Christ, and is easily understood as a Christian church, pure and simple. It is ceaselessly attractive. It will never stop expanding. It never alters the divine message or mission. This is the world's great need today. Just here lies the power to do for the world what diplomats and politicians try to do, and always fail in. It will never fail because it has the ever-resident Christ at the helm.

In a message to his church Pastor John B. Lawrence of the First church, Shawnee, Okla., says, "Vacations are over. We have had an enjoyable rest. Everyone is refreshed, invigorated, 'pepped' up, 'spizirinkticated' and ready for work." He says that the church must have 1,000 in attendance in Sunday school by Oct. 1.

Stewardship Nuggets.

A deacon discards his own way of handling his property and adopts the Lord's way as set forth in the Bible as becoming a Christian steward. A church adopts the objective: "All workers and no shirkers." Why not try carrying our burden with his yoke?

A Five-Year Personal Program

The following is by Capt. K. W. Brown, senior deacon of First Church, Ames, Iowa, and commercial traveler and banker for a generation:

"For Baptist men, vulgarly called 'tightwads,' who have a comfortable income and competency, but are always willing that others, who are more liberal givers, should do the mission and benevolent work of the church.

"Every Baptist church has a goodly number who were received into the membership under a pledge to do certain things financially mentioned in the church covenant, which pledges they never attempt to fulfill.

"The writer has been, in a small way, a successful business man for nearly fifty years, and has accumulated a little more each year, as the years have gone by; I will accumulate no more—as long as I live, but will set an example for my brethren by devoting my time, my strength, my energy, my income and my means to gospel work, as set forth in the following five-year personal program for Baptist 'tightwads' in the Northern Baptist Convention:

"First—Discard my own way of handling my property and adopt the Lord's way, as set forth in the Bible as becoming a Christian steward.

"Second—Set aside one-tenth of my income for gospel work, regularly (weekly if possible) monthly or yearly if it is necessary.

"Third—Wake up to the fact that the above is no gift or free-will offering, but payment of a just debt. 'The tithe is the Lord's' and add 15 per cent of my income (25 per cent all told) to gospel work.

"Fourth—Resolve to devote all of my accumulations, over and above absolute necessities, to gospel work as long as I live.

"Fifth—Make my will, and set aside a portion of each piece of property, both personal and real, when it is sold, to gospel work, and designate the branches of work so indicated, and carefully instruct my executor just how to carry out the conditions of this will. I have done and am doing the above."

Results of Stewardship Sermons

By GEORGE WOOLCOCK, PASTOR

At Traverse City, Mich., following a month's preaching on the general subject of Christian stewardship, thirty-three signed enrolment blanks indicating their purpose to tithe their income and to recognize their stewardship also of time and talents. Prospects are good for increasing the membership of our Baptist League of Christian Stewards to fifty within the next few weeks.

At a recent meeting the biggest yearly program ever put up to the church was heartily adopted. The objectives call for an increase of 100 new members within a year, and a club of twenty-five new subscribers to THE BAPTIST within the same period. For the latter objective the month of December is designated for a complete canvass of every resident family in the interest of our denominational literature. Another objective is the organization of a stewardship league of fifty members. (That was adopted before our Sunday morning attempt that netted the thirty-three signers.)

Still another objective that we briefly call "All workers and no shirkers" calls for the enlistment of every resident member in some form of Christian work.

We will have two "pay-up" Sundays for our New World Movement pledgers, development and the divine sanction of stewardship; to create a wider appreciation of the fields to which stewardship applies; to stimulate the highest type of giving; and to point out the best means by which the church as a whole may advance this idea.

The subtopics given under each lesson are meant to suggest lines of thought which may be followed in studying and teaching the lessons.

I. The Purpose of Life.

Reading: Ephesians 2:8-10; 2 Timothy 3:14-17; Titus 2:11-14.

1. Adequate self-expression in
2. The life of the kingdom of God.
3. The purpose of individual life determined by the ideal of Christian brotherhood.
4. Brotherhood an inclusive ideal—every area of privilege and possession subject to its claims.

II. The Meaning of Stewardship.

Reading: Acts 20:24; 1 Corinthians 9:16-27.

1. Conscious relationship of man to God and to his fellows.
2. Fullest self-realization for the common good.
3. Privilege of cooperating with God in world redemption, by the use of personality, powers, time, possessions, etc.

III. The Basis of Stewardship.

Reading: Luke 19:1-10; Romans 15:2; 1 Corinthians 10:31-33.

1. Grounded in the social basis of personality and conscience.
2. Inspired by a sense of gratitude—to God, past generations, society, etc.
3. Promoted by a sense of loyalty to a high ideal of personal and social life.

IV. The Legal Ideal of Stewardship.

Reading: Leviticus 27:16-33; Deuteronomy 14:28, 29; Malachi 3:10.

1. Obligation to render something to Deity a universal religious idea.
2. Old Testament legal expressions of the idea of sharing the substance with God.
3. Advantages and dangers of the legal conception of stewardship (tithe).

V. The Prophetic Ideal of Stewardship.

Reading: Isaiah 1:10-17; Hosea 6:6; Amos 5:24; Micah 6:6-8.

1. The prophetic emphasis on human values.
2. The service acceptable to God—life rather than gifts.
3. Social implications of the prophetic emphasis.

VI. Stewardship in the Life and Teaching of Jesus.

Reading: Matthew 20:20-28; 23:23; Luke 16:9-13; 18:18-30.

1. The basis: The family relationship between God and men.
2. The primary of spiritual values ("Seek ye first the kingdom of God").
3. The use of material means for the advancement of spiritual ends.

The Lure of the World

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

"Demas hath forsaken me, having loved the present world."

PAUL did not tell us the particular form of worldliness for which Demas forsook him, but it was for the present, as against the the unresent world. He was willing to exchange the seen for the unseen and eternal. He loved the present world as if it were the permanent thing. If our Master did anything, it was to found a society whose standard was to be character, and whose qualities were to be spiritual, and where truth and beauty, gentleness and graciousness, were to be the chief good. It is a long distance from Paul's day to our own, but this does not mean that we do not live in a world that is anti-Christian, and that we do not need to watch and pray. It only means the conflict has changed its form. What constitutes worldliness in every age is devotion to the material instead of to the spiritual things of life. If you value gold more than character, and popularity more than self-respect, or if you value the opinion of others more than the reign of righteousness, in short, the things which are temporal more than the things which are eternal, you see the power of the world, and a worldly man.

In October and April, two big "get-together socials" in February and May, a fifteen days' evangelistic campaign in October under the leadership of Evangelists Littrell and Moody, and the month of March will be devoted to teachings on life service and soul winning. In fact every month has its special objects to emphasize. In this way we hope to accomplish a great deal more for the kingdom than we otherwise might.

Christianity in Action in Stewardship

PREPARED BY THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON COMMITTEE

4. The sacrificial element in stewardship.

VII. Stewardship as Taught by the Apostles

Reading: Acts 4:32-37; 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2; 2 Corinthians 8:1-15.

1. Need of stewardship for (1) maintenance of the church, and (2) works of benevolence.
2. Consecration of personality as well as property.
3. Sincerity and fidelity in stewardship.
4. United and systematic endeavor.

VIII. Stewardship in Time and Talent.

Reading: Romans 12:1-21.

1. Personality—at its best.
2. Powers—physical, mental, spiritual.
3. Time—devoted to service of others.
4. Possessions—all for the kingdom.

IX. Stewardship in Personal Expenditure.

Reading: Luke 16:1-13.

1. The Christian motive in personal expenditure.
2. What constitutes legitimate expenditure?
3. What constitutes illegitimate expenditure?
4. Principles of budget-making and proportionate expenditure.

X. Stewardship in Investment.

Reading: Matthew 25:14-30.

1. The Christian motive in acquiring property and making investments.
2. Principles determining the choice of investments.
3. Responsibility of investor for the conduct of the business.

XI. Stewardship in Giving.

Reading: Luke 21:1-4; John 12:1-8.

1. The Christian appeal.
2. The Christian standard (limitations of tithing).
3. Systematic, proportionate, and sacrificial giving.
4. Extraordinary gifts and bequests.

XII. Results of the Practice of Stewardship.

Reading: Malachi 3:7-12; Corinthians 9:1-15.

1. Reflex influence—on the character of the giving individual and the giving church.
2. Results in the effectiveness and expansion of the work of the church.
3. Results in social and philanthropic enterprises.

XIII. Methods of Promoting Stewardship.

Reading: Deuteronomy 6:4-9; Matthew 28:19, 20; Galatians 6:6-10.

1. In cultivating a sense of trusteeship.
2. In creating a sense of social obligation and responsibility.
3. In analyzing and presenting the world's need.
4. In the training of children.

Some Results of the Storehouse Plan

BY LUCIUS E. FORD

Rev. J. H. Snow organized the Haskell Avenue Baptist Church of Dallas, Texas, on the storehouse plan fourteen years ago. The church was made up of poor working people, only four or five families owning their homes. But they averaged $64.44 per member yearly, and at the end of four years had 200 members with an annual church income of $9,665.43. At the rate they gave to missions the 2,500,000 Baptists of the South would give $50,000,000 each year with no extra appeals or drives. This was the church that gave the light needed to the church at Ocmulga, Okla., Rev. Grand Chambers, pastor, to help it out of its seemingly hopeless indebtedness. It worked there so well that the pastor caught the "heavenly vision" and became an apostle of tithing. He went up and down that state starting tithers' associations, and later on doing the same in Kansas while he was pastor at Parsons, Kansas.

Anyone who studies the plan can see that, as Dr. Poteat said to the writer, "If this plan had been adopted years ago the cry 'budgets, budgets' now heard on every hand would be changed to 'What can we do with the money in hand?'"

Letter from Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery

Is this a just criticism on our convention?

I HAVE been much interested in reading the comments on the Northern Baptist Convention, in the various weeklies and dailies. The amount of such comment has been amazing. A deep interest in what Baptists did and said at Indianapolis is manifested by every section of our nation. In the Northwestern Christian Advocate I came across a comment, the other day, which deeply interested me, and I am wondering if THE BAPTIST will not publish it in the interests of our common information. I would like to know how many of our Baptist people consider this a just criticism on our convention. Personally, it seems to me that it is, and that one of the deepest reasons for our keeping our minds off theological disputes is that such disputes tend to take our minds away from our real job, and to center them on points that are all foreign to the main issue.

Christianity is today on trial before the world. The verdict will not be given favorably because of our correctness of theological views, no matter how correct our views may be. The test which Jesus himself applied is the one we must meet. When John's disciples came to him, asking the credentials of his mission, he said, "Go back and tell John the things that you have seen and heard; that the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." The people are not going to ask, "Are the Baptists the most orthodox people in the world?" They are not going to care much whether we are or not. But they will be impressed if we do in the world the work which our Master did when he was on earth.

A few years ago, at a time of world crisis, one of the conventions of a certain great church spent its time wrangling over the correct color of the bookmarks and decorations to be used at certain seasons of the Christian year. The whole world laughed at this, but were not the Baptists in danger of making the same mistake when we gave the major part of our convention to questions of theological interpretation, rather than to the vital interests which our critic tells us we all but ignored? Here follows the criticism. What do you make of it?

"Vital Interests All but Ignored"

"To one who has attended other great denominational gatherings and is familiar with the crisis now on in missions and in the maintenance of the Volstead law, the purification of the movies and other far-reaching reforms, the distressing feature of the doctrinal struggle was the absorption of interest in questions of creed and the almost ignoring of these living issues. To be sure, resolutions upholding the Volstead law were passed, but there were no outbursts of enthusiasm and no speeches. All other social questions received perfunctory consideration. The board of promotion announced a 25 per cent cut in missionary appropriations. The leaders felt keenly over it but whatever was said in closer councils the missionary enthusiasm, notwithstanding the impressive introduction of new missionaries and some stirring addresses from the foreign field, did not reach the passion we have seen elsewhere. This, we believe, was wholly owing to the absorption in doctrinal discussion and not to a lack of conviction on the part of the Baptists who have a record in missions and reform second to none. We witnessed the same dissension with the same results in the Presbyterian General Assembly a few years ago at Atlanta, Ga. This year, however, at Des Moines the Presbyterians put up a bold and united front against all forms of evil and manifested a profound missionary passion. There was almost no doctrinal discussion and very little division except on practical questions of policy which will always provoke some discussion in every assembly of thinking people. We can only trust that the Baptists will come to some conclusions that will permit a like evolution out of dissension into unity of action."

All For Me

The world grows green on a thousand hills—

By a thousand willows the bees are humming,

And a million birds by a million rills,
Sing of the golden season coming;

But, gazing out on the sun-kissed lea,
And hearing a thrush and a bluebird singing,

I feel that the summer is all for me,
And all for me the joys it is bringing.

All for me the bumble-bee

Drones his song in the perfect weather;
And, just on purpose to sing to me,
Thrush and blue-bird come here together.

Just for me, in red and white,
Bloom and blossom the fields of clover;
And all for me and my delight

The wild wind follows and plays the lover.

International Sunday School Lesson for October 15

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST
Lesson: Luke 3. Golden Text: Matt. 3:2.

Setting

According to Luke it was the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, or about 26 A. D., that John came preaching and baptizing in the region around the Lower Jordan—the hiding place many years before of Elijah the prophet. John's appearance followed a period—how long is not known—spent among the hills of Judea in solitude, living on locusts and wild honey and garbed in a camel's skin. That this time of preparation for the delivery of his message was well spent is evidenced by the fact that the priests and the people alike recognized him as a man of God, many wondering if he were not the Christ. So disturbed was the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem that they sent a special committee to him to secure his denial that he was the Christ.

Lesson

In today's lesson we see the baby whose birth was foretold to Zacharias in the temple by the angel Gabriel, as the forerunner of the Messiah. John's message was given fearlessly and in no uncertain words—it was a call to repentance and to show the practical fruits of the new life based upon the repentance. He denounced those who flocked to be baptized as the offspring of vipers because he did not believe they were repentant, but merely sought to escape from the wrath to come, as the vipers of the field fled before the flames when fire was set to the grass.

Their boast was "We have Abraham to our father," for they believed that they would be saved because they were descendants of Abraham. But John's message was that each man must bear his own burden—"God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. . . . Every tree therefore that bringeth not good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." His preaching reached the hearts of the multitude to the extent that they asked, "What must we do?" Then came John's practical reply that they should share possessions with those who had none; they should extort from no man, nor accuse any one wrongfully. The question which was greatly concerning the people as to whether John were the Christ he settled at once: "I indeed baptize you with water; but there cometh he that is mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you in the Holy Spirit and in fire."

Leading Thoughts

1. A sure repentance must impell the whole life to a higher plane. 2. "What then must we do?" is always the question that follows a sincere turning away from the old walks of life. 3. It is the man who has been in solitude with God who has power to stir men in the practical walks of life.

A New Application of the Parable of the Good Samaritan

In the news column, attention is called to a city wide movement in the interest of church attendance. The use of the automobile to this end was featured. Below you will find a bit of publicity, written by Benjamin M. Will, president of the Elgin Ministerial Association, which appeared on the first page of an Elgin daily.

There was a certain Non-church Goer in the city of Elgin, whom the church lost, when he dropped out of the Sunday-school class in his high school days. While enjoying the benefits made possible by the

it has worn to the lakes. He surely isn't creating the morals that will capture a fellow like me. It is the life a man lives that is the best test of the sincerity of his religious belief."

The same night Lukewarm was also busy polishing his seven passenger. Now, Lukewarm was considered by most folks a pretty good church member, but there was this against him, that he lacked the push to get behind a big program for his church. His motto was, "Let George do it." In the course of the conversation that followed, Lukewarm hinted that he would go to church as usual the following day. He meant himself and his wife on the front seat, and five vacant seats behind, for he had not cultivated the habit of building up the congregation to which he belonged, and was as much responsible for the empty pews as the man who didn't go.

Non-church Goer walked toward his home thinking of a motto that had caught his attention only a few days before. "For when the One Great Scorer comes to write against your name, he writes not that you won or lost, but how you played the game." He thought to himself, "Lukewarm surely isn't playing the game fair, neither with God, himself, his pastor, or with a fellow like me. To be honest, however, I haven't any excuse for not going to church, even if I have to go uninvited and on foot, but you know the call of the church would mean much more to me if one of those church members thought enough of what he got at church to ask somebody else to enjoy it."

As he entered the house in this frame of mind, the phone rang. Putting the receiver to his ear, he heard the glad voice of a genuine Booster, "I suppose you know that it is Auto-go-to-church Sunday, tomorrow. The road to church will be the most popular auto route in Elgin. I knew you had no car, so we want you and your wife to come with us, and if you know of any shut-in that could go, let us know."

"Well, that's mighty kind of you," said Non-church Goer, "The church after all must have a lot of good folks or it couldn't do the business that it is doing."

"It's the least that we can do," said the Booster, "We've got to put this program over. The ministers have done their share. It's up to us laymen to make good. In fact, 'We automobilize for church every Sunday.'"

"If you mean it, Booster, count on us to be with you. Nobody ever talked to us like that before."

Who was the best neighbor to the fellow who didn't go to church?

The Booster, who automobilized for church Sunday.

"Go and do thou likewise."

churches of his city, he did nothing to conserve them as a tremendous asset to his community.

It happened, however, that the forward-facing churches of his city designated Sept. 17, for Auto-go-to-church Sunday and sent forth a stirring challenge, "We automobilize for church Sunday." The event attracted wide attention.

The immediate neighbors of our friend were Undependable and Lukewarm, both of them members of the church, and owners of cars. While Undependable's name was on the church records, the lure of the Sunday auto trip was stronger than his loyalty to the church. On Saturday night, preceding the seventeenth, he was busy getting his car in readiness for the usual Sunday trip. Non-church Goer ventured to speak to Undependable. "I see you are all set for the big Auto-go-to-Church Sunday." "No," answered Undependable, "they'll not miss me tomorrow. I'm going to take the family for the usual outing to the lakes."

Non-church Goer did not say very much, but he was thinking seriously. He said to himself, "It will take some strong will power behind the steering wheel to get Undependable's car out of the old rut that

You Got a Delectable Castle of Dreams

(All you white folks, 'deed, you have)

RECKON maybe you knows a flapper or two flappin' boarding-school-wards this very second, or freshies and sophs tackin' pennants on campus walls, or prim professors polishin' their spectacles—but don't you go supposin' only white girls gets these thrills? 'Deed no, honey! For all evenin' I been sittin' here by the fire browsin' over this lil five-cent yaller Baptist leaflet and I declare to goodness, reckon if I was a lil black girl I'd give my mammy no peace nor comfort till she packed me out of our log cabin door, tootin' my extry calicos in a bundle, on my way to Spelman Seminary!

I'd be powerful set on gettin' there, 'deed I would! And I 'spect I'd be plumb full of respect for all you nice Baptist ladies and gent'men up Norf who done put up such a delectable castle of dreams all on account of lil black lassies like me. 'Deed I would!

So 'twont take no 'suasion at all for me to put a few embellishments round that lil word "Spelman," so all you Baptist white folks can puff up with pride at what you done down South in Atlanta, Georgia.

Honey, that school am approached by a "curving driveway, the wide gate between the tall brick pillars gives a first impression of breadth, sunshine, dignified architecture, and an ordered neatness—" In the very words of that yaller leaflet, writ by Lyda W. Miller! A lil further on she embellish the beauty of the nice green lawns by observin' that perhaps the mockin' birds am singin' but youse too busy to notice, on account of bein' toted by a guide from buildin' to buildin' till youse most-ready to drop. F' instance, that big red brick building am plumb full of activities—recitations, honey! Recitations in mathematics, English and history. Then a grand normal department (reckon you knows what-all a normal department ought to be? Well, add ten, and that's Spelman!) For they got a splendid practice school connected up with it, and critic teachers, and all the things they ought to have. Fifty cunnin' lil black orphans attend this here practice school; and, honey, I reads as plain as day, how those nice lil orphans goes to chapel every single day. 'Deed they does.

Then there's dressmakin', and cookin', and launderin', chicken raisin', gardenin'; and I give you my word, honey, this lady saw four amb'lances rolling up on Spelman campus all within two hours. Reckon she was right surprised. Leastways she let on to be, and first thing she knew they explain to her how Spelman has a "Mac Vicar Hospital," Yes, honey, forty-two beds! Reckon youse right flabbergasted your own self. But a lady named Tapley (Miss President) embellishes that point real plain: "In a city with a population of about 200,000, our hospital is the only place where Negro patients are received except in a ward of our overcrowded city hospital." A right smart lot of cheerful black nurses make those patients well as quick as any white nurse

A Prayer for the First Night At College

HEAR US, we pray thee, our Father, as we remember the girl who, with thousands of others, has this week left home, companions, dear familiar faces, streets over which since a little child she has traveled to church, to school, to play, that she may enter her castle of dreams—college.

When on this first night of strangeness and great loneliness the rosy dream seems gray and the longing to go back, even for a moment, to all that is dear sweeps over her soul, comfort her, thou Christ, who wast young and lonely and can understand. Strengthen her will; help her even in her homesickness to remember the high purpose which has led her to college; keep her ideal unveiled before her; show her the large place of service and happiness that awaits her. Even in this moment of weakness let the knowledge that the only way by which she can comfort herself is to forget herself, send her out to seek another girl as lonely as she and whisper to her that tomorrow all will be different. Give her the courage to sit down and write a word of gratitude and cheer to the father who misses her though proud that she has gone, and the mother who wishes her back yet would not have her come.

If when the lights are out and the great hall is still she cannot keep back the tears, help her to speak to thee, to ask thy blessing upon all whom she loves. Turn her thoughts, we pray thee, to the days to come, to the friends to be, the good times in store, the great things to be lived and learned. Thou who art Creator of a universe and the heart of a girl, give her sleep and peace. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

—MARGARET SLATTERY in "A Girl's Book of Prayers," Pilgrim Press.

you ever laid eyes on, and Spelman graduate nurses—say, honey, they's gobbled up by the government, and by medical school examiners and for district nursing. Reckon the more black nurses you Baptists provides, the more folks needs them, down Souf.

Then Spelman thought out a lil embellishment all by herself, 'deed she did! "Extension work," she call it. Reckon you know all about that. Out in the country where the windowless log cabins am full of black mammies and pappies what don't know nothing, right there the Spelman rural teacher totes her "magic bag." Don't those lil ignoramuses stick to her like flies round a molasses barrel? Well, I reckon! For out of that magic bag she hoist up needles, thread, scissors, nails, screws, hinges, pieces of cloth, old Christmas cards; and the first thing you knows, honey, those lil ignoramuses am sewing aprons! And one lil boy sewed himself a night shirt, 'deed he did! Reckon he was aimin' to be a tailor, some day. The nails make chairs from old barrels; oh honey, that rural teacher learnt those black folks every blessed practical thing you ever heard tell of. And jess as if sewin', hammerin', cookin', ain't enough, she starts corn clubs, pig clubs and cannin' clubs.

Well, honey, 'spect Ise told you enough to let you see what a grand and glorious feelin' 'tis to have this castle of dreams. Reckon now you won't be picturin' only white girls spendin' their first nights away from home at school; reckon you'll cogitate considerable about those lil green black girls arriving at Spelman, so green they's scart stiff of bathrooms. My land! Water runnin' from silver pipes—all the same as in palaces! And food to be toted from the plate to your mouf wid a fork! My land, ain't it awful? What's a fellow got fingers for, anyhow? Well, you white folks, ain't you gwine to pray for them nice lil ign'runt black chillens all the same as you prays for them nice lil edicated white chillens up Norf? For God, he aint no respecter of persons, and I reckon he's gwine make a heap of use of those lil black chillens some day. So you jess pray for Spelman, honey! Pray hard! And maybe when you've prayed, youse gwine to wrastle with the clasp of your pocketbook. Maybe! I dunno! I reckon the Lord's gwine dictate to you about that, honey. All Ise got to say is—send for that five-cent yaller leaflet and see for yourself what a castle of dreams you got at Spelman. That Tapley lady who am the president wouldn't think much of a ign'runt pusson like lil me, for every blessed time that lady get a chance she say: "We do not mean to graduate a girl—not one—who is not trained for Christian service." Reckon you-all likes that right well don't you?

And jess to gib you an inklin' of anudder easy thing you can do, supposin' you reads this here Young Reserve story called "Them Barrels"! Reckon you'se gwine to mail a nice lil box tomorrow mornin', likely, to "Mather Sale House, Beaufort, South Carolina," for this here Baptist school helps support herself by barrels, 'deed she does!

way to the mouth of a faithful girl, too. The fruit would be used in the spring when the appetite began to flag, in the hot weather and the hard work of reviews, in the schoolroom and outside as well.

"Wasn't I glad I came!" exclaimed the sugar barrel.

"I too," added the other, "especially after I heard something of the results of the sale-house.

A poor woman came in for a "black preacher's coat." Her husband was busy in the field, but his wife could be spared to walk the long distance to see if the coat had come. How glad she was to find one the right size. She could pay the sale-house price, but could never have bought one at the store. Now her husband would be more like a preacher as he stood before his poor Negro people, far out in their little unfinished country church. She laughed in delight. Her "ole man" had a good heart but not much "book learning"; but oh, how that coat would help!

Another came. She had brought sweet potatoes to barter for clothing and meant to cheat on the price. The saleswoman was puzzled over this case and sent for the teacher. The poor creature was a little abashed as she was kindly asked why she wished to cheat? Finally she said:

"Why, Missis, I has a whole heap o' chillern to keer fo'."

"So have I," answered the teacher, "and we can pay you only the market price." Then followed a kindly talk and the moral of the Mather Sale House was emphasized. But the teacher said as she left the room, "You may put some extra little pieces in the parcel; we should like to help the poor woman in the care of the children."

There was a woman who desired to get her daughter ready to enter school. She was like another who said: "Heaps of us has machines but we don't know how to cut." This mother knows she can find a gown ready made and of better material than she could afford to purchase. Her bale of cotton has paid her rent and settled the grocer's bills. Now, with a happy heart, she can fit out her daughter for the boarding department of Mather if the teacher will allow the girl to work for half her board. How the sugar barrel and the flour barrel listen for that "yes!" and wish they could take the trip over again if they could help educate another girl just like this one.—SARAH E. OWEN, in Woman's Home Mission Society Leaflet.

Dear Young Reserves,

Don't you think it would be the loveliest plan for you and some of your friends to fix up a little box of things like these to send to Mather Sale House, Beaufort, South Carolina? You see, it's our school! And even little things like old buttons and new needles and pins help a lot! Do it soon, and if you do it write me a little letter to tell about it,—you will see the letter printed here in this column. Your loving friend,

Margaret T. Applegarth,

The Young Reserves

Those Barrels

THERE were two of them, a flour barrel and a sugar barrel. They were standing side by side in the attic of a sale house, a little Baptist home mission store in the Southland. They have had a history which may interest their friends. Very busy had they been from the moment they left the factory till there came a period of rest in the basement of a grocery store.

One morning a brisk little woman stepped into the room and, pointing out the two barrels, said to the grocer, "Those are just the barrels we need. I am sure we can fill two." Away the two barrels were tumbled to the church vestry, wondering with what they were to be filled. Not long were they left in doubt. On the floor lay a large pile of shoes, big ones, little ones, old and new. "Oh, yes; we always put shoes in the bottom," said an energetic woman. "We are sure of them then, and I understand they help so much." So the sugar barrel, which had always been so sweet, grimly submitted and was partly filled with a bushel or more of shoes. "Although," said the barrel, "I was pleased to carry all they trusted me with when I learned later where I was going."

Then followed clothing of all kinds and sizes—children's dresses and aprons, quantities of boy's garments, and men's and women's clothing. "Oh," said the barrel, "they pushed and crammed and then a lively little fat woman jumped in and stamped the things down. It fairly made me groan when they rolled me out of the way."

The flour barrel was then brought within the center of action. Oh, the towels for toilet and kitchen, the sheets, pillow-slips, and napkins, and even the loveliest table-cloth, somewhat worn to be sure, but so dainty—all these found their way to the flour barrel. Then came the sweetest box of candy and jars of fruit, well-wrapped in soft, old pieces of clothing that might serve so well as scrubbing cloths. The barrel gave a droll little chuckle, as it quietly said: "Those jars and candy should have gone in the sugar barrel." Some patch-work, comforters, and outside wraps followed. The fat little woman did not jump on that barrel.

After the barrels were headed, stout cards were tacked on, one on each head and one on a side. "And there were two names on each card," said the sugar barrel, "for I heard the minister's wife say: 'Be sure to put the name of our society on the card when you address it, that the teachers may know who sends the barrels.'"

"I was pleased," the barrel went on, "for I understand that is a fine thing to be well informed."

"Best of all, we did not lose our heads," said the flour barrel.

"We might," responded the sugar barrel, "if the minister had not nailed them on so well. I've heard that it takes ministers to drive nails."

When the barrels reached their destination you should have heard the "Ohs!" the "Ahs!" and the "Goody, goodies!" I have not told you all that came in those barrels: toys, handkerchiefs and ribbons for Christmas time; thread and needles made the sewing teacher smile and look to see if some good-sized thimbles accompanied them. Oh, the buttons! How they were needed! and the hooks and eyes! and the scissors! Now the teachers would not have to lend their own. That dear table cloth was taken to the linen drawers where company furnishings were kept. The box of candy—how it would sweeten the Sunday dinner! A bite of it would find its

Americanization

*CALL him a dago, a hunkie, a wop;
Treat him as someone insane and inferior;*

Turn up your nose at his house and his shop;

*Show yourself thus his decided superior.
Sneer at his gestures and laugh at his speech;*

Always applaud when your funny man guys him;

Then when you've widened and deepened the breach,

Weep that you cannot Americanize him!

*Has he a houseful of children? O, my!
What an example of gross impropriety!*

*Doesn't he know some Americans cry
Out on a menace like this to society?*

*How can we hope to enlighten his mind?
What can we do if the prudent despise him?*

Where for such families a home can we find?

How can we hope to Americanize him?

What of his background and what of his race?

What of his culture inherent or national?

*Questions like this enter into the case;
Relevant they to a matter so rational.*

*Let us get down to the rock-bottom fact—
Oft 'tis our prejudice only that tries him;*

Treat him with knowledge and justice and tact—

That is the way to Americanize him.

"TRUE PATRIOTISM: WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT DOES"

Isaiah 1:16-20

By A. G. FERGEE

True patriotism implies an attitude of unselfishness, sacrifice and service toward one's country. It is harder to manifest this spirit in times of peace than it is in times of war.

The use of fine patriotic phrases in Fourth of July orations does not always indicate that the speaker is dominated by the spirit of true patriotism. Political men may give such speeches during a campaign and appear to have the right spirit but after having sworn to do their duty in public office they may be classified among those public officials described by Isaiah thus: "Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves; every one loveth bribes, and followeth after rewards: they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them." Such men are condemned by God and right thinking men because they lack quality which may be termed true patriotism.

True patriotism concerns itself about the condition of those who have not the power to defend themselves or to provide for their physical necessities. Officers of the government are charged with the responsibility of relieving the oppressed and of seeking justice for the weak. If they are true men they will do their duty but if they are of the type described by Isaiah and with which we are familiar, they are anything but patriotic.

The politicians supported by the "wets" who are advocating the return of pre-prohibition conditions are not dominated by any ideals of true patriotism. Their unpatriotic, unchristian, heathenish attitude was expressed by one orator at the wet rally recently held at the Coliseum in Chicago. This man, a public official, after saying that there was "only 3 per cent of the population of this country who were drunkards," asked: "Why should we—the 97 per cent of the population of this country—be punished because of the weakness of the 3 per cent and be deprived of our light wines and beer?"

Compare the words of this official with the words that Isaiah has for men of this type and all other men: "Learn to do well; seek justice, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."

Christianity develops the highest type of true patriotism—of unselfish service. There is a line of the patriotic song by Miss Anna A. Goodman which reads: "He best serves his country who best serves his God."

True patriotism will move a man and woman to go to the polls on registration and election days and vote for the men and measures that will insure justice to the weak and oppressed of the community. Men and women who in times of war are willing to make the supreme sacrifice are poor patriots if in times of peace they do not vote at the primary and general elections. It takes more planning to live as a quiet hero in times of peace than to die a hero in time of war.

Tax-dodgers, jury dodgers, automobile speeders, purchasers and sellers of intoxicating beverages are not true patriots.

True patriotism leads men and women to be true to their God, to their families, to their towns or cities, to their state and to their country—and true to the constitution of the United States which is the foundation and framework of our government.

Discussion of Topic

I. If all that we have and earn and are is God's, given in trust to us, then we must administer rightly the trust given to us as his stewards. "Christ and the world are waiting to see what can be done by a generation of young Christians trained and consecrated from their youth to put first God's kingdom and his righteousness."

To dispose of a portion of God's possessions in his work must be the first task of a Christian steward. "Giving is God's remedy for selfishness and Christian stewardship is one of his approved methods of developing Godliness—likeness to God, who so loved that he gave." The Scripture says, "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).

"Freely ye have received, freely give" (Matt. 10:8).

My Money Creed

I Believe

1. My MONEY is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

2. This MONEY is not filthy lucre. It is not devil's coin. It is stored-up human power. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or New York or Colorado.

3. God is counting on this money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

4. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this, my prayers and confessions will be like saying, "Lord, Lord," and not doing the will of my Father.

5. I should set aside a definite portion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all my material possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is businesslike. Giving by impulse without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

6. THE PROPORTION to be set aside for these purposes should not be less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the tithe in Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of any former generation. Nevertheless, one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I be able.

7. I should invest this money for God as carefully as in my temporal business and keep strict account of this fund. I should study the church work that I may give wisely. I should give systematically. I should pray with my giving.

II. Obedience to this creed will lead us into the blessedness of giving. In II Corinthians 9:6-15, Paul gives a long list of the blessings that come to the liberal giver. Read the passage, and notice the following:

Verse 6. God provides enough for all our needs.

Verse 7. God's approval rests on us.

Verse 8. God gives us ability to help in many ways, and not alone in giving.

Verse 10. God bestows a great increase in right living in all the relations of life.

Verse 11. Our giving brings praise to God from others.

Verse 12. Our giving brings joy to others, and they thank God both for his goodness and our generosity.

Verse 13. Our giving proves our spirit of willing obedience to Christ.

Verse 14. Those who are helped by our gifts love us greatly for our generosity.

Verse 15. We ourselves are given a grateful heart for God's unspeakable gift to us.

Questions for Discussion

Discuss the fairness and right of the seven points in the "Money Creed."

How do you determine the proportion to give? To spend? To save?

American Education Week

Mr. A. M. Owsley, director of National Americanization Commission of the American Legion writes:

"The American Legion, The National Education Association and The United States Bureau of Education have joined together to hold the second annual American Education Week throughout the United States Dec. 3-9 inclusive.

"The unlying purpose of American Education Week is to arouse all the nation to a truer sense of our educational needs along broad constructive patriotic lines. By bringing our people to concentrate upon the training of the masses of uneducated, we shall go far toward eliminating illiteracy in our land and take a forward step in the solution of our national problems. An educated patriotic citizenship is the best investment to insure the safety and perpetuity of the republic. Nothing can save us if we are a nation of weaklings and illiterates.

"The American Legion extends to the Baptist Young Peoples' Union of America a cordial and urgent invitation to cooperate with it to make successful this great undertaking. Your acceptance will be our pleasure and authority to use your name on the official program and in national publicity."

Resolutions Against War

The Young People's Christian Union of the Universalist Church in annual session at Worcester, Mass., July 19-23, 1922, adopted strong resolutions against war as follows:

"Whereas, we the young people of the Universalist church, recognize that the late war was precipitated by the so-called Christian nations of the world, through the fact that they had not lived up to the simple truths of Christianity; and

"Whereas, we know that future wars can be averted in but one way,—in believing that Jesus Christ knew what he said when he told us that all things are possible through faith in God;

"Therefore, be it Resolved:

"That we take our stand before God and man that in the future we shall use all possible means to keep our nation from entering into war and so becoming partner with those who, in opposition to God, would keep his kingdom from the earth.

"Feeling that this stand must be taken by the young of the earth and through their education, be it further Resolved:

"That we enter into communication with the young people's organizations of every Christian communion and pray them to take the same stand."

On to Boston

July 5-8, 1923

At the recent meeting of the executive committee of the B. Y. P. U. of America held in Chicago, Sept. 15-16, plans were initiated looking forward to a great meeting in Boston. "The Attractive Christ" was chosen as the key-note for the convention. The Scripture passage will be John 20:28, "My Lord and my God." The program will center around such key-note, presenting the attractiveness of

Headquarters Message

Item 4 of the committee on resolutions, B. Y. P. U. of America Convention, reads as follows:

"Be it resolved that the members of the Baptist Young People's Union of America now urge the Baptists of the United States to support and aid in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, and that we urge the Baptists of Canada to support the efforts to bring about dominion-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the president of the United States and to the premier of Canada."

Everybody knows of the great effort on the part of the liquor interests to defeat or nullify prohibition legislation.

The topic for today "True Patriotism: What it is and Does." This is "Citizenship Day." Do a good turn for your country by giving every assistance possible for the enforcement of law and order.

Recommendation 5

"That we bring to the attention of our young people our Baptist educational institutions with the suggestion that members of senior societies interest themselves in the attendance of young men and women upon our denominational educational institutions; that every effort be made to raise the educational standards of our Baptist young people throughout the entire territory."

The Baptist Young People's Union of America is squarely behind the American Legion or any other agency that is seeking to raise the educational standards of the people. We hope, therefore, that American Education Week will be widely observed.

Christ in soul-winning or evangelism; Christ's attractive educational ideals; his stewardship principles, and his commanding appeal for service.

There will be two great conference divisions: 1. Organization and administration: (1.) The local society—junior, intermediate, and senior; (2.) city union and associational; (3.) state and provincial. 2. Educational: (1.) Missionary; (2.) stewardship; (3.) worship; (4.) life service; (5.) evangelism; (6.) social service.

Among the speakers will be the leading Baptist men and women of the United States and Canada. It is not too early to begin planning for Boston. For information regarding the convention city, write to Rev. F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass.

South Dakota B. Y. P. U.

The annual meeting of the S. D. B. Y. P. U. will be held at Dell Rapids, S. D. Oct. 7, 1922, in connection with the forty-first anniversary of the S. D. Baptist Convention, which convenes from Oct. 4-8. At this meeting there will be presented amendment to the by-laws, effecting a change in the time of the annual meeting. This change will bring the official annual Y. P. meeting during the summer months in connection with the S. D. Baptist Assembly, and will provide for a meeting to be held in connection with the annual state convention. It is felt that by placing the official annual meeting at the time of the state Assembly more young people will be able to attend, and a greater development in Young People's work made possible. Let us have a representation from every organization in the state that any change might be an indication of the wishes of the entire state rather than of a few organizations.

"The Junior Society In Action"

The above is the title of a junior society manual edited by General Secretary White. The various subjects discussed in this new book are: 1. The Juniors Themselves. 2. Habit. 3. Junior Organization. 4. Junior Program. 5. Memory Work. 6. Bible Drills and Games. 7. Handwork. 8. Music, Dramatization and Story Telling. 9. Stewardship for Juniors. 10. Social Activities for Juniors. 11. Correlation of Junior work with other Church activities for Juniors. 12. Winning the Junior to Christ. 13. Standards of work for Juniors. 14. Junior Materials.

The writer has had in mind throughout the entire preparation of this book the high-school girl, or devoted leader in the small church, with a burning desire to do some service among the boys and girls, ages nine to twelve. Technicalities have been laid aside as much as possible. Practical plans are presented with the hope that such leaders may secure at once the necessary help and at the same time be encouraged to go forward in their preparation for larger usefulness in their local churches. The price of the book is 75 cents and may be secured from The Christian Culture Press, 125 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

Miss Martha Wenske, writing from Poland, speaks of the visit of Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard: "I was very much encouraged to see so much interest in the visit of our dear American guests, Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard. It was a great day when Dr. Abernethy preached twice on Sunday here in Lodz. The church was crowded and many people, among them Catholics and Jews, who came to see the Americans, had the opportunity to hear an earnest gospel message."

Our Own Folks

An Appreciation of Dr. H. P. Fitch

By W. F. HARPER

In the sudden death of Dr. H. P. Fitch, Aug. 26, the Baptist ministry has lost one of its most distinguished and useful ministers. Dr. and Mrs. Fitch were returning from a trip to Alaska, and while stopping at Pacific Grove, Cal., the doctor was struck by a railroad train and killed instantly. Funeral services were conducted in Los Angeles, Aug. 31, by Pastor G. C. Wright of the Atherton Church, (of which Dr. and Mrs. Fitch were members) assisted by Rev. W. F. Harper, executive secretary of the Southern California Convention, and Rev. J. Harvey Deere, of Pomona. Memorial services were also held on Sunday, Sept. 3, at the Atherton Church, attended by representatives of many of the churches of Los Angeles and Southern California. The following pastors took part and each paid an earnest tribute to Dr. Fitch and his remarkable life work: Rev. C. L. Kirk, Rev. E. E. Ford, Rev. B. B. Jacques, Rev. Frank Durham, Rev. J. Harvey Deere, Rev. S. W. Gage, Rev. Geo. C. Wright and Rev. W. F. Harper.

Dr. Fitch was born in Ontario, Can., May 25, 1835. His father was a pioneer Baptist minister when Ontario was a wilderness. He entered the ministry at the age of twenty-two. He afterwards took a full college course at Woodstock, graduating in 1865. He was a college mate of Dr. Robert S. MacArthur. He lived a strenuous life as pastor and evangelist, both in Canada and the United States, serving in Nebraska, Missouri, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina and California. It was his privilege to baptize more than 3,000 converts. Many others were converted in his evangelistic meetings. Dr. Fitch was the author of "The Pathway of Fire," a short history of early Baptists; "At the Temple Gate," a plea for the right of women to preach the gospel; "Saved by his Wife," a temperance story which passed through several editions, and many pamphlets and poems. For several years, in addition to his ministerial work, Dr. Fitch was a practicing physician. He came to California in 1916, and immediately took his place among the leading ministers of the state.

At the meeting of the Southern California Convention last May, Dr. Fitch's eighty-seventh birthday was commemorated and tributes were paid him by his brother ministers. He preached the Gospel for sixty-five years.

Dr. Stephen Smith

By CORNELIUS WOELFKIN

Dr. Stephen Smith, who died several weeks ago, was one of the outstanding men in the medical profession. The fact that he was within five and a half months of being 100 years old has a tendency to lay the emphasis upon his longevity rather than upon his ability. But he is easily worthy of a place in the Hall of Fame for his distinctive services in his chosen art.

Dr. Smith was one of the pioneers in questions of public health and hygiene. He founded the New York Health Society more than fifty years ago, became its first president and made the address upon the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary last November. He was appointed commissioner of health by several governors of the state and also mayors of the city of New York. He was a commissioner under the appointment of President Cleveland to the international conference which regulated the sanitary conditions under which pilgrims could visit their sacred shrines in Oriental countries. It was that congress with its regulations which abated the spread of cholera and other contagious diseases.

Dr. Smith introduced several new forms of surgical operation which, after a number of years of testing, are still performed and known as the "Smith operation."

He has lived through the most critical century of all human history. When one remembers that he began his medical studies in the middle of the forties before Morton discovered ether, or Simpson introduced the use of chloroform; before Pasteur or Lister had done their great work which brought in the use of antiseptics, one realizes through what a revolutionary period in medicine this great surgeon established his career.

He was in the prime of life when the doctrine of evolution, long forecast by thinkers scattered through the centuries, was enunciated by Charles Darwin. Very naturally the medical profession being interested in biology became earnest students of this new science. Dr. Smith appreciated the upheaval which the new thesis made in the religious thought of his day. Toward the past he was a master, holding fast the things which had been gained; toward the future he was childlike and teachable. He never foreclosed any issue but steadily inquired what is truth. The four cardinal principles which guided one of his noble colleagues, Dr. Osler, were also characteristic of Dr. Smith. He loved no darkness, he nursed no illusions, he sophisticated no truth and he allowed no fear.

His religious faith and experience were as distinctive as his medical career. He inherited good traditions but did not allow them to become static either in mind or practice. He lived through the great day when materialism occupied the center of the stage and ventured to explain all the phenomena of things in life. But he did not drift on the uncertain seas of agnosticism and doubt. He carried on experiments of faith and verified in his own life the reality of God and the redemptive powers of divine grace. He was in the best sense of the word a modernist, but held to the faith which brought him in communion with the faithful of all ages who learn to know God. He once said to me, "my intellectual conceptions of God and Christ may differ from those of other men and my experience cannot be proof or law for others, but I must interpret Christ according to the reason, imagination, emotions and experiences which God has given me. They only can be the anchors of my faith and the ground of my hopes."

Walworth Young People

The young people of the Walworth Association held a two days rally, Sept. 2-3, at Delavan. There was a good attendance, nearly sixty being present at the banquet on Saturday evening. Besides the social activities and games there were many helpful addresses and conferences. Among the speakers and workers were Pastor Kelly, of Delavan, Alton Wichman of East Delavan. Mr. Roy Sowers, State Hi-Y director, and a number of local members who were given places of leadership. Several of the state B. Y. P. U. officers were present. Reports were given of the summer assembly and the St. Paul Convention. Another meeting is planned for some future date at Honey Creek.

Some Notes

The Waukesha Church is erecting a parsonage at a cost of $12,500 and spending $1,000 in renovating the organ. The parsonage will have a garage in connection with it, besides having nine living rooms.

The Grace Baptist Church, Milwaukee, had its annual meeting Sept. 27. Pastor Phelps has been on the field for five years and has had a splendid work. This church is in a choice residence district and is composed of many fine people. "A good year in every way" is the report of the pastor.

Rev. F. F. Parsons has accepted the pastorate of the church at Barron. This is a great country and village field and presents many opportunities. Mr. Parsons spent ten years at West Allis, and seven years at Sheboygan Falls. We hope his pastorate at Barron will be as lengthy and as productive of results.

The church at Darien has called Rev. J. H. Bruggink to the pastorate. He expects to take up the work soon.

Rev. R. H. Crawford has accepted the work at Merton and Pewaukee.

Rally Days

These are the days when our churches are preparing for the rallying of the forces. There are too many to make mention of them in the news items, but Milwaukee Baptists are planning a simultaneous rally week beginning Oct. 1, and ending in a big mass meeting on Oct. 6. Superintendent Hulbert, of the Baptist Union, is planning for an attendance of 1,000.

New Jersey Leader Goes to Massachusetts

Rev. J. Earle Edwards, superintendent of promotion of the New Jersey Convention, has accepted the call of the Winthrop Street Church, of Taunton, Mass., to take effect November 1. For some time past the Taunton Church has been urging Superintendent Edwards to consider the field afforded by this historic church of more than 800 members. When in July Mr. Edwards visited the church as a supply he acknowledged that "the longing to be with folk and help them as pastor" came back strongly and finally conquered. The church is enthusiastic for its new leader and so wired him Thursday night, Sept. 14, when it was learned that the acceptance was on its way to the church.

The executive committee of the New Jersey Convention did not take kindly to the idea that the superintendent of promotion sever his connection with the convention. After his resignation was presented it was decided to lay the matter on the table and to interview Mr. Edwards looking to his reconsideration.

Since Dr. Holloway's death, the pastor elect has edited the monthly state paper and has merited commendation for the newness and helpfulness of this sheet.

The Massachusetts church is one of the strongest Baptist churches in New England. The new pastor comes of a line of Baptist ministers of whom Dr. Charles C. Earle of Boston is one. J "Earle" is the thirteenth in the family line. He will have opportunity at Taunton to use his various gifts which made the former pastorates at Greenville and Connelville, Pa., so successful, along lines of personal work, religious education and community helpfulness.

Mr. Edwards is a graduate of Delaware University, B. S., Bucknell University, M. A., and Crozer Theological Seminary, B. D. He spent two years in postgraduate work at the University of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Edwards is a graduate of the Baptist Institute of Christian Workers of Philadelphia. There are three children: J. Earle, Jr., Eleanor Florence and A. Judson.

Resolution

The General Convention of the Baptist Churches of Sweden

To the Board of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

Dear and honored brethren:

There was a man sent by God among us whose name was Knut Oscar Broady. His noble Christian character, his consistent walk in the paths of righteousness and peace and love, his faith, his prayers, his zeal for the Lord, his marked talents as a teacher and a preacher, his bright mind, his generous heart and his amiable conversation were known by all. He was the president of the Bethel Seminary in 1866, and for sixteen years more he continued the work of his choice as a teacher. Through his preaching in the power and manifestation of the Holy Spirit he won hundreds of souls for Christ, and offered inspiring edification to the throngs of believers who always listened to him with eager attention. He was truly one of those men to whom Daniel, the prophet, refers when he says, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

Now the Lord has taken away his faithful servant from our midst at the ripe age of ninety years and we miss him greatly. The good faithful work he achieved, the devoted Christian life he lived, and the benignant personal influence he exercised we shall always remember with deepfelt gratitude, and his honored memory will abide forever.

Dr. Broady came to Sweden in 1866, as a missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union—now the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society—and retained this relation to the society till the day of his death. Therefore we cannot think of him and his long service among us without remembering with grateful acknowledgment the noble mission society which sent him and continued to support him all the time. But not only has your society paid Dr. Broady's salary; it has also generously given additional support to our seminary and Baptist work in general in our land. Thus substantial aid has helped to further and stabilize the work very much. It is but natural, therefore, that on this occasion we should feel prompted to give expression to our deepfelt appreciation of the help given and the interest in our mission manifested by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. Please accept our thanks and let us assure you, honored brethren, that we feel linked with you and your great society through bonds of Christian fellowship, love and gratitude.

Adopted unanimously by a rising vote of the convention in session on the tenth day of June in the year nineteen hundred and twenty-two.

On behalf of the convention.

(Signed) J. Bystrom, Pres., C. E. Benander, first vice-pres., Ohnalf Wedberg, second vice-pres.

Vermont Conference and School of Methods

The Vermont annual conference and school of methods was held again this year at Saxton's Rivers, the hundred and more pastors, pastors' wives and state workers being entertained with unstinted hospitality by the state convention in the Vermont Academy buildings.

Five sessions were held during the conference (Sept. 6-8) and the devotional services with which each opened were marked by spiritual uplift and inspiration. Reverends Peck, Ford, Greengrass, Brownell and Towart leading in the order named. Prof. John M. English of the Newton Theological Institution gave remarkable interpretations of three conversations of Jesus: "Jesus and the First Disciples," "Jesus and Nicodemus" and "Jesus and the Woman at Jacob's Well." His interpretations were rich in insight into the personality of Jesus, deep in the exposition of truth, subtle in appreciation of the delicacy of each situation, and splendid in the delineation of psychological action involved.

Dr. Selden L. Roberts, of Philadelphia, outlined the aims and advantages of the New Baptist program for "bigger and better Bible schools." This was followed by a helpful conference on ways and means of achieving the ends in view, with special emphasis upon the adapting of the plan to meet the needs of the local school. In the evening Dr. Roberts addressed the conference on, "Winning the Youth to Christ," stressing the points that "unless you win you lose."

Dr. Peter C. Wright brought a message timely and strong. His grasp of the world situation, knowledge of what has already been accomplished and his vision of what may yet be achieved, was heartening to every listener.

An impassioned address was given by Rev. A. C. Berrie, the new pastor at St. Albans. Coming from a field where he has increased the membership more than fourfold, he is continuing his record in his Vermont field. Speaking largely from his own experience he showed the necessity of accepting Christ's methods as suggested by the terms "go" "seek" "fish" and "compel" as against the method of today which sets up a place of worship and then invites people to come.

Interesting and timely was the report brought by Rev. G. W. Peck, Jr., of the Rutland church, of his work in the pastor's class for youthful seekers in the way of life. For ten consecutive weeks these classes were held and the young people were instructed in the primary truths of God, Christ, Christ's relations to mankind, and the church and its duties and place in the kingdom. This method had brought rich results in baptisms.

Dr. Hugh Heath, of Massachusetts, addressed the conference twice. Speaking on the subject "The Pastor as Leader" he said that the pastor might have just the kind of a church he desired if he would stay on the job and work and employ the right methods. Among things needful to fill the place of leadership were evangelism, the proclamation and teaching of stewardship of life, time, money and prayer; getting behind and leading in movements for civic and social righteousness; enthusiasm for kingdom extension; while the supreme need, he affirmed, was the rededication of the individual in prayer.

At the close of the conference the following recommendations were adopted:

- That definite forward programs be adopted by each church and school.
- That every school as far as possible adopt the suggestions given in the leaflet entitled "church school objectives."
- That every pastor preach, teach and practice Stewardship.
- That some definite mission study be taken up in each school and church and that members be urged to subscribe to Missions.
- That special stress be laid upon evangelism.
- That the pastors endorse the promotional program as outlined by Northern Baptist Convention.

MAINE

THE SUDDEN DEATH of Rev. J. H. Trites, pastor of the church at Caribou, brings sadness and a sense of loss to the entire state. He held successful pastorates at Parkman, where he was ordained, at Norridgewock, at Washburn, and at Caribou. He had gone to Moncton, N. B., to spend a part of his vacation with his mother and family, when he was suddenly stricken and died in the hospital, Sept. 3. He leaves a widow, one daughter, mother and several brothers and sisters. Dr. Mower, executive secretary of the Baptist convention, who had known his work from the beginning, went to Moncton to conduct the funeral services. At the same hour memorial services were held in his church at Caribou, in which all the pastors of the North Arrostook Association participated. Mr. Trites, though dying in comparative youth, has done a great work.

THOUGH MRS. JOHN F. HILTON died in Massachusetts, she belonged to Maine. A descendent of Rev. William Allen, first pastor of the church in Jefferson, she was for many years a leading member of the church in Damriscoota. Becoming matron of the girls' cottage at Good Will Farm, she did a remarkable work for the girls who were under her care. After the death of her daughter she found tender care in the home of Mrs. J. C. Champney, of Holliston, Mass., where she died. With remarkable devotion she loved her Lord, and to her utmost ability sustained his work. Her only sister is Mrs. M. J. Kelly of Delavan, Wis., widow of Chaplin M. J. Kelly of the U. S. Army, and mother of Rev. Robert Lincoln Kelly, pastor at Delavan.

THE MILLINOCKET CHURCH has grown 59 per cent in resident membership in the last twelve months. This is the result of the Holy Spirit using the local church resources without any outside worker. The population is 40 per cent Roman Catholic, and even five of these were baptized without proselyting, but drawn by our worship. The popular appeal of the church was appreciated by the Great Northern Paper Co. who gave the price of the new foundation work, amounting to over $2,095. The practically new structure is nearing completion. Rev. R. W. Cooper is pastor.

Quarterly Meetings

THE PENOBSCOT ASSOCIATION held a successful quarterly meeting at Howland, Sept. 12. Pastor Farrar and his good people gave hearty welcome and bountiful entertainment. The attendance and the spirit of the meeting were of the best. Among those who had part were Revs. McKillop, Bagley, Schurman, Trafton, Terrill, and Drs. Ramsdell and Whittemore. A feature of the afternoon program was a richly spiritual and earnest missionary prayer meeting. This seemed to be the only fitting thing after an address on "The World Needs." Rev. Roy M. Trafton of the Essex St. Church, Bangor, was the moderator.
